Except as above stated, the claim was never presented to any officer or department of the Government prior to its presentation to Congress and reference to this court, as set forth in the statement of the case, and no evidence is adduced to show why said claimants did not earlier prosecute the claim.

CONCLUSION.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact the court concludes that the claim herein is not a legal one against the United States, and is equitable only in the sense that the United States received the benefit of the services of said decedent in excess of eight hours a day, as above set forth.

Washington, May 31, 1912.

SIR: Pursuant to the order of the court, I transmit herewith a certified copy of the findings of fact filed by the court in the aforesaid cause, which case was referred to this court by the Committee on War Claims, House of Representatives, under the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman Act.

I am, very respectfully, yours, JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

[Court of Claims of the United States. Congressional, No. 15589. William L. Marshall v. The United States.]

STATEMENT OF CASE.

The claim in the above-entitled case for longevity pay alleged to be due on account of the services of claimant in the United States Army was transmitted to the court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on the 21st day of December, 1911, under the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman Act.

The case was brought to a hearing on its merits on the 8th day of May, 1912.

Richard R. McMahon, Esq., appeared for the claimant, and the Attorney General, by George M. Anderson, Esq., his assistant and under his direction, appeared for the defense and protection of the interests of the United States.

The claimant in his petition makes the following allegations:

That he is a citizen of the United States, residing in the city of Washington, District of Columbia.

That he served as an enlisted man in Company A, Tenth Kentucky Cavalry, from August 16, 1862, to September 17, 1863; that he entered the United States Military Academy as a cadet July 1, 1864.

That he was appointed brevet second lieutenant of Engineers June 15, 1868; was promoted to be second lieutenant February 22, 1869; first lieutenant June 21, 1871; captain June 18, 1882; major May 10, 1895; lieutenant colonel April 23, 1904; colonel August 27, 1907; brigadier general, Chief of Engineers, July 2, 1908; accepted July 6, 1908; and was retired June 11, 1910.

That during the period of the petitioner's service as a commissioned officer in the Army of the United States the following statutory provisions respecting longevity pay were in force:

"That every commissioned officer of the line or staff, exclusive of general officers, shall be entitled to receive one additional ration per diem for every five years he may have served or shall serve in the Army of the United States." (Act of July 5, 1838, sec. 15; 5 Stat. L., p. 258.)

"There shall be allowed and paid to each commissioned officer below the rank of brigadier general, including chaplains and others having assimilated rank or pay, 10 per cent of their current yearly pay for each term of five years' service." (Act of July 15, 1870, now sec. 1262, R. S.)

"* * * the actual time of service in the Army and Navy, or both, shall be allowed all officers in computing their pay." (Act of Feb. 24, 1881; 21 Stat. L., p. 346.)

That under a decision of the Second Comptroller of the Treasury, made July 24, 1838, the accounting officers of the Treasury, in the settlement of the petitioner's accounts, did not count his service at the Military Academy in computing his longevity pay and allowances for service prior to February 24, 1881.

That upon the construction of the act of July 5, 1838, by the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of United States v. Watson (130 U. S., 80), the petitioner made application to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury for a settlement of his longevity pay and allowances in accordance with said decision, and, under the then prevailing ruling that service as a cadet could not be counted in computing longevity pay and allowances for service prior to February 24, 1881, petitioner's application was rejected December 13, 1890.

That upon the revocation of that ruling by the Comptroller of the Treasury on May 18, 1908, the petitioner again made application to the accounting officers of the Treasury for settlement of the longevity pay and allowances due him for service prior to February 24, 1881, but the Auditor for the War Department, October 21, 1909, refused to consider the petitioner's claim because it had been previously disallowed by the settlement of 1890.

That by this action of the accounting officers, in refusing to allow petitioner credit for his service at the Military Academy prior to February 24, 1881, there has been withheld from the petitioner the sum of $1,795.49, the amount he would have received had he been dealt with according to law.

That this claim had not been paid, assigned, or transferred, in whole or in part, and that petitioner has all his life been loyal to the Government of the United States.

The court, upon the evidence, and after considering the briefs and arguments of counsel on both sides, makes the following

FINDINGS OF FACT.

I. The claimant herein, William L. Marshall, is a citizen of the United States, residing in the District of Columbia. He served as a private in the Tenth Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry from August 16, 1862, to September 17, 1863. He entered the United States Military Academy as a cadet July 1, 1864, and graduated therefrom and was appointed brevet second lieutenant of Engineers June 15, 1868. He was promoted to be second lieutenant February 22, 1869; first lieutenant June 21, 1871; captain June 15, 1882; major May 10, 1895; lieutenant colonel April 23, 1904; colonel August 27, 1907; brigadier general, Chief of Engineers, July 6, 1908; and was retired June 11, 1910.

He was paid his first longevity increase from June 15, 1873; second from June 15, 1878; third from May 14, 1882; and fourth longevity increase from November 1, 1884; and by settlements the accounting officers of the Treasury have allowed claimant longevity increase under the decisions of the Supreme Court in the cases of Tyler (105 U. S., 244) and Morton (112 U. S., 1), but said officers disallowed his claim for longevity increase under the Watson decision.

II. Under the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of United States v. Watson (130 U. S., 80) said claimant would be entitled to additional allowance, as reported by the Auditor for the War Department, amounting to $1,786.27.

STATEMENT OF CASE.

This case was referred to the court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on the 15th day of August, 1911, under the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman Act.

The case was brought to a hearing on its merits on the 8th day of May, 1912.

Richard R. McMahon, Esq., appeared for the claimant, and the Attorney General, by George M. Anderson, Esq., his assistant and under his direction, appeared for the defense and protection of the interests of the United States.

The claimant in his petition makes the following allegations:

That he is a citizen of the United States, residing in the city of Atlanta, in the State of Georgia.

That he served in the United States Army as an enlisted man from September 20, 1856, to September 20, 1861; was appointed first lieutenant and regimental quartermaster Tenth Tennessee Infantry July 14, 1862; lieutenant colonel August 21, 1863; colonel June 6, 1864, and was honorably mustered out of the volunteer service May 25, 1865; was appointed captain and assistant quartermaster in the Regular Army September 27, 1865, and accepted October 2, 1865; was appointed major and quartermaster January 25, 1883; lieutenant colonel and deputy quartermaster general September 12, 1894; colonel and assistant quartermaster general February 4, 1898; was retired November 1, 1900, after having been in the service more than 42 years, at his own request, and was given the rank of brigadier general, retired, April 23, 1904.

That during the period of petitioner's service as a commissioned officer in the Army of the United States the following statutory provisions respecting longevity pay were in force:

"That every commissioned officers of the line or staff, exclusive of general officers, shall be entitled to receive one adidtional ration per diem for every five years he may have served or shall serve in the Army of the United States." (Act of July 5, 1838, sec. 15; 5 Stat. L., p. 258.)

"There shall be allowed and paid to each commissioned officer below the rank of brigadier general, including chaplains and others having assimilated rank or pay, 10 per cent of their current yearly pay for each term of five years' service." (Act of July 15, 1870, now sec. 1262, R. S.)

"That on and after the passage of this act all officers of the Army of the United States who have served as officers in the volunteer forces during the War of the Rebellion, or as enlisted men in the armies of the United States, Regular or Volunteer, shall be and are hereby credited with the full time they may have served as such officers and as such enlisted men in computing their service for longevity pay and retirement." (Act of June 18, 1878, sec. 7; 20 Stat. L., p. 150.)

That in the settlement of petitioner's accounts the accounting officers of the Treasury did not count his service as an enlisted man from September 20, 1856, to September 20, 1861, in computing his longevity pay and allowances for services prior to June 18, 1878.

That under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of United States v. Tyler (105 U. S., 244), petitioner was allowed the percentage increase upon his current pay, without counting petitioner's service as an enlisted man.

That upon the petitioner's application for the allowance of arrearages of longevity pay due him, the accounting officers, December 6, 1909, refused to consider his claim on the ground that the settlement under the Tyler decision was an adjudication of all his rights to longevity pay, under the ruling then in force that service as an enlisted man could not be counted in computing longevity pay prior to June 18, 1878.

That by this action of the accounting officers there has been withheld from the petitioner the sum of $2,500, which is lawfully due.

That he petitioner was always loyal to the Government of the United States.

The court, upon the evidence, and after considering the briefs and arguments of counsel on both sides, makes the following

FINDINGS OF FACT.

I. The claimant herein is an officer of the United States Army, having served as an enlisted man from September 20, 1856, to September 20, 1861. He was mustered in as a first lieutenant, Tenth Tennessee Infantry, July 14, 1862; promoted to be lieutenant colonel August 21, 1863; colonel June 6, 1864; and was mustered out June 6, 1865. He was appointed captain and assistant quartermaster of Volunteers September 25, 1865; accepted October 2, 1865, and the position was vacated on same date. He was appointed captain and acting quartermaster, United States Army, September 27, 1865; accepted his commission October 2, 1865; was appointed major, quartermaster, January 25, 1883; lieutenant colonel, Deputy Quartermaster General, September 12, 1894; colonel and Acting Quartermaster General, February 4, 1898; and was retired November 1, 1900.

II. Claimant was paid his first longevity ration from November 9, 1867, and 10 per cent increase for each five years subsequent thereto. By settlement with the accounting officers he was allowed longevity increase under the Tyler decision (105 U. S., 244), and his claim for longevity increase on account of service as an enlisted man was disallowed December 9, 1909.

III. Under the decision of this court in the case of James Stewart v. The United States, No. 20810, decided February 23, 1899, from which no appeal was taken, service as an enlisted man should be counted in computing longevity pay and allowances, and the difference between the amounts actually paid to claimant on account of longevity pay and the amount to which he would be entitled under said decision, as reported by the Auditor for the War Department, is $2,341.12.

JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The committee has nothing further to offer.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CATRON. I wish to ask the Senate to consider three amendments separately. They are on page 66, under the head of "New Mexico."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those amendments will then be reserved for separate consideration. The question now is, Will the Senate concur in the other amendments made as in Committee of the Whole? Without objection, the other amendments will be concurred in. The bill is still in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. CATRON. Mr. President, I object to the amendments of the committee striking out the provisions of the bill found under the head of "New Mexico," on page 66. There are three of them. I will take them up in the order in which they appear. I do not know whether we can vote on them separately.

Mr. CRAWFORD. We might as well act on them all together.

Mr. CATRON. Mr. President, the first amendment to which I desire to refer is the claim of Anastacio de Baca for pay for a number of sheep, which were stolen from Francisco de Baca in the year 1862 by the Navajo Indians. Immediately after those sheep were stolen by the Navajo Indians Baca reported the occurrence to the then governor of New Mexico, Gov. Connelly. Gov. Connelly immediately sent word to the commanding officer at Fort Craig, on the Rio Grande. As this Indian depredation took place on the east side of the Canadian River and the Navajo Indians lived on the west side, supposing, naturally, that they would carry the sheep back, he sent word to Fort Craig, which is on the Rio Grande, and asked the commanding officer to look out for them. He did so, and his command captured or took away from the Indians 1,500 of these sheep, 2 donkeys or burros, and 1 mule. The commanding officer, after taking them away from the Indians, turned over 500 of these sheep to some Mexicans who were with them, not connected at all with the owner, and let them take the sheep away for their own use. The other thousand sheep were turned over to the commissary at Fort Craig. They were taken up by him on his property returns, and they were killed and issued to the soldiers as a part of their rations. The governor of New Mexico, at the request of Mr. Baca, asked Gen. Carleton, who was then commanding in New Mexico, to have the sheep returned to their owner, but nothing was ever done about it. Afterwards, in the year 1871, the Delegate in Congress from New Mexico, Col. Chaves, called the attention of the Commissary General to the fact that these sheep had been taken and applied to the Government's own use, and asked that the sheep be accounted for and paid for, but the Commissary Department did nothing in reference to it.

The matter remained in this condition under consideration from 1871 to 1876, when the Commissary General, who took the report from the Army officer who had taken the sheep and used them, concluded that the proofs did not satisfy him that the sheep were the property of the claimant, nor that the claimant was thoroughly loyal to the Government of the United States during the Civil War. The claimant, when asked to prove that they were his sheep, presented his certified brand or certified mark, and it was identified. So there was no trouble about that. Subsequently he established his ownership of the sheep and also established his loyalty.

The matter thus remained until 1886, when the papers were transmitted to the Third Auditor of the Treasury, "not recommended for settlement." On June 17, 1886, the accounting officer of the Treasury refused to take jurisdiction over the matter. In February, 1900, the case was referred to the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act for findings of fact. The Court of Claims found that the sheep had been taken and used by the Government and that the claimant was loyal. They found first that the value of the sheep was $325, but, as that was evidently a mistake, on reconsideration they found the value of the property taken to be $1,325.

This claim is, without doubt, as valid a claim as any that can be made. It has been rejected by the committee on the ground that the party slept on his rights for 38 years. The Government had notice of the claim right from the start, and it was kept before the Government. This man had no opportunity to present his claim before any tribunal until the passage of the Bowman Act. When the Bowman Act passed the claim was referred to the Court of Claims, proof was taken, the findings were in his favor, and the value of the property used was ascertained to be $1,325. I ask that the amendment striking out that claim be not concurred in.

The next claim is that of Col. Edward H. Bergmann, who claims $1,200 on account of money he expended in getting clothing for a company of troops of which he was captain during the Civil War.

It appears from the testimony and the facts in the case that Col. Bergmann was a Prussian by birth, and that when Gen. McClellan and several other officers went over to Europe to observe and inspect the armies of Europe to ascertain how they were managed and handled, for the purpose of improving the condition of our own Army, they came in contact with Bergmann and invited him to come over to the United States, promising that he might get a commission in the United States Army. Bergmann came over, but instead of getting a commission he enlisted in the Regular Army of the United States. When the Civil War broke out Bergmann was in New Mexico. There he raised a company of Volunteers, of which he was made captain, the company forming a part of Kit Carson's regiment. This was in 1862. His company had no clothing; there was at that time no clothing in New Mexico that could be issued to them, and they were in a ragged and destitute condition. In this situation Col. Bergmann, having some money of his own, expended $1,200 to buy clothing for these men. It was bought by him, given to the soldiers, and used in the service of the United States to clothe its troops. Being a very loyal and very patriotic man and getting his salary, and being a foreigner and not understanding our laws, he did not think of putting in his claim for the amount until sometime after the war closed. Then he had become impecunious. His attention was called to the fact that he had advanced this money, and he then put in his claim for the amount of $1,200, which he had previously paid for this clothing, of which, as I have said, the United States got the benefit for its soldiers.

The claim was not allowed. Afterwards, under the Bowman Act, it was referred to the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims found the facts to be as I have stated them—that he had paid the money and that it had never been paid back to him. Col. Bergmann had no earlier opportunity to put in his claim before any tribunal, although if he had thought about it he might have presented it to some accounting officer; but he took no action until 1890, when the claim was referred to the Court of Claims.

When his case was referred to the Court of Claims he immediately applied to the Assistant Attorney General to designate an attorney to take the proof in his case. The Assistant Attorney General intimated that the attorney whom they wanted was busy and they could not get him, but he would try to get a special attorney. A partial arrangement was then made to get a Mr. M. W. Mills, of Springer, N. Mex. Mr. Mills agreed to accept the appointment, but they never referred the case to him. The matter continued along until 1902, when the Government made arrangements to take the testimony and designated an attorney to appear. On a presentation of the case, the court found, as I have stated, that Col. Bergmann advanced this money; that the soldiers used the clothing; that the Government got the benefit of it in the actual service of the Government during the war; and that money had never been refunded.

The next claim—there are three of them, as I have stated—is that of Mary W. Littell, widow of William J. Littell. This is a claim in which the Senator from Kentucky might be interested. It seems that a regiment was organized in Kentucky during the Civil War, but the company did not reach a sufficient number of men to entitle it to the necessary lieutenants, and they had no lieutenant. Littell was first sergeant of the company. The governor of Kentucky, however, commissioned him as a lieutenant. I do not know what the law was at that time as to the appointment of lieutenants, as I was not on that side of the question; but Littell continued with the company until it was discharged and performed in every respect all the duties of a second lieutenant, although he only drew pay as first sergeant of the company and also drew rations. The Court of Claims has found these facts, and stated that if Littell could be considered a lieutenant, as he had been commissioned by the governor of Kentucky, the amount of his claim was $632.18, after deducting what he received as first sergeant and the value of his rations. I do not know so much about this claim as I do of the previous ones, but the Court of Claims found that Littell did this service; that he performed the duties of a first lieutenant, but only drew the pay of a sergeant and the rations of a sergeant; and that his pay would amount to $632.18 if he was considered as a lieutenant.

I ask that the amendments of the committee striking out these items of the bill be not concurred in.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, the statement made by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] is very similar to the statements which are presented in most of these cases; that is, it comes from some attorney. I would not say specifically that it is true in the case which the Senator presents, but a similarity in the reasons given leads me to believe that some attorney, representing the claimants, has furnished this kind of information to the Senator. I have not the slightest doubt of the Senator's good faith in regard to the matter. The Bowman Act, under which the Senator seems to think he is justified in saying that laches can be waived, was passed in 1883. That is 20 years ago. The Tucker Act, which required the court to find what excuse the claimant had, if any, for his long delay, was passed in 1887, 25 years ago; and no excuse whatever is found by the Court of Claims in its report to explain the long delay in either of these cases.

That is not all. In the de Baca case claim is made on account of the loss of sheep in 1862. At a time when the claimant must have had in his possession fresh proof of the facts, and when witnesses must have been alive by whom he could establish his loyalty, he undertook to establish his claim, but the Government found against him on both propositions, finding that he did not prove the fact as to his loss and that he was unable to satisfy them as to his loyalty. While the Bowman Act was passed in 1883 and the Tucker Act in 1887, he did not ask to go to the Court of Claims until the year 1900, and in 1905 he secured in some way from it a finding of his loyalty. If that does not show a doubtful situation, under which it would be rather reckless for us to pay stale claims, it would be impossible to present one here.

The case of Bergmann, so far as concern laches and delays, is exactly in the same class. If we were to allow these claims to come in here now, it would open the door so that practically all of the items rejected by the Committee on Claims would be placed in the bill.

The third item is one of difference-in-pay claims, where an officer in the Army during the war was serving in a certain rank—he may have been captain, or he may have been major, or he may have been colonel—but his State gave him a rank higher than that held under the Federal Government. There may have been a vacancy ahead of him, into which he stepped and performed the service in a rank higher than that for which he held a commission from the Federal Government; but if his command was under the minimum, a law was passed—I have all the laws here—which allowed officers serving in a higher rank than that to which they were commissioned by the Federal Government under those circumstances to receive the pay of the higher rank, providing their command was not below the minimum.

In the last Congress a statute was passed absolutely barring all these claims, and it is sought, by putting them in the omnibus claims bill, to repeal that statute which fixed an absolute bar against these claims.

Mr. CATRON. I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks a statute passed a year ago, or at the last Congress, would apply to a claim which had originated a year before that statute was passed?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not; but these claims never had any foundation under the laws of the United States; absolutely none. The act of February 24, 1897, contained a proviso that—

That this act shall be construed to apply only to those cases where the commission bears date prior to June 20, 1863, or after that date when the commands of the persons appointed or commissioned were not below the minimum number required by then existing laws and regulations.

In every one of these cases the court finds that the commission was dated after June 20, 1863, and the command was below the minimum. There are about a hundred-odd of these claims, and the committee did not propose to go against that statute passed at the time and the statutes passed since that time, one of them in 1897, which put up a bar to these claims.

I ask that the claim be rejected.

Mr CATRON. Just one word. The fact that this might open all the other claims is no argument at all. I know nothing about what the other claims are, but if they are as meritorious as these, I think they ought to be paid and ought to be included. If they are not, then each one stands upon its own footing. It seems to me this record shows a sufficient vigilance on the part of these first two claimants, and I ask that the first two claims be voted on separately from the others, because they are different—the Anastacio Baca and the Bergmann claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, proposing to strike out two New Mexico items, on page 66, lines 5 to 9.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is now upon concurring in the amendment to strike out lines 10, 11, and 12, on the same page.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the remaining amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. BRADLEY. I rise to make an inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky will state it.

Mr. BRADLEY. On the 7th of December, in my absence from this body, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SANDERS] was kind enough to offer an amendment to this bill. I should like to inquire what disposition has been made of that amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Can the Senator state upon what page of the bill the amendment appears?

Mr. CRAWFORD. What was it?

Mr. BRADLEY. It was:

To the wardens of Christ Protestant Episcopal Church, Bowling Green, $300.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That was rejected.

Mr. BRADLEY. I simply wanted to know what became of it. I suspected that it had been rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. BRADLEY. I did; but I understand it was rejected by the committee, and I do not deem it worth while to offer the amendment now.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill read the third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, just a word or two before the bill is finally disposed of. I desire to call attention to some of the items rejected by the committee that the Senate may form some idea about the character of a considerable number of claims that were in this bill when it came to the Senate.

Here is a sample. I call attention to paragraph 560. I do this because we may have something to do about this bill in some form after it has gone to conference. Here is an item in this bill for a chuck-a-luck gambler, a man following the rear of the Union Army in the South—a professional gambler. He comes in here in 1906 with a claim for some money lost in chuck-a-luck, and which he claims was not all gambling funds, but that part of it was money that was not won from him in chuck-a-luck but was taken from him by the commanding officer. He comes in and asks for an appropriation out of the Treasury to give him back his money. An inquiry was had in 1865 under the order of Gen. Hazen, and the claimant was required to present proofs that the money taken from him was not the fruits of gambling. The court, after considering the evidence, recommended that $376 be refunded and that the remaining $454 be forfeited, as coming within the instructions of Gen. Hazen for the confiscation of the proceeds of chuck-a-luck. The forfeited sum of $454 was disbursed by the commander of the division and not returned to the Treasury Department. None of the $860 has ever been returned to claimant. Claimant allowed his claim to sleep until 1891, for a period of 27 years, when he presented a claim to the Auditor for the War Department, and it was rejected. Then he came in here 42 years afterwards, without having peeped all that time during the interim, and asks the Congress of the United States to engage itself in the business of giving him back that fund. None of it ever went into the Treasury of the United States. That is one item in here.

I will call the attention of the Senate to one or two others. Here is paragraph 599. Five hundred and ninety-nine is an item that has long since been paid and satisfied. Ten thousand five hundred and twenty dollars was claimed. The money was appropriated in an appropriation act approved March 3, 1877, Nineteenth Statutes of the United States, page 538. The money was paid and the claim released and receipted for, and yet here is inserted a claim in the omnibus claims bill, as it comes over to the Senate, with that $10,000 item in it to be paid over again.

Here is another one—paragraph 737 in this bill. Seven hundred and thirty-seven is the claim of Henry E. Hilliard. It was absolutely paid and satisfied by an appropriation found in Thirty-third Statutes, part 1, page 768.

Here is an old claim, originating way back during the war, in which the claimant has slept on his rights for over a generation, and then comes here and asks money for hay which he claims he delivered to a commissary, and he wants pay at the rate of $55 a ton.

How such things get through I do not understand.

Here is a hotel company down in Memphis called the Overton Hotel Co. The claim is that the property was occupied by soldiers during the war. We all know what were the conditions in Memphis. You could not rent buildings for any considerable amount under the conditions that existed there. Several years ago that company got a bill through here appropriating, as I understand, some $53,000, took the money and released the claim. And yet they get inserted in the bill an item calling for the appropriation of $12,000 or $15,000, or more, because an attorney claims that some sort of technical error was committed in making the computation.

On the matter of proof of loyalty—and I will stop with this case—I want to call the attention of the Senate to one claim, paragraph 800, which is typical of many of the claims we have stricken from this bill. In this particular case property was taken from the administrator, N. C. Perkins, during the War of the Rebellion, in Shelby County, in the State of Tennessee, by the military forces of the United States for the use of the Army—stores and supplies worth the sum of $5,684. It does not appear from the statement of facts whether the property was taken by any authority of the Government at all. The plantation from which the stores were taken, it was claimed, belonged to J. J. Todd at the commencement of the war, but he died in 1861, leaving by will his property to his daughter, Mrs. Newton C. Perkins. She is the wife of the administrator, N. C. Perkins, who makes this claim, and he was a captain in the Confederate Army. Understand that under the statute these claims can not be allowed unless loyalty is proven. Her husband, who appears here as administrator, was a captain in the Confederate Army. He was appointed administrator of the estate of his wife's father in 1862, and then he resigned his commission and came home to take charge of that estate—right out of the Confederate Army. I dare say Mrs. Perkins is a good woman; I would not say a word disrespectful about her, but this is what the court finds as to her loyalty:

> Mrs. Perkins desired her husband to keep out of the Confederate service; she did not desire to take up arms; she did not wish him to join either army; after the war actually began she did not desire the subjugation of the South, and she did not wish for the defeat of the Confederacy to secure the perpetuity of the Union.

Now, with that sort of a straddle on the question of loyalty, and with the administrator himself having been an officer in the Confederate Army, thereafter, in 1900, a finding is made upon which an appropriation claim of that character is made.

Having thus characterized in a general way the items stricken out of the bill, I ask for the action of the Senate upon the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

Mr. NEWLANDS subsequently said: The omnibus claims bill was passed this morning during my absence from the Senate. I had pending before the Senate an important amendment involving the claims for extra pay of mechanics and laborers on public buildings, and it was my expectation to bring that matter before the Senate for its consideration. I have seen the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD], who had charge of the bill, and he informs me that he will have no objection to a motion for a reconsideration of the bill in order to enable the Senate to consider the amendment which I tendered.

I therefore ask that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered and that the bill stand on the calendar for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Nevada to the fact that the Senator from South Dakota, the chairman of the committee, is not present.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I consulted with the Senator from South Dakota about 15 minutes ago and he told me he would have no objection. I have sent word asking him to be here, but he is not here.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I would not assume to act instead of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from South Dakota, nor do I in the slightest degree desire to indicate any doubt about the statement made by the Senator from Nevada; but after the motion indicated by him has been made and considered there will be other motions made, and they should be made at once, so as not to delay the passage of the bill beyond to-day. If it would be agreeable to the Senator from Nevada to renew his motion at a somewhat later hour, we will undertake to have the Senator from South Dakota here, so that the whole matter may be disposed of.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It is entirely agreeable to me, Mr. President, that the action be had to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have made my motion to reconsider the vote by which the omnibus claims bill was passed.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I was going to suggest to the Senator from Nevada, to enter the motion, and then if it so happens that we can not act on the motion to-day, it will be pending.

Mr. CULBERSON (to Mr. NEWLANDS). Make the motion now.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I make the motion now.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand that the Senator from Nevada makes the motion now to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be entered.

Mr. CULBERSON. And it will be passed over for the future consideration of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion has been entered. The bill will be held here.

LANDS IN PENSACOLA, FLA.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia obtained the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If, without losing my position in the premises, I can yield for a moment to the Senator from Florida, who desires to call up two local bills, I shall be glad to do so, although I can not afford to lose my place.

Mr. FLETCHER. It will take only a moment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield, if I can, under the circumstances indicated.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to call up two bills, being Orders of Business 961 and 962, releasing the claims of the United States Government to certain lands in the city of Pensacola, Fla.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield for that purpose, if I may.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5378) releasing the claim of the United States Government to that portion of land, being a fractional block, bounded on the north and east by Bayou Cadet, on the west by Cevallos Street, and on the south by Intendencia Street, in the old city of Pensacola.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FLETCHER. I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5377) releasing the claim of the United States Government to lot No. 306 in the old city of Pensacola. It is a bill of the same kind as the one just passed.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRACTICE OF PHARMACY AND SALE OF POISONS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8619) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved May 7, 1906.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

> That "An act to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved May 7, 1906, be amended by adding after section 11 thereof a new section to be known as "section 11a," and to read as follows:
> "SEC. 11a. That nothing contained in this act shall apply to sales at wholesale by any dental supply depot, carrying only a general stock of dental supplies, without being required to have a licensed pharmacist employed therein or connected therewith, to lawfully authorized practitioners of dentistry or medicine, for personal use in the practice of their profession, or to incorporated dental or medical colleges, for use therein, or to incorporated hospitals, for use therein, all drugs, chemicals and poisons used in the legitimate practice of dentistry: Provided, however, That no such dental supply depot shall so sell at wholesale any such drugs, chemicals, or poisons except upon the original written order of a lawfully authorized practitioner of dentistry or medicine, which order shall be dated and shall disclose the full name and address of such practitioner, and whether the articles ordered are for his personal professional use and account, or for the account, and use therein, of such college or hospital, and all such original orders shall, for a period of three years, be retained on file by the dental supply depot selling or furnishing the drugs, chemicals, or poisons specified therein. No proprietor, officer, agent, or employee of any dental supply depot shall sell or furnish any such drugs, chemicals, or poisons otherwise than as in this section provided, and no practitioner of dentistry or medicine shall purchase or obtain from any dental supply depot any such drugs, chemicals, or poisons otherwise than as in this section provided, or for any other purpose than as in this section permitted."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

COLVILLE INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5379) granting certain lands of the diminished Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the Washington Historical Society. This is purely a local bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall not object to the consideration of this bill, but I give notice that I shall object to the consideration of any further bills this morning by unanimous consent.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to patent to the Washington State Historical Society, for memorial and park purposes, the following-described lands in the diminished Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, to wit: A tract of land not exceeding 4 acres in area located in the northwest corner of lot 2 of section 17, the precise description of said tract to be determined by said Washington Historical Society and the Secretary of the Interior prior to the issuance of the patent therefor, and lot 7, containing 20.90 acres of section 21, all in township 30 north, range 25 east of the Willamette meridian in Washington: Provided, That the lands hereby granted shall be paid for by the said society at their appraised value, to be ascertained in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and the proceeds thereof placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians belonging on the reservation of which the lands herein described are a part and thereafter paid to the said Indians or used for their benefit in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may deem for their best interests: Provided further, That the lands hereby granted shall be subject for a period of 25 years to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate take up for consideration the bill (H. R. 22871) to establish agricultural extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress, approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the committee will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 6, page 5, line 14, strike out the words "duly appointed by the governing boards of said colleges" and insert "of the State, duly authorized by the laws of the State," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That the sums hereby appropriated for extension work shall be annually paid in equal semiannual payments on the 1st of January and July of each year by the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the warrant of the Secretary of Agriculture, out of the Treasury of the United States, to the treasurer or other officer of the State, duly authorized by the laws of the State to receive the same; and such officer shall be required to report to the Secretary of Agriculture, on or before the 1st day of September of each year, a detailed statement of the amount so received during the previous fiscal year, and of its disbursement, on forms prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is a mere verbal change to make the language perfectly accurate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I now send to the Secretary's desk the report made by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry on this bill, which I would be glad to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. SMITH of Georgia December 14, 1912, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 1072, Sixty-second Congress, third session.]

ESTABLISHMENT OF AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 22871:

The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 22871) to establish agricultural extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, having considered the same, beg to report it back to the Senate with one amendment and with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass.

The object of the bill is to make provision for the establishment of extension departments in the land-grant agricultural colleges of each State and to carry to the farmers at their homes the knowledge gathered at the agricultural colleges and experiment stations.

Fifty years ago the Morrill Act became a law, and by aid from the appropriation which it made colleges of agriculture are now successfully conducted in every State.

Twenty-five years ago the Hatch bill became a law, and by aid from the appropriations which it made agricultural experiment stations are now successfully conducted in every State. Other legislation has also been enacted since the Morrill and Hatch Acts of further aid to the colleges and experiment stations.

The Morrill Act provides for the endowment and support of colleges, the leading object of which shall be "to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts." The Hatch Act provides for agricultural experiment stations where by investigation and experiment accurate knowledge is obtained upon farm problems.

The experiment stations were essential to proper instructions in the colleges. In most of the States these colleges and experiment stations have for years worked in close association. They have conducted investigations and made tests bearing upon many important questions connected with the farm, and their investigations and tests have been especially with reference to conditions in their respective States. They have studied plants and determined with accuracy the foods upon which they live and mature crops. They have analyzed different classes of soil in their respective States to determine the plant food contained and have learned how to make it available. They have ascertained defects of soils and how to remove them. They have worked out the improvement of seeds and have found the way to resist many plant diseases. They have tested stock, cattle, and hog foods and diseases. They have found what foods will bring the best results and have advanced in the treatment of diseases.

I do not claim that the knowledge which has been obtained is absolutely accurate in all lines, but I insist that they have learned many things of great value to those engaged upon farms; and their officers are as a rule able and capable men, practical as well as scientific, and devoted to their work.

These institutions are now engaged in their best work and will continue to demonstrate new truths which would be most helpful if understood and used in the daily work of the farm.

There are students at these colleges who are obtaining much aid from the instructions which they receive, but there is not sufficient provision to carry to the farmers at their homes the valuable information which has been and will be obtained by the work of the colleges and experiment stations.

The last census shows that the rural population of the 48 States was 49,384,882. The majority of our population is engaged in agricultural pursuits. It is my urgent plea that they should receive as speedily as possible the help which the successful use of all that has been learned and may yet be learned at the agricultural colleges and experiment stations would be to them.

The National Government has spent on the agricultural colleges and experiment stations, in round figures, $70,000,000. It spends now $3,940,000 cash annually upon them. From State appropriations and other sources they receive annually $11,000,000. A large part, however, of this last-named amount is required for new buildings and equipment required to meet the growing demands upon the colleges.

For the year ended June 30, 1912, Congress appropriated $15,000,000 for carrying on the exclusively agricultural work of the Department of Agriculture. Much the larger portion of this money is spent for investigation and experimentation. Information of great value to the rural interests of the country is secured, but a comparatively small amount is devoted to showing those at work upon farms how to apply this information.

Dr. True, Director of the Office of Experiment Stations, has stated:

"Heretofore interest in the agricultural development has largely been in the direction of securing new truths. A vast amount of valuable information is now in existence awaiting some effective means of getting it into operation by the farming people of the United States. It has been found that the mere publication of results in the bulletins and pamphlets is not sufficient, and that there is much even that these publications do not contain and can not be taught by them.

"The agricultural colleges were created and organized chiefly for the benefit of agriculture. They have devoted themselves to perfecting their organization and courses of study for the education of their students and by means of experiment stations to the investigation and discovery of agricultural truths. Recently there have arisen demands upon these institutions for information and assistance outside of their classrooms by persons engaged in agriculture unable to attend these colleges as students. These demands became so insistent that at the meeting of the Association of Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations held at Portland, Oreg., in 1909, the association by formal action changed its constitution by recognizing the obligation of the colleges to the rural people outside of their halls as equal to the obligation of resident students and their work of research. Forty-five colleges, representing 43 States, were conducting extension work during the college year which closed June 30, 1911, but their work was limited by lack of sufficient funds."

We are confronted, therefore, with the fact that the National Government has spent, and is spending, large sums of money upon the agricultural colleges and the experiment stations. The money so spent has aroused interest in the States, and they are appropriating to this work sums in excess of those appropriated by the National Government, but the inspiration for the work and the leadership in the work came from the national appropriation. These institutions are doing good, but much that they might do fails of accomplishment because there is no organized machinery, backed by necessary funds, to carry the information they gather to those actually engaged in agricultural pursuits.

The agricultural colleges, agencies in a sense of the National Government, are ready for immediate service at the home of the farmer. They are ready to furnish the information they have acquired to all upon the farms instead of to a few at the colleges. The bill which has passed the House is intended to enable them to increase their extension work at once and develop it in time upon a broad scale.

It is of vital importance to carry promptly to the farmers the knowledge acquired at these institutions.

A number of bills have been introduced during the past few years intended to accomplish this result. Last fall the executive committee of the State Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations, officers of the National Soil Fertility League, and representatives of the Agricultural Department prepared a bill, which was introduced in the Senate on the 16th day of January and in the House of Representatives on the 17th day of the same month. The House of Representatives has passed this bill with only two important amendments. One requires that 75 per cent of the money appropriated shall be used in actual demonstration work and the other provides that this bill shall not interfere with the demonstration work now being done by the Agricultural Department.

Many State legislatures will meet in January, and the passage of the House bill by the Senate at the earliest day possible is necessary to give them an opportunity to act.

The bill provides for the establishment and maintenance in each of the land-grant colleges of agriculture of an extension department to give instruction in agriculture and home economics to farmers at their homes.

This instruction is to be given by demonstration work and other means in the local farm communities.

It provides for a fixed appropriation from the Treasury of $10,000 unconditionally to each State. It provides also an appropriation beginning with $300,000 a year, July 1, 1913, to be prorated among the States on a basis of rural population. This appropriation is to be increased each year $300,000 until the maximum of $3,000,000 is reached in 1923. No State is to receive a pro rata of this sum unless it provides an equal amount for the same purpose. The money is to be expended by the State colleges of agriculture through their extension departments in each State. Seventy-five per cent of the money must be used in actual field demonstration; 5 per cent may be used for printing and publications, and the remaining 20 per cent for instructions in household economics or for further field demonstrations. The bill provides that any Federal money lost or misused must be made good by the State, and it prohibits the use of the money for purposes except those specified. It provides for reports from the colleges to the Secretary of Agriculture, and through the Secretary of Agriculture to Congress.

The bill permits the purchase of no land by the Government. The representatives of the colleges in the various communities in each county in each State will enlist farmers, who, under the direction of the representative of the agricultural college, will test the value on their own land of the information brought by the representative of the agricultural college. The farmer will be invited to plant under the direction of the representative of the college. The character of the soil will be tested, the nature of the fertilizer to be used explained, the selection of seed advised, and the time of planting and manner of cultivation suggested, and demonstrations will be made which will teach and prove the value of the knowledge acquired at the colleges and stations. In another place the representative of the college will teach and by experimentation demonstrate the best manner for caring for fruit trees. In another, the best system for feeding cattle and stock and of dairying and butter making may be the subject of the demonstration.

Demonstrations will also be made in home economics and labor-saving machines.

The colleges of agriculture and the experiment stations in each State have devoted themselves to the study of the peculiar conditions of their State and the localities of their State and will, through their representatives, carry to the farmer in his home the accurate information which experimentation has demonstrated and in turn give a practical demonstration in the locality before the farmer and his neighbors of the value of the information acquired and how to use it. This class of work will be supplemented by printed discussions of the best mode of farming, of hygiene, and of household economics, and the means available will be used to give those on the farm all that research can develop which will be of service to them.

The value of such instruction is not a matter of experiment. It has been tried in other countries, as well as to a limited extent in our own. A number of European countries for the past 25 years have been carrying the information gathered in their colleges and experiment stations to the homes of the farmers. Detailed information as to how the extension departments in other countries have been conducted and the beneficial results from them has been gathered by the National Director of the Office of Experiment Stations.

We have selected Belgium as an example and have examined the statistics prepared by the Department of Agriculture showing the effect there of agricultural extension work upon the lines proposed for our country by the bill under consideration. They disclose an average increase of production per acre in 20 years of 30 per cent. They also disclose a lessened cost of production per acre, and this splendid accomplishment is attributed to the information and instruction carried to the farmers by agricultural extension work.

The testimony before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and the House Committee on Agriculture furnishes convincing proof of the great benefits which have been accomplished by the limited work upon this line already carried on by the agencies created principally through congressional action.

Dr. Russell, dean of the college of agriculture of the University of Wisconsin, pointed out its value in the improvement of cattle and dairying in Wisconsin. Among other things, Dr. Russell said:

"The extension work is designated generally to take that work right to the man on the field, and it seems to me the advantageous feature of this bill is that it leaves it to the discretion of the agricultural college to organize this work along those lines that are going to be most effective for the community concerned."

He also pointed out a development of corn seed which in a portion of Wisconsin had enabled an increase of production per acre of over 50 bushels. He dwelt upon the necessity for soil diagnosis, and how at one point more phosphate was needed and at another more nitrogen and another more potash, and how for various crops portions of those necessary plant foods could be supplied and at other places other ingredients could be locally found, and he urged the importance of carrying accurate information upon this subject to the farmer at home, and he showed the work he was doing endeavoring to give such information to the farmers of Wisconsin.

Dr. Russell relates this incident, told him by Dr. Hopkins, of Illinois:

"Dr. Hopkins had demonstrated in southern Illinois what could be done with a dollar and a half's worth of phosphate to soil that needed this plant food. The average yield of corn in that locality was about 13 bushels. Dr. Hopkins demonstrated that with a little phosphorus and brains the yield could be increased fourfold. An old man came up with tears in his eyes and said: 'Dr. Hopkins, I want to thank you for what I have seen to-day; but, God help me, if I only knew that 40 years ago.' He said, 'I have six sons in my family and have labored night and day to keep body and breeches together and to keep the family together, and what have I got on my farm? Twelve to 15 or 16 bushels of corn to an acre—that's all I can make. I would have liked to send my boys to college. I would have liked to give those children an education; but I could not raise enough crop on the piece of land that I owned, so I have toiled all my life and have earned barely enough to support my family. Now, if a man had only come to me when I was comparatively young and told me the things you have told me to-day—that one dollar and a half's worth of phosphate would have given me 50 bushels of corn like the crop which was raised right over the fence from where I am—I could have sent my children to the high school and to a university.'"

Dr. Soule, of Georgia, discussed the subject along the same lines, and pointed out how corn and cotton production had been increased in various parts of the State nearly 100 per cent by the application of the knowledge developed in the State College of Agriculture and Experiment Station. He called attention to the different varieties of soil even in Georgia and the different character of plant foods contained in the different soils of the State. Among other things, he said:

"I have told you of the variations of our soil in Georgia. How can we direct this thing from a centralized position? It is impossible to do it. There is not a man not familiar with the agricultural conditions of California who would attempt to advise the farmers of that State. It is not possible to send out information and literature from Washington that will meet the needs of the farmers in Georgia, as well as in all the other States. We must conduct this as a localized proposition, studying and teaching through the agricultural colleges."

Dr. W. D. Gibbs, president of the New Hampshire College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, gave an illustration of the benefit of agricultural-extension work of the kind that this bill contemplates through a young man who studied at the College of Agriculture of New Hampshire. He said:

"This old orchard was full of San Jose scale, and was an unproductive orchard, producing mediocre fruit in small quantity. The father had made his living by selling milk 8 miles away. This young man went to work on the orchard and pruned it and sprayed it and cared for it in other ways, and to-day they have one of the best apple orchards in New England. Instead of producing 800 barrels of poor fruit a year it is producing about 1,500 barrels of good fruit a year. The result is that the town has become an apple-producing center. Now, these farmers might have read agricultural experiment station bulletins for a hundred years on how to develop an orchard and they never would have done it. They believed their eyes and changed their methods.

"We are tremendously interested in this thing. The salvation of New England, it seems to me, is dependent upon increased agricultural prosperity. Agricultural extension is the way to bring it about. You can talk to farmers at farmers' institutes and you can send them bulletins by the ton, but they do not change their practice. But when you go to the farm and 'show' the man then he is your friend for life, and that, in my opinion, is the way to develop agriculture in New England or any other part of the United States."

Dr. Thompson, president of the University of Ohio, presented a strong appeal for the bill and declared that it was necessary to "develop the work of the American farmers," and as a "supplementary move that will reach the matured men and women, who, for one reason or another are not able to bring themselves to the school, and give them the full benefit of the appropriations already made to the colleges and experiment stations."

Dr. Howard H. Gross, president of the National Soil Fertility League, of Chicago, among other things, said:

"I believe this bill for agricultural extension, measured by its general benefits, is the most important constructive measure since the days of Abraham Lincoln. I believe that is the concensus of opinion of the gentlemen who have given it careful study."

He pointed out that at a low estimate the proposed extension work is not only the way to an increase of average yield per acre of 20 per cent, but also made the following statement:

"The approximate area of farm lands is 900,000,000 acres. The present crop value is about $9,000,000,000. Twenty per cent increase means $1,800,000,000, equal to $18 per capita on 100,000,000 population. This sum equals one-half of all the money in circulation. Surely the figures are tremendous. The maximum cost to the Federal Treasury under the bill before you will be $3,000,000 per year. The value of 20 per cent increase on one year's crop will pay for the proposed demonstration work for 600 years."

He also said:

"There appeared before the committee representatives of agricultural associations, representatives of the agricultural colleges and experiment stations, students of agricultural development, and leading bankers, all of whom urged the passage of this measure as one necessary for the improvement of the agriculture of the country, and they dwelt upon both the benefits which would go to the farmer and to the urban citizen as a consequence of the improved methods on the farm which this bill would bring about."

At a recent meeting of the presidents of the colleges of agriculture and experiment stations the following resolutions were passed:

"The Association of American Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations, in session at Atlanta, Ga., November 14, 1912, most respectfully requests the United States Senate to pass the agricultural extension bill, H. R. 22871, during the coming session of the Sixty-second Congress.

"For some years the institutions represented in this association have been urging the development of work in agricultural extension for the purpose of carrying to the farmer in his own community the successful experience of the experiment stations and the approved teachings of the colleges of agriculture.

"During the sessions of the Sixty-first Congress several bills looking to this end were introduced and hearings given to the representatives of the agricultural colleges, of the National Grange, of bankers' associations, and of others interested in the development of the Nation's agricultural resources.

"On January 16, 1912, the Hon. HOKE SMITH introduced in the United States Senate and Hon. A. F. LEVER introduced in the House of Representatives a bill to establish agricultural extension departments in connection with the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862. The bill now known as H. R. 22871, embodying substantially the provisions of the two bills referred to above, has passed the House of Representatives and is now pending in the Senate.

"The provisions of this bill have been fully discussed in the hearings before the Committees on Agriculture in both the House of Representatives and the Senate. Its provisions are simple and clear. The bill seeks to bring to the practical farmer by correspondence, instruction, and demonstration the accumulated and approved experience and methods of the colleges and experiment stations during the past 50 years.

"Fifty years ago the United States Congress passed the act providing for the land-grant colleges. Twenty-five years ago Congress pased the act providing for the experiment stations. Both these acts have been supplemented with legislation increasing the funds and the efficiency of both colleges and stations. It is now urged that on this anniversary year the agricultural extension bill be passed in order to enable these colleges to carry to the farmer who can not come to the college or station such demonstration of the results obtained in these institutions as shall enable him to maintain and develop the agricultural resources under his direction. This movement we believe to be in accord with sound public policy lying at the basis of the economic policies looking toward increased production as an important factor in determining the comfort and welfare of the whole people. This bill naturally and logically completes the chain of agencies fostered by the Federal Government for the betterment of agriculture. Hitherto we have maintained laboratories and field experiments at our colleges and stations, have put the results into bulletins, and have taught them in the classroom. It is now proposed to take these results to the local community, carry the school to the farmer, and make his own fields a laboratory in which we can demonstrate the value of science when applied to agriculture.

"The association would call the attention of the Senate to two facts: First, the universal approval the country over of the wisdom of passing the land-grant act after an experience of 50 years; of the equally universal approval of the country of the act providing for the experiment stations after an experience of 25 years; and, second, to the fact that the agricultural interests as represented by the farmers, the colleges, the experiment stations, the agricultural press, and other interests as represented in bankers' associations and philanthropic agencies of various names are all united in a desire to see the bill for agricultural extension become a law.

"The Association of Agricultural Colleges, believing that these extension departments should be established without delay, and believing that this measure should receive favorable consideration upon its own merits without complication with other legislation, does most respectfully urge upon the Senate of the United States the importance of passing the bill for the establishing of agricultural extension departments in the agricultural colleges of the several States at the earliest possible date, to the end that the legislatures of the different States, many of which meet in January, may have opportunity to accept the provisions of the bill and to put the departments into operation during the coming year.

"Attention is respectfully called to the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in the United States Senate, Sixty-second Congress, second session (S. 4563), March 1, 1912, for a more complete statement of the merits of the bill and of the reasons for its enactment into law.

"Passed by the Association of American Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations, Atlanta, Ga., November 14, 1912.

"WINTHROP E. STONE, President.

"Attest:

"JOSEPH L. HILLS, Secretary."

The International Dry Farming Congress at Colorado Springs indorsed the bill by unanimous vote.

The New England Conference of Rural Progress, comprising 70 organizations, at a meeting in Boston, said:

"Of all the bills now before Congress, we believe the Lever bill to be the most practical form of legislation yet proposed."

The Tri-State Grain Growers' convention, comprising Minnesota and the two Dakotas, passed resolutions emphatically indorsing the bill.

The executive officers of the State Grange, the State Federation of Farmers' Clubs, and State Horticulture Society, of Michigan, unanimously indorsed the bill.

The Farmers' Union indorsed the bill.

The Third Wisconsin Country Life Conference, at Madison, passed a resolution urging the Members of Congress to pass the agricultural extension bill.

Secretary of Agriculture Hon. James Wilson, in a memorandum prepared for the President of the United States, after full discussion of the provisions of the bill, says:

"From time to time during the past three or four years bills have been introduced in Congress having for their object agricultural extension work, and upon these bills there has been considerable discussion. Public sentiment has gradually been crystallized on the matter until now we have before us House bill 18160, known as the Lever bill—a concrete proposition in regard to carrying the results of agricultural knowledge directly to the man on the land. Unquestionably such a plan, if properly carried out, would result in great good and would do much toward making useful and valuable the rapidly growing store of knowledge developed along agricultural lines."

(Secretary Wilson designated House bill 18160 as the bill to which he was referring. The present bill, as heretofore explained, is the substitute for that bill.)

The following are abstracts of indorsements of the bill as it was first introduced into the Senate, the present bill being practically the same measure, with only the changes to which we have heretofore called attention:

ALABAMA.

President State Agricultural and Mechanical College says it is "a splendid piece of prospective legislation."

President Alabama Polytechnic Institute: "We regard this work as one of the greatest possible good that can be rendered by the Government to our great farming interests. * * * This sort of constructive work done with the Government money seems to me is of even more value than what might be called the destructive work of the appropriations for guns and battleships."

ARIZONA.

President University of Arizona: "The newer sections of the country are in great need of the national help that such a bill as yours contemplates. * * * I am glad the whole subject is engaging the attention of Congress * * *."

ARKANSAS.

President University of Arkansas: "I heartily approve of the bill and hope that it will be passed."

Dean and director College of Agriculture: "Senate bill 4563 * * * is a piece of proposed legislation which, to my mind, is of great importance."

CALIFORNIA.

President University of California: "There is no way in which we can do real good for the masses of our people better than through agricultural extension work. * * * There can be no question about our favoring the bill; we know what it means."

CONNECTICUT.

President Connecticut Agricultural College: "My personal opinion is that carrying of the latest scientific knowledge to the working farmer is one of the most important duties of the land-grant colleges. I sincerely hope that this bill will have favorable consideration by the present session of Congress."

DELAWARE.

President Delaware College: "I am very much pleased, indeed, to hear that the bill * * * has been read twice and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. * * * Boys and girls of the common-school and high-school ages usually decide into what sphere of life they wish to enter. Formerly the dearth of agricultural education in that formative period rendered it impossible for the boy or girl to realize the importance of such instruction and consequently the country boy usually found a home in the city. I believe that this condition of affairs will be remedied by the operation of such a bill as you have proposed."

FLORIDA.

President University of Florida: "I sincerely hope that you will be successful in passing this measure. Our State at the present time is giving $7,500 annually for farmers' institutes and agricultural extension work. With double this amount we believe that the efficiency of the agricultural extension work would be quadrupled, as paradoxical as this may seem."

GEORGIA.

Chancellor University of Georgia: "It is the best bill for extension work that I have ever seen. It is the only bill for extension work which I have been able to read and understand. If there is any way in which I can aid in its passage I will be glad to know it."

President State College of Agriculture: "We are naturally very much gratified to see the progress you are making with your measure in the Senate, and hope Mr. LEVER will have equal success in the House."

HAWAII.

President College of Hawaii: "I have read the bill over carefully and heartily commend your efforts to secure this benefit for the large and important class of our people who are in need of its provisions. This is constructive legislation of the truest type. Efficiency and contentment in agriculture are at the foundation of the Nation's welfare. * * * I believe that extension teaching is most important of all our methods for the propagation of knowledge. * * * There is sufficient data to show that the endowment for the agricultural colleges and experiment stations and the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture must be considered as among the best investments that the Nation has ever made."

IDAHO.

President University of Idaho: "Even with the best preparation we can make, and the most generous support from the Government in all of its divisions, we expect to be swamped by applications for assistance through extension instruction. Practically every community in the State is clamoring for extension work, and only a small percentage of the requests can be complied with. With reasonable support, however, from the United States and the State, we may expect that practically the whole agricultural population of Idaho will go to school for a portion of each year."

ILLINOIS.

Vice president University of Illinois: "The bill (S. 4563) introduced by you into the Senate of the United States is one of very great importance to the people of our country, and if passed is destined to work wonderfully great results. It is well known to everybody who has thought on the matter that agriculture with us is in a state of low development. * * * The people of the rural districts are not sharing adequately in the general prosperity of the country, and the latter can not be maintained without a forward movement among these rural people. Everywhere of late is heard the cry, 'Back to the farm.' But until the farm becomes desirable as a source of living and of community life no adequate result can be reached. This bill will serve in a practical way to make this movement really successful. * * * The University of Illinois is doing a great deal of this work now from State appropriations. It can do much more with the aid that the bill is destined to give."

Editor Orange Judd Farmer, Chicago: "The demonstration idea has not been given great attention at the North. Its wonderful success South ought to be sufficient proof that it would be just as satisfactory at the North. We are heartily in favor of this kind of work. I am very anxious to do what I can to help this bill along."

INDIANA.

President Purdue University: "I am in favor of this kind of legislation rather than some of the other measures which are now before Congress. * * * I find the demands upon us for attention and for work which we would like to do far in excess of our resources. This kind of work is the thing now most needed in our agricultural colleges, and I hope the measure will pass."

KANSAS.

President State Agricultural College: "We shall be very glad to do anything necessary to be done to indicate the interest of the farming classes in this matter and to assure the Members of Congress that they will appreciate the enactment of a law along the line of this bill."

KENTUCKY.

Editor Home and Farm, Louisville: "The policy will result in great good. * * * Only through a better agricultural education will the farmers be able to diversify their crops intelligently, care for their soils, and increase their profits."

MAINE.

President University of Maine: "I have gone over Senate bill 4563 with very great interest. I see nothing whatever to criticize or change in the bill. If this bill becomes a law it will enable the land-grant colleges to render unusual service to the people of this country. If I can be of any service in bringing about the favorable consideration of this bill it will be a pleasure."

MASSACHUSETTS.

President Massachusetts Agricultural College: "I am more than glad to give a hearty indorsement to the bill. * * * I think that this is one of the most important educational measures ever introduced into Congress. I believe the time is ripe for a great Federal movement in popular education in agriculture and rural affairs. The States are doing something, but we need the stimulus, direction, and practical assistance of the National Government. * * * You will find the agricultural educators and farmers of America back of you in this effort to inaugurate a great movement. I know of nothing that the present Congress could do that would be more popular. I hope the bill may be passed at this session."

MICHIGAN.

President Michigan Agricultural College: "This bill has my hearty indorsement and I hope may pass. I shall do all I can to that end."

MINNESOTA.

Indorsements received from the officers of the State College of Agriculture and Experiment Stations of Minnesota.

MISSISSIPPI.

President Agricultural and Mechanical College: "I heartily indorse your bill. While I was president of the American Association of Institute Workers I delivered an address urging that such a bill be passed by the National Congress. Extension work is by far the most important work of the land-grant colleges at this time. * * * We already have enough information to transform our agriculture if we could get the people to incorporate it in their practices."

MONTANA.

President Montana State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts: "I am heartily in favor of this movement, and I believe that the provisions of this bill will meet the approval of all the interests concerned. The amount required to carry out this bill is insignificant, and yet it will stimulate the States to expend several times this amount."

NEBRASKA.

Chancellor University of Nebraska: "The University of Nebraska has already organized a department of agricultural extension. For lack of funds, however, our work is conducted mainly along the line of farmers' institutes. I have read the bill, and most cordially indorse it in every particular."

NEW JERSEY.

President Rutgers College: "I am glad to express to you my emphatic indorsement of this measure and my earnest hope that it will be passed. The State Agricultural College of New Jersey, Rutgers College, is surely in position to do extension work throughout the State, and the work ought to be done."

NEVADA.

President College of Agriculture and Mechanical Arts: "I heartily approve your bill and hope that it will be adopted."

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

President New Hampshire College of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts: "My personal belief is that if this bill is passed by Congress it will be one of the wisest pieces of legislation since the land-grant act of 1862. * * * To my mind agricultural extension work is of the utmost importance at the present time. Our experiment stations have accumulated a large mass of facts and our colleges have done a wonderful work in accumulating and assimilating agricultural information of all kinds, and the most important thing we can do now is to extend this information to the farmers. This can be done only by demonstration and by other practical thorough-going methods. I hope that your bill will receive the hearty support of every Member of Congress."

NEW MEXICO.

President New Mexico College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts: "I have read the bill with great care, and will say that I believe it to be the best of the several bills now pending before Congress which have this object in view. Whatever may be the merits of the various propositions to have the Federal Government support agricultural high schools, trade schools, district agricultural schools, and branch experiment stations, it seems clear that none of these ought to be tied up with the agricultural extension proposition, of which almost everybody is in favor. The Association of Agricultural Colleges at its recent meeting took the position that the support of agricultural extension work was the most important advance movement to be accomplished by legislation at this time."

NEW YORK.

President Cornell University: "It is a species of instruction which appeals to the public more than college instruction or investigation, for which provision has been made in previous acts of Congress."

NORTH CAROLINA.

President College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts: "There is no work which the Nation can do now which would tell more for material progress than the extension work which would be so healthfully aided by your bill. If there is anything that our farmers need more than another it is for some one to carry directly to them the vast amount of scientific knowledge about crops and methods which has been made available in the past few years. The passage of this bill would give an opportunity to do this thing, and I am sure no step could count more for progress than would be taken by such action on the part of our Congress."

NORTH DAKOTA.

President North Dakota Agricultural College: "A resolution was adopted at the Tri-State Grain Growers' Convention indorsing the passage of your bill, and, as president of the convention, I sent copies of the resolution to the members of both houses in Minnesota and the two Dakotas. I trust the bill will find favor with both Congressmen and Senators and become a law."

OHIO.

Dr. Thompson, of the University of Ohio, appeared in person before the committee, advocating the bill.

OKLAHOMA.

President Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College: "I am in hearty sympathy with the purpose of your bill."

OREGON.

President Oregon Agricultural College: "I am in hearty accord with all the provisions of this bill. I have already written Members of the Oregon delegation, urging that they give it their support. The Oregon State Agricultural College has a regularly organized department or division for extension work in agriculture and home economics. One great need is for money with which to carry on this work. I sincerely trust that your bill may be passed by the present Congress."

PENNSYLVANIA.

President Pennsylvania State College: "Let me thank you for copy of Senate bill 4563. * * * Wishing the bill success and thanking you for your efforts for the benefit of public education, I am, * * *."

Secretary State Horticultural Association of Pennsylvania: "I take this opportunity to especially commend Senate bill 4563, introduced by you, and to assure you of the interest and support of this association. This is a matter of immediate need and far-reaching advantage to the agricultural interests of the country. I sincerely hope that it may become a law."

RHODE ISLAND.

President Rhode Island State College: "I heartily approve of your bill and have no criticisms to make. This college has been prosecuting extension work for seven or eight years, laboring under the difficulty of lack of funds. * * * I am anxious to do whatever is possible to aid in the passage of this measure, and have written our Senators accordingly."

SOUTH CAROLINA.

President Clemson Agricultural College: "I have read this bill with a great deal of interest. * * * I consider it one of the most important pieces of constructive legislation proposed since the Hatch Act, establishing the agricultural experiment stations. There is no question but that the great need to-day is the dissemination of agricultural information among our rural people. We would welcome the passage of such a bill as yours, and assure you that we would try to make its application in South Carolina of the greatest usefulness to our people."

SOUTH DAKOTA.

President South Dakota State College: "The cause is one that has our hearty indorsement. I have not been negligent of Senate bill 4563. I believe that our delegation will support it."

Principal, School of Agriculture: "I think our farming people * * * have almost no realization of the advantages that will come from legislation of this kind. * * * I feel positive that this work will greatly advance the agricultural interests of this great State of South Dakota."

TENNESSEE.

President University of Tennessee: "I am heartily in favor of the passage of this act. I believe the work contemplated by it to be of the greatest importance. I will be glad to do anything in my power to influence its passage."

TEXAS.

President Agricultural and Mechanical College: "If this bill should become a law, I am sure that it will mark a new era in agricultural education among the masses in America. * * * I can think of no expenditure of money by the Government that would be more remunerative to the Nation and which would redound to the amelioration of so large a number of our most deserving fellow citizens."

Editor Farm and Ranch: "This is a very important measure and one that should be passed without opposition."

UTAH.

President Agricultural College of Utah: "Utah established an agricultural extension department several years ago. * * * We are unable, however, with the means at our disposal, to meet the demands made upon us. * * * You are at perfect liberty to quote the officials of the Utah Agricultural College as being in very hearty sympathy with any measure for the promotion of our industrial life through the development of extension work among the farmers and farmers' wives throughout the country. It is possibly the most important work now lying before the agricultural colleges, since it permits the proper distribution among those who need it of the splendid mass of facts gathered by the agricultural experiment stations."

VIRGINIA.

President Virginia Polytechnic Institute: "This is by far the best proposition which has yet come forward. * * * The bill seems carefully drawn, and I can most heartily indorse it."

WASHINGTON.

Vice president State College of Washington: "I have been waiting a little to find what was recommended by the meeting of the agricultural college representatives and find that they are all of them backing this particular bill. There is certainly a large demand for more extension work in the country. We need to rationalize our education and make it more helpful to the young men and young women who do not expect to enter professional life. I will write to our Representatives and Senators and ask for their hearty cooperation in the passage of Senate bill 4563."

WEST VIRGINIA.

President West Virginia University: "I thank you very much for a copy of the bill sent, and hasten to express my wish that it may become a law. * * * This is one of the greatest works for the benefit of the entire country to which public money can be devoted. It is through the extension work, and through it alone, as far as I can see, that the people of most of our rural communities can be thoroughly awakened to the need and value of agricultural education. The proposed bill seems to me to be satisfactory in every detail, and I hope that you will be successful in securing its passage."

Dean and director College of Agriculture, West Virginia University: "I am sending out a letter to some of our leading people urging the support of your bill, and would like to send a copy of the bill with these letters. * * * We shall give this measure every support possible."

WISCONSIN.

Dean University of Wisconsin: "Senate bill 5463 * * * is, to my mind, the most suggestive measure that is under consideration in Congress for the advancement of the agricultural welfare of the Nation. What is needed most imperatively is the carrying of present agricultural knowledge to the man on the farm. * * * The agricultural extension service is the only way in which this can be most effectively accomplished, and your bill most satisfactorily fulfills this need. * * * We in Wisconsin will do all that we can to aid in the passage of this measure."

Secretary Wisconsin Country Life Conference Association: "The following resolution was unanimously adopted by the conference association, representing all the varied interests of country life and rural progress in all parts of Wisconsin:

"'Resolved, That it is the sentiment of this conference association that we urge our Representatives in Congress to support the bill "To establish agricultural extension departments in connection with the agricultural colleges in the several States, etc." House bill 18160, Senate bill 4563.'

"I take pleasure in acquainting you with representative Wisconsin sentiment on this measure."

Secretary Wisconsin Live Stock Breeders' Association: "Inclosed herewith please find copy of resolution passed unanimously by the Wisconsin Live Stock Breeders' Association, an organization representing all of Wisconsin's best live-stock breeders:

"'MADISON, WIS., February 8, 1912.

"'Resolved, That the Wisconsin Live Stock Breeders' Association assembled in annual convention heartily indorses the principle of Government aid to agricultural college extension as embodied in the Lever bill (House bill 18160), and that we authorize the secretary of this association to send a copy of these resolutions to the chairmen of the Senate and House Committees on Agriculture and to Members of the Wisconsin delegation in Congress.'"

Secretary National Association of State Universities: "I am deeply interested in your Senate bill 4563. The bill ought to pass, and I should be glad to cooperate with you in any way within my power to bring about the desired result."

Mr. W. O. Thompson, member executive committee Association of American Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations and president Ohio State University: "As chairman of the executive committee of the Association of American Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations I should be very much pleased to be heard before the committees of both the House and Senate. As a little evidence of our interest, I may say that we started agricultural extension four years before the legislature authorized it, and had as many as 8,000 boys on the farms doing experimental work. * * * The Agricultural College Association expressed itself very decidedly last November in favor of agricultural extension."

Secretary New England Conference on Rural Progress: "At a meeting of the New England Conference on Rural Progress, March 8, at the offices of the State board of agriculture, statehouse, Boston, the following resolutions were unanimously voted:

"'Recognizing the latent possibilities of the New England States for agricultural development, especially along certain high-class, specialized lines, and realizing that this development can be most speedily and effectively brought about through well-organized extension teaching in agriculture, the New England Conference on Rural Progress—representing more than 70 organizations interested in rural life—to-day assembled in convention in the city of Boston, would respectfully urge upon Congress the necessity and advisability of passing legislation granting Federal funds for the development of extension teaching in agriculture. Of the bills now before Congress we believe Senate bill 4563 and House bill 18160 to be the wisest and most practical forms of legislation yet proposed.'

"The delegates represent the agricultural colleges, the experiment stations, the State granges, and various special agricultural, live stock, dairying, and other organizations and agencies of New England."

State superintendent of farmers' institutes, Lansing, Mich.: "At the Michigan State Round-up Farmers' Institute, held at this place on February 27 to March 1, at which representative farmers from more than 50 of the counties of the State were present, the following resolution was adopted:

"'Whereas Representative A. F. LEVER, of the seventh district of South Carolina, has introduced a bill to establish agriculture extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act approved July 2, 1862, and acts supplementary thereto, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture: Therefore

"'Resolved, That the members of the Seventeenth Annual Farmers' Institute Round-up, in session at the Michigan Agricultural College, ask and urge its Senators and Members of Congress to favor the passage of this bill.'

"I would say that, in addition to the above delegates, the executive officers of the State Grange, State Federation of Farmers' Clubs, State Horticultural Society, and nearly 1,000 farmers were present and voted unanimously for the resolution."

Editor Agricultural Epitomist, Spencer, Ind.: "I congratulate you on so far-reaching a measure as Senate bill 4563 is intended to be. If Congress does nothing else than pass this bill, it will justify the wisdom of the forefathers."

UNION CITY, GA., February 26, 1912.

Dr. A. M. SOULE
(Care Hon. Hoke Smith), Washington, D. C.:

Resolutions adopted by Georgia Farmers' Union that the bills now pending in Congress which propose to appropriate a sum of money to each State for agricultural education, providing the State will appropriate a similar amount, known as House bill 18160 and Senate bill 4563, be heartily indorsed and supported.

J. F. MCDANIEL, Secretary-Treasury.

The committee recommends the passage of the bill as it came from the House, with only the following amendment:

On page 5, line 14, strike out the words "duly appointed by the governing boards of said colleges," and insert "of the State, duly authorized by the laws of the State."

During the reading of the report,

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia if he would be satisfied to have the report printed in the RECORD without further reading?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There are a few suggestions I desire to make about it a little later on. This is the noon hour, and I would rather let the reading continue for the present, because when Senators get through with their lunch the probabilities are that there will be more of them in the Senate Chamber a little later on.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought there were so few in the Chamber that it would make no difference to the Senator if the report were printed in the RECORD without further reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia requests that the reading be completed.

After the reading of the report had been concluded,

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] has a substitute which he intends to offer to the pending bill, and I think this would probably be an appropriate time for him to offer it.

Mr. PAGE. I move, touching the bill now before the Senate, House bill 22871, to strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute what I send to the desk.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Before the Secretary reads the substitute, I would like to say to the Senate that under the provisions of the bill which the House has passed, to make the appropriations effective, with the exception of $10,000 to each State, duplicate appropriations must come from the respective States. It is also necessary that the States should accept the plan.

Nearly every State in the Union has its legislature in session at the present time. A number of the States will have no legislatures in session again for two years. It is, therefore, of very great importance that this House bill should pass as speedily as possible, so that the legislatures of the respective States may at once take up the subject of the acceptance of the provisions of the bill and of the appropriations which the respective States must make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. WORKS. If no Senator desires to discuss this joint resolution, I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. It would be an excellent opportunity for discussion, if Senators desire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Georgia will proceed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I only desire at this time to urge upon the Senate the importance of speedy action upon this bill. The Senator from Vermont has offered as a substitute the measure which has been pending for some time before the Senate, known as the Page vocational-educational bill. Whether the Senate adopts his substitutes or adopts the original bill, if we are to have legislation at this session of Congress it is important that action should be speedily taken.

Of course if the Senate adopts the substitute of the Senator from Vermont, it must go to conference, and we will see what can be done as a result of the conference. If the Senate adopts the bill as it has passed the House, we have the legislation certain, the House already having acted upon it.

But whatever may be the vote of the Senate, whether for the substitute of the Senator from Vermont or for the bill as it comes from the House, I wish to beg that the Senate give very speedy time for the hearing. If the bill passes as it comes from the House and we notify the States at once, nearly every State in the Union will through its legislature act upon this matter within the next two months.

I will not discuss the merits of the two measures just now, but I wish to ask Senators to consider whether we may not fix a day, within the next two or three days, when we will take up and dispose of this bill, together with the substitute of the Senator from Vermont. I do not think the debate would last long. I should like to request the Senator from Vermont to state what he thinks about it.

Mr. PAGE. I would be very glad, indeed, to know that the Senate would take up this substitute measure and discuss it at length, but I regret to say that my efforts to bring about a discussion have not yet been successful. I had hoped, and I join with the Senator from Georgia in the opinion, that there will not be much discussion on this measure. I also am very anxious that it shall receive early consideration, as suggested by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I observe the Senator from Vermont suggested that he would like to have the bill discussed at length and then modified his statement. It seems to me that no lengthy discussion is needed. The Senator from Vermont has made one or two very illuminating speeches, and the Senator from Georgia is now discussing the measure. I am not quite sure how I shall vote, but this is a very important matter, and it does seem to me that we ought to get a vote without any very lengthy discussion of it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think I will wish to take over half an hour. I spoke before very briefly upon the House bill. The bill of the Senator from Vermont contains also, in a modified form, the measure which has been sent us from the House. As I understand it, no one is opposed to the agricultural extension work. We are all for that.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a mere question of form, rather than substance

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Well, as to the form, it is not so important. The real difference between the substitute of the Senator from Vermont and the House bill is whether just at this time we shall stop with the agricultural extension work or whether we are ready now to undertake to go further with the vocational educational work, and also whether we are satisfied with the measure for vocational educational work as it is presented.

I wish to disclaim opposition to the vocational educational work. I am for it. To-night the Senator from Vermont and I are to meet with a gentleman whom he regards as a special master of this subject to see if there is objection to the way in which the proposed substitute for the House bill provides vocational education.

I hope to be able while I am in the Senate to vote for a vocational educational bill. I have some doubt as to the details of this particular bill, but I am——

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me just a moment——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not mean when I said it was a matter of form that there was no difference in the details. I understand perfectly the difference in the bills, and it is for the Senate to decide which, in the judgment of the Senate, is the better measure. Personally, while I am very strongly in favor of some legislation, I trust the suggestion the Senator has just made that there is to be a consultation may result in a compromise bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to say that the Senator from Vermont has been just as courteous about his bill as a man possibly could be. He has urged me to suggest amendments where I felt there was just criticism. But I have not been able to satisfy myself about just what shape the measure should take. I would rather see his substitute pass and go to conference than not to have either the substitute or the original bill pass. I do not think the debate upon the bill will last two hours if we set a time for action upon it.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest to the Senator that perhaps we can get to a vote at an earlier date by not agreeing upon a time. If there is to be no discussion and the Senate is ready to vote, it seems to me to be more likely that we can vote upon it at a much earlier date than if we should set a day at some future time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Unless we set a date just a couple of days off. I think a good many Senators who are now absent wish to be present when the vote is taken. I stated to the Senator from Vermont and to the Senator from Utah that I would not undertake to press the bill to a vote to-day, because I understood there were Senators interested in the measure who would be absent.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true. Therefore it would be better not to ask for a unanimous-consent agreement at this time to fix a day. I believe that the quicker way to secure the passage of the bill would be to bring it up and discuss it, and when the discussion is through to vote on it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, just a word or two further to the Senate with reference to the subject.

The substitute that has been offered contains about seven or eight different provisions for the contribution of money to educational work. The first is to schools of a secondary grade, what we would usually term high schools. They are divided into two classes, those that have an equipment or a plant for manual training and those that have not. It appropriates $3,000,000 to be used toward the introduction of vocational work, manual training, and household economics into the latter class of schools. Then it puts $3,000,000 into those that have plants especially for vocational education. So $6,000,000 is to go to the secondary schools, which are the high schools, half of it to those that have a special plant or equipment for manual training or industrial schools exclusively and the other half to schools of secondary grade, even though they are generally engaged in high-school educational work free from vocational training.

It also appropriates money to the colleges of agriculture to establish a chair for the education of teachers on these lines. It also appropriates money to establish a chair in the normal schools for the training of teachers on these lines. It appropriates money for additional experiment stations throughout the States. It appropriates money to establish an agricultural high school in each congressional district.

These are the elements of appropriation which the substitute contains that are not covered by the House bill. In all, the Page substitute appropriates $13,000,000 for the purposes named not covered by the House bill. It also appropriates, in round sums, $3,000,000 to be used by the colleges of agriculture for the establishment of extension departments, to enable the colleges of agriculture and experiment stations to carry the information which they have gathered during the past 50 years and the truths that they have made clear by their experiment stations and demonstrate them alongside the home of the farmer.

The farm-demonstration work is one of seven things that the bill of the Senator from Vermont undertakes to do. That is the only thing the bill sent us by the House undertakes to do.

As to that particular work—the establishment of extension departments in the colleges of agriculture—each bill has exactly the same purpose. It might be said for the bill which has come to us from the House that it has been worked out a little more completely in detail and is in more perfect shape than the measure as it is found in the bill of the Senator from Vermont.

The friends of each measure approve the House bill. There is no conflict between us or between the advocates of either of the bills as to the wisdom of passing the House bill. The Page bill contains it as one of more than half a dozen things which it undertakes.

There is much that the Page bill undertakes to do that I am exceedingly desirous of seeing done. I am not satisfied that it is yet worked out in detail in a manner to suit the condition of the States and to justify the appropriations. If I had the control of both, and if I could satisfy the Senator from Vermont, I would say pass the House bill as it had been sent to us, and then pass a joint resolution and send it to the House providing for the appointment of a commission of about 25 men, each from a different State, two-thirds of them engaged in educational work, to whom the vocational bill might be referred, so that they could give us a more detailed plan for the work, with more perfect limitations as to the way in which the money is to be spent.

But I do not expect to make any fight upon the bill of the Senator from Vermont. I simply wish to point out the trouble in my mind upon it. I am so cordially in favor of doing something in that line that I hesitate even to criticize its details.

Now, I suppose the substitute of the Senator from Vermont will be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] has offered Senate bill No. 3 as a substitute for House bill 22871. The substitute bill, as the Chair recalls it, has already been read, and it will be considered as read now.

Mr. PAGE. I am not positive that it has been read in its present form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is so informed.

Mr. PAGE. The Secretary will know.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it has been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been read.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I wish to say in answer to what the Senator from Georgia has said—and I will take just a moment—that so far as I am concerned I am willing to submit my amendment to his bill to a vote this afternoon; but perhaps that had best not be done, because I have no doubt the Senator and myself can get together in a friendly way and discuss it to-night and improve the measure in some way. But as far as I am concerned I would be glad to have the earliest possible date named for a vote on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the substitute will be considered as having been read, and it is pending.

The amendment submitted by Mr. PAGE is to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to substitute the following:

SEC. 31. That the moneys received by any State or the District of Columbia for any given purpose under the provisions of this act shall be used only for such purpose, and shall be distributed among the institutions entitled to the benefit of such moneys in proportion to the amount which each expends out of other income derived from general or from local public funds for the same purpose during the same period; or such money shall be distributed on some other basis and according to some other plan previously adopted by the Board for Vocational Education or by legislative authority for such State or the District of Columbia, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior; but there shall in no case be disbursed under the terms of this act to any school or college, out of moneys derived from the secondary school department fund, the industrial or home economics school fund, the district agricultural school fund, the college teachers' training fund, or the normal teachers' training fund, as provided in this act, more money than 50 per cent of the amount which is supplied and expended during the same period for the same purpose for which such fund is to be expended out of either State and local or State or local public moneys.

SEC. 32. That all States, Territories, and the District of Columbia accepting the benefit of any fund under this act shall provide other moneys with which to pay the cost of providing the necessary lands and buildings, and to pay the entire cost of all instruction, supplementary to the practical and technical instruction provided for in this act, necessary in order to complete well-rounded courses of training, the main purposes of which are to give vocational as well as general preparation for agriculture, the trades and industries, and home making, or to prepare teachers for these vocations, suited to the needs of the respective sections and communities of the United States.

SEC. 33. That all correspondence for the furtherance of extension work, as provided for in this act, issued from the State colleges of agriculture and the mechanic arts, receiving the benefits of this act shall be transmitted in the mails of the United States and dependencies free of charge for postage, under such regulations as the Postmaster General may from time to time prescribe.

SEC. 34. That the Secretary of the Interior shall make an annual report to Congress on his administration of the secondary school department fund, the industrial and household arts school fund, the district agricultural high school fund, the college teachers' training fund, and the normal teachers' training fund, under the provisions of this act, and on the work of the boards for vocational education of each State and the District of Columbia in their administration of the moneys received from such funds under the provisions of this act; and he shall make one or more reports to Congress not later than June 30, 1915, concerning the organization of vocational education as provided for in this act.

SEC. 35. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall make an annual report to Congress on his administration of the extension department fund, and the branch station fund, and on the work of the boards of control of the colleges and experiment stations in their administration of the moneys received by them from such funds under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 36. That this act shall take effect immediately on its passage.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say that I shall vote for substituting Senate bill No. 3 for what is known as the Lever bill; but if that is carried and the Senate is to consider that bill, then I shall hope at least that, as the Lever bill refers only to extension work, it will be substituted for that part of Senate bill No. 3, because I believe that the Lever bill covers the extension department work in a much more satisfactory form than that work is covered under the Page bill. That can be done afterwards, if the Senate sees fit to substitute the Page bill for the Lever bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Or it can be done in conference.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to say in regard to that matter what I have said to the Senator from Georgia repeatedly, that the same purpose is aimed at, and if there is any way in which my bill could be amended to make good the purpose of his bill I would be very glad to have it done. I only ask that the fundamentals of the bill be maintained; and I shall hope that every Senator who can see any way to amend the bill in any detail will be prompt to move amendments to the substitute which I have offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] to the bill.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I desire to offer two amendments to the bill under consideration, House bill No. 22871. I ask to have them printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio offers two amendments, and asks that they be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. PAGE. I wish that they might be read, if they are brief.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 2 strike out the period and add the words:

And farm-management work.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. One moment, Mr. President. I think we would be glad to accept that amendment.

Mr. BURTON. I move its adoption.

Mr. GALLINGER. The substitute is pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment pending, the substitute offered by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This is an amendment to the original bill, and we have the right, of course, to perfect the original bill.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. We are trying to make the measure acceptable, and so far as I am concerned, I would be glad to accept the amendment of the Senator from Ohio at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks as it is an amendment to the original bill and not to the substitute that it is in order to perfect the original bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; I beg pardon. I had the two bills confounded. It is evidently in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 2 strike out the period and insert the words:

And farm-management work.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have no objection to this particular amendment. I had hoped the Senator from Vermont would ask that a day be fixed for the consideration of these two bills, and I also hope that all amendments presented now will be pending until such day as we may consider the bill.

Mr. PAGE. I had supposed the request to fix a time for the consideration of the bill should properly come from the Senator from Georgia, and I did not make that request.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am just waiting to confer with Senators.

Mr. GRONNA. I understand that the bill is up for consideration now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is now under consideration and open to amendment. An amendment is pending.

Mr. GRONNA. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think, perhaps, at the suggestion of other Senators, it had better be printed, and that all the amendments lie on the table for the present.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think the suggestion made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] an excellent one. For the first time many of us have come face to face with a situation that requires us to familiarize ourselves in absolute detail as to the difference between the two bills and the general purposes that they are to accomplish. It may be that there are some features in one that are excellent not contained in the other that we would desire to include in a composite bill if we had the opportunity, but if it is submitted now as a single question to take one or the other we may be deprived of that opportunity.

I think it a good idea to have all the amendments that are offered pending as well as the proposition to substitute the Page bill for the Lever bill, and when we come to deal with that on some fixed day we will then be prepared to know just exactly whether we want to substitute one bill or a part of it for the other, or take a part of one and a part of the other. It will contribute to a more intelligent disposition of the matter which everybody ought to feel an interest in, and I assume every Senator does feel an interest in it. Because of my own deficiencies in that respect, and I assume others are in the same fix that I am, I quite earnestly hope that it will be the pleasure of the Senate to agree to the suggestion made by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. PAGE. I ask that the second amendment, submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The second amendment, submitted by the Senator from Ohio, will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of section 9:

And he shall have authority to coordinate the extension work contemplated in this act with the agricultural demonstration work now being conducted by the United States Department of Agriculture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, this amendment will be printed and lie on the table for consideration with the substitute and the original bill. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

DEBORAH A. GRIFFIN AND MARY J. GRIFFIN.

Mr. JONES. While Senators are conferring with reference to the bill under consideration, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate consider the bill (S. 7785) confirming titles of Deborah A. Griffin and Mary J. Griffin, and for other purposes. It is purely a local measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. CULBERSON. From what committee does that bill come?

Mr. JONES. From the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 4, after the word "allotment," to insert "in accordance with the provisions of the act of July 4, 1884 (23 Stat. L., 79)," and on page 2, line 2, after the name "Mary J. Griffin," to insert "and trust patent issue thereon under the provisions of the act of March 8, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 55)," so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to make an allotment, in accordance with the provisions of the act of July 4, 1884 (23 Stat. L., 79), of not more than 200 acres of land within the diminished Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, for the benefit of the heirs of Que-lock-us-soma, deceased, Moses agreement allottee No. 35, jointly, in lieu of the portion of the Moses agreement allotment No. 35 embraced within the patented homestead entries of Deborah A. Griffin and Mary J. Griffin, and trust patent issue thereon under the provisions of the act of March 8, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 55).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 13, after the word "quarter," to insert "of the southwest quarter," and in line 18, after the word "allotment," to strike out "for" and insert "of," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the patent in fee heretofore issued in the name of Deborah A. Griffin, June 30, 1906, for lots 1 and 2 and the northeast quarter southeast quarter section 6, and lots 1 and 2, section 5, township 36 north, range 27 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent issued in the name of Mary J. Griffin, November 21, 1910, for the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter, and lots 5, 6, and 9 of section 31, township 37 north, range 27 east of the Willamette meridian, all situated in Okanogan County, Wash., be, and the same are hereby, confirmed and declared valid notwithstanding the previous allotment of a portion of this land under Moses agreement allotment No. 35.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LICENSES OF DRIVERS OF PASSENGER VEHICLES.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 22010) to amend the license law, approved July 1, 1902, with respect to licenses of drivers of passenger vehicles for hire.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION DEPARTMENT.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, one word, if the Senator from Utah will allow me——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I think now that it probably would be best to discontinue the consideration of the House bill for the creation of the extension divisions of the agricultural colleges; and, with the consent of the Senate, I will do so; but I desire to give notice that on Monday morning next, immediately after the morning business, I shall ask the Senate to again take up the bill for consideration, and at that time I shall endeavor to keep it before the Senate until a vote is had upon it. I do not ask unanimous consent, but simply give notice, so that Senators may all understand that the probability is that the bill will go forward on Monday to a vote, both upon the substitute and upon the original bill. I take this course in deference to the views of some of the Senators who are disposed to cooperate with me to give the bill a hearing on Monday and yet hesitate about making a unanimous-consent agreement.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I do not think we have a quorum.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let us have an executive session.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Let us first have a quorum. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Pending the motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bourne	Clapp	Curtis	Heiskell
Bradley	Clarke, Ark.	Dillingham	Hitchcock
Brandegee	Crane	Fletcher	Johnson, Me.
Bryan	Crawford	Gallinger	Johnston, Tex.

Martine, N. J.	Poindexter	Smoot

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Utah, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and three minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 18, 1913, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 17, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. W. R. Wedderspoon, D. D., of Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, we bow before Thee with reverence and with devotion. We realize our own weaknesses and our limitations, and we come to the God of wisdom and of power and of blessing and of guidance. We pray that Thou wilt peculiarly bless these, Thy servants, this day as they meet here together in deliberation. Give them a portion of the wisdom that Thou Thyself dost contain. Grant Thy peculiar blessings to these in Thy presence and to their homes, and bless the Chaplain in his sickness, and all Members of the House who may be detained for the same reason to-day.

Hear us for all the high interests that dominate and control us. Bless our own land and all in authority over us, from the one who sits in the chief place to the lowest in life's affairs; and all who have positions of trust, may they seek to live in Thy sight and move in Thy fear. Hear us for our own blessed land, and for the lands of the earth, and hasten the time when men everywhere will be found before Thee clothed in their right mind and dwelling as brothers everywhere. We ask for the pardon of every transgression in the name of our Lord and Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman to withhold his point of order until a few small matters may be disposed of.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, I will withhold the point of order for the present.

EUGENE C. BONNIWELL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has in his possession two communications. One of them purports to be a notice of contest by Eugene C. Bonniwell against Mr. Butler, of the seventh Pennsylvania district. On examination of the document, however, it turns out not to be a notice of contest but to be something more in the nature of a memorial to this House, setting forth that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] ought to be expelled from the House. The Chair also has a copy of the reply of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], and without consuming any more time the Chair refers both papers to the Committee on Elections No. 1.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

H. R. 26680. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7515. An act for the relief of Col. Richard H. Wilson, Fourteenth Infantry, United States Army;

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

EMANCIPATION ACT CELEBRATION.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations I report back Senate bill 180, providing for the celebration of the semicentennial anniversary of the act of emancipation, and for other purposes, and move that it be referred to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House on this proposition.

The SPEAKER. The motion itself is not debatable. The gentleman from Alabama has asked unanimous consent to address the House. For how long?

Mr. HEFLIN. For 10 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that if the gentleman desires to address the House he also ask that some one on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations be granted the same privilege.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, if some one from the Committee on Appropriations would like to address the House, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask the introducer of the measure to tell us just what are the purposes of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I can not. The motion is not debatable unless unanimous consent is given by the House.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, let me put the proposition in this way, that seven and one-half minutes be given to me and that seven and one-half minutes be given to some member of the Committee on Appropriations, the time to be in control of the chairman of that committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Pennsylvania made the point of no quorum, and that is a right which the Chair feels very much like reserving.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Alabama had better withhold his request for the present, because I shall insist upon the point of order unless he does. There are some very important matters pending, which may be called up at any time, and I think there should be a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. This matter is not debatable.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, Mr. Speaker, I object to the request of the gentleman, and make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 72, noes 5.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 279 Members answered to their names, a quorum. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, there is a motion pending.

The SPEAKER. The motion pending is for a change of reference.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] may have five minutes and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] may have five minutes in which to address the House on this motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] may each have five minutes to address the House on this change of reference. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I would just inquire if those gentlemen desire this time to make a statement?

The SPEAKER. Yes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be read in my time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 180) providing for the celebration of the semicentennial anniversary of the act of emancipation, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that the Semicentennial American Emancipation Exposition Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Georgia, has made provision for an exposition to be held during the year 1913, to illustrate the history, progress, and present condition of the Negro race, and to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the proclamation of emancipation by President Lincoln, on the 1st day of January, 1863, and that the said corporation has raised and secured money or property to the amount of not less than $50,000 for the purposes of such exposition, the President is authorized and respectfully requested to make proclamation of the time and place and purpose of such exposition and celebration and of such other information in relation thereto as he may deem expedient.

SEC. 2. That in furtherance of the object set forth in section 1 of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250,000, to be expended under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and upon vouchers to be approved by him.

SEC. 3. That the location, plan and scope, designs for buildings, provisions for public health and comfort, and rules for the conduct of the business and affairs of the exposition shall be subject to the approval and control of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, who shall exercise supervision over the exposition through such representatives of the department as he shall designate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for extending aid to an exposition to be held to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the Emancipation Proclamation. Under the rules of the House the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions has jurisdiction of all matters concerning expositions, excepting revenue and appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations on consideration of this bill believed that before it would be justified in recommending an appropriation of $250,000 to assist an exposition company which has only to raise $50,000 some investigation should be made by the committee most familiar with, and which, under the rules of the House, has control of such matters, in order to determine how much, if any, aid should be rendered and what safeguards, if any, should be placed in the bill.

Not desiring to encroach upon the jurisdiction of other committees, the Committee on Appropriations directed me to report back the bill and to make the motion, which is now pending, to refer it to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

Mr. Speaker, at various times there seems to have been an impression that the Committee on Appropriations desires to usurp the functions of other committees. During my service at the head of that committee it has endeavored, as far as possible, to distribute the work of the House in order that no committee will be deprived of any of its functions because of the activities of the Committee on Appropriations. I respectfully submit that in this instance the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions should be given an opportunity to perform its duties in accordance with the rules of the House. The object of the bill I believe to be most commendable; yet, because of the necessity of taking such precautions as would ordinarily be taken in legislation, the committee asks the House to make this reference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] is recognized for five minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, this unselfish and generous conduct on the part of the Committee on Appropriations has touched me deeply.

I must apologize for an impression that I have had regarding that committee. I have mistaken the zeal and jealous care with which the members of that committee have guarded its jurisdictional bounds. I had thought that when that committee once laid its hands on anything in the way of a bill it would never give its consent to release its hold in behalf of another committee claiming jurisdiction, and I have been of the opinion that in no instance would the Committee on Appropriations of its own motion deliver over to another committee for consideration a bill once in the sacred precincts of its jurisdiction—so unanimously and magnanimously as it has in referring to my committee this "emancipation" bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I have done the committee an injustice, and I hasten to apologize. [Laughter.] I am glad to make this acknowledgment and I desire to express my appreciation for this unasked for, unselfish, and generous action on the part of the Committee on Appropriations. [Laughter.] Mr. Speaker, if I should live until my head is as white as a Norwegian rat's back I could never make my gratitude to these gentlemen fully understood. [Laughter and applause.] On the tablets of my memory I shall write their names in letters that can not be obliterated. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, if the House in its wisdom ratifies the action of the Committee on Appropriations in delivering this bill over to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, I shall cheerfully acquiesce in that decision. I am chairman of that committee and I am reminded of the fellow who went half shot, uninvited, and unannounced into a ballroom on the second floor where the dance was on in full swing. He whirled in the maze of the misty dance until two able-bodied men seized him and escorted him to the door and hurled him down the stairway, bumping and bruising his head against the sidewalk. He arose, pulled himself together, and gazed for a moment at the angry gentlemen at the top of the stairway and said, "Gentlemen, you can fool some people, but you can't fool me. I know why you throwed me down from up thar. You throwed me down from up thar because you didn't want me up thar." [Loud applause and laughter.]

I am reminded of another story, Mr. Speaker. A gentleman owned a piece of land of 120 acres—hilly, rocky, and rough. He said he could work one side as well as the other, that it hung up like a slate. [Laughter.] He met a gentleman in the road with a yoke of steers, and he said, "I will give you 60 acres of land for your steers." He said, "Good." They went to a justice of the peace to make the deed to the land, and the man who owned the land had forgotten the name of the fellow who owned the steers, and the justice did not know it, so when they reached the place in the deed where it says, "I bargain, sell, and convey," he said to the fellow, "Write your name here." He said, "I can not write." Then the land man whispered to the justice and stood back behind the door and laughed. He went his way rejoicing, and when he reached his home he was still laughing, and his sister said, "What is the matter?" He said, "I gave a fellow 60 acres of land for these steers, and when I went to make the deed I found that he could not read and write, and I put the whole 120 acres off on him." [Applause and laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the gentleman be allowed five minutes additional time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] moves that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] have five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman whether this is more important than transacting business?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. I want only two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, this too generous conduct on the part of this Appropriations Committee reminds me of another thing. I have read the beautiful story of two brothers, one of whom was a man with a family—a wife and several children—and the other was an old bachelor. These brothers had wheat fields on opposite sides of the road, and one moonlight night the old bachelor had reasoned in his heart that the brother with the family needed more wheat than he did, and he was down there moving shocks of wheat out of his field across the road into his brother's field. At the same time a little farther up the road the brother who had the family was moving shocks of wheat out of his field across the road into his brother's field, reasoning after this fashion that his brother was an old bachelor and had no family to comfort and make him happy, and he needed more of this world's goods for that reason. They happened to meet, and each fell upon the neck of the other expressing love and gratitude for the generosity displayed. [Laughter.]

I have not discovered any member of my committee bearing gifts and meeting gentlemen of the Appropriations Committee as they came bearing aloft this kindly gift to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions. [Laughter.] Some of the members of this committee may feel like falling on the neck of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations—not, however, for the same purpose that the brothers fell on each other's neck. [Applause and laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, having submitted these serious observations for the consideration of the House, I stand ready to accept its judgment and do its will regarding this re-referred bill. [Loud applause and laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to change the reference of the Senate bill from the Committee on Appropriations to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

The motion was agreed to.

THE LATE SENATOR WILLIAM P. FRYE.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to present an order for memorial services.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. GUERNSEY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That Sunday, the 9th day of February, 1913, at 12 o'clock, be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public services of Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE, late a Senator from the State of Maine.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Maine that the words "at 12 o'clock" will have to be stricken out there. Memorial services for another have already been ordered for that hour. Without objection, the words "at 12 o'clock" will be stricken out.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the order as amended.

The order was agreed to.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERLEY, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 28186) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report (No. 1345), ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserves all points of order on the bill.

AMERICAN HOSPITAL OF PARIS.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill (S. 6380) to incorporate the American Hospital of Paris be taken from the Speaker's table, and that the House agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] asks that Senate bill 6380 be taken from the Speaker's table, and that the House agree to the conference requested by the Senate. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 6380) to incorporate the American Hospital of Paris.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the House agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman what is the Senate amendment?

Mr. CLAYTON. The Senate amendment lengthens the time. The time limit for the existence of this charter was 50 years in the bill as it passed the House. The Senate has lengthened it to 75 years.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House agree to the conference asked by the Senate on that bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following conferees, whose names the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CLAYTON, Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia, Mr. STERLING.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on Senate bill 3175, an act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States, and ask for the adoption of the report of the conference committee.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SABATH. As a member of the conference committee making the report who disagrees with the majority of the conferees, I desire to know whether I have the right to go on record as dissenting and protesting against this report? What I mean is as to going on record on the report that has been submitted.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection, but if I recollect the rules correctly a minority member of the managers on the part of the House has no right to make a supplementary report. That is my recollection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, may I ask, as a parliamentary inquiry, how much time will be permitted for the discussion of this report

The SPEAKER. That is not exactly a parliamentary inquiry. The House determines that. The Chair is of the impression that a minority Member, under the rules or precedents, can not file a minority report, although the Chair recollects that he himself, as a member of a conference committee, threatened to do it once on a very serious question.

Mr. MANN. I think I have never known minority views to be filed on a conference report during my service.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that he investigated that matter some years ago, because he was on a conference and there was a very bitterly contested proposition, and the present occupant of the chair then threatened to file a minority report. But the present occupant of the chair finally got what he wanted into the conference report and did not have to do that. He investigated the authorities as best he could at that time and found out that he could not make a minority report under the rules and precedents.

Mr. SABATH. I am in an unlike position, Mr. Speaker, in that I have not succeeded in getting all that I wanted in the conference report, though I have got everything else that I did not want.

The SPEAKER. The last part of the Chair's statement applies to that.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, there is a direct ruling on the question——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman need not read it. The Chair rules that way. Of course, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] does not sign the conference report, that shows prima facie that he is against it

Mr. SABATH. But I submit, Mr. Speaker, that that does not show that I am opposed to the report.

The SPEAKER. The remarks of the gentleman here this morning show that very conclusively. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], the chairman of the committee, whether he has arranged for the control of the time on the part of those who are opposed to the conference report?

Mr. BURNETT. I think in view of the pressure of other business we ought not to consume more than the hour which, I believe, is usually allowed in these cases, under the rule.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It happens that on this side of the House I am the only member of the committee who is opposed to the report in some particulars.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman means that he is the only member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization on that side who is opposed?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes. A number of gentlemen desire to speak in opposition to the report, which contains 24 pages of new matter that has never been considered by the House. As the bill left the House there was about a page and a half of printed matter upon which the House had acted. Now the conference committee returns with a recommendation involving 24 pages in fine italic print of new matter, which has been considered only by the conferees. It seems to me the gentleman ought to permit the discussion of this new matter, because it is of vital importance to a vast number of people in this country.

Mr. SABATH. Let me correct the gentleman. There are 59 pages of new matter that has not been considered by the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can not the gentleman agree to give a little more time to those who would like to speak on some phases of this report that have not been considered in the House at all?

The SPEAKER. The House itself determines the question of the length of debate on a conference report. Under the rule the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] will have an hour if he wants to use it, and he can move the previous question at any time within that hour. If he fails to do that, then any other gentleman who can get recognition from the Chair has an hour, and so on, ad infinitum. If the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] makes the motion for the previous question, and other gentlemen have not had as much time as they want, they have the privilege of voting his motion for the previous question down if there are enough of them to do it.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and indorsed by his colleague from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] regarding the large amount of new matter injected into the report that was not in the bill as it passed the House, I desire now to move—and I have the motion in writing—that consideration of this conference report be postponed for one week, until next Friday, January 24. I believe that motion is in order.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman will remember that next Friday is pension day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] has the floor.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BURNETT. I have not yielded for any motion.

Mr. MANN. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that no one has the floor yet. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] has called up the conference report, and unless some one makes a motion—that can not be made yet—it is the duty of the Chair to have the conference report laid before the House and read.

The SPEAKER. Of course that is the proper course of procedure.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I certainly had the floor, and these remarks are coming out of my time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not retain the floor. All he does is to call up the conference report. He has the right to call it up, unless the question of consideration is raised, and then I think the Chair should direct that the conference report be read to the House.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly what the Chair was going to do.

Mr. CANNON. And the proper time to raise the question of consideration or to move to postpone to a day certain is before the beginning of the reading of the conference report.

Mr. MANN. After it has been reported and read, I take it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A moment ago, in answer to my question, the Speaker stated that the matter of the time for discussion was one to be determined by the House. It was then upon my mind to make a motion that a definite time be fixed for debate, but the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL] made a motion that there be a postponement of the consideration of the conference report until a day certain. I ask the Speaker now whether the question is for the House or whether the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] has the floor? If the gentleman from Alabama has the floor, that precludes it.

The SPEAKER. No Member has the floor until the report is read, and the Clerk will read it.

Mr. CANNON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. After the report is read it will be proper, if any Member desires to do so, to raise the question of consideration?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CANNON. And not until that time to move to postpone to a day certain?

Mr. MANN. If he got the floor to make the motion.

The SPEAKER. After the report is read, then the question of consideration can be raised and also any of the motions that are permissible by the rule.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Is it not also true, if, after the question of consideration is voted on, the gentleman moves to postpone to a day certain, the gentleman from Alabama can take the question away from him by moving the previous question at once as a motion of higher precedence than a motion to postpone?

Mr. MANN. I think that question ought not to be answered until it is reached.

The SPEAKER. The motion for the previous question is next to the highest motion to be made in the House.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. In that case does the Chair think there will be 40 minutes' debate after the previous question is moved and carried?

The SPEAKER. On any question where there has been no debate if the previous question is ordered there is 40 minutes debate.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Then there would be no hardship done if the gentleman moved a postponement——

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, Mr. Speaker, that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is not a parliamentary inquiry, and the Chair will not pass upon it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, my reason for asking the question was to know what rights the Members of the House had. I do not want to see those rights sacrificed. There is a general complaint that this long bill is reported here for the first time, a report that I have not read myself, and I would like to know the proper time, first, for consideration, and, second, when a motion would be in order to postpone to a day certain, not to antagonize the consideration of the conference report, but to give the House an opportunity to look into it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state his view upon the matter. The first thing to do is to read the report so that Members may be informed as to what is attempted to be done. Anyone can raise the question of consideration. If consideration is determined on, then any of the motions that are permissible to be made, for instance, to postpone to a day certain, and so forth, will be in order, and the gentleman from Alabama will have a right to move the previous question, and there will be 40 minutes' debate, provided nobody debates it beforehand.

Mr. HAMILL. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMILL. If the motion to postpone to a day certain is made, will that entitle the maker of the motion to 40 minutes' time in which to debate the motion?

The SPEAKER. No; the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], for instance, moves the previous question, and that gives 40 minutes' debate, provided nobody debates it before the motion is made. Naturally the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] would be entitled to 20 minutes of that time, as he seems to be the chief one in opposition.

Mr. HAMILL. He would move the previous question on the motion to postpone to a day certain and not shutting off debate on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. It would be 40 minutes' debate on the conference report.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, section 4 of Rule XVI says that a motion to postpone to a day certain is to be decided without debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Georgia is mistaken about the interpretation of that rule.

The rule is:

When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but to adjourn, to lay on the table, for the previous question (which motion shall be decided without debate), to postpone to a day certain.

And so forth. The motions to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to amend are debatable.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, another parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. If the gentleman from New Jersey makes a motion to postpone and subsequently, at once, the gentleman from Alabama moves the previous question, does the gentleman's motion take precedence, although it is made subsequent to the motion to postpone?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the Chair mean by that that the motion for the previous question excludes the motion to postpone to a day certain?

The SPEAKER. No; that is the very question he is going to move the previous question on.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman's motion seems to exclude the motion to postpone.

The SPEAKER. It is the motion to postpone that the gentleman proposes to order the previous question on.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, under the rule that says "which several motions shall have precedence in the foregoing order," would it not be in order, after a motion to postpone is made, to move the previous question on the conference report? That was the query that I understand was submitted.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. That is my query. Otherwise, there is no point in giving precedence under the rule.

Mr. MANN. I think the rule is quite plain, but I do not see why the Chair should be called upon to decide all of these things in advance on hypothetical propositions which may never arise.

The SPEAKER. The Chair agrees with the gentleman about that.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it is a very important question. I have always believed that that rule was unnecessary if the only question was who was active enough and vociferous enough to get on his feet first. The very purpose of the rule is that in case some one makes a motion of inferior preference, to wit, the motion to postpone the conference report, then somebody else may move a motion of superior preference, to wit, the previous question on the conference report.

Mr. MANN. It is too plain for argument.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will rule upon that, although it is out of time. The Chair does not believe that to move the previous question on the motion to postpone would automatically or in any other way order the previous question on the conference report itself. It seems to the Chair that that proposition is not tenable.

Mr. MANN. But supposing instead of moving the previous question on the motion to postpone the gentleman moves the previous question on the adoption of the conference report. It seems to me that under the rule he clearly has that right.

The SPEAKER. Then what becomes of the motion to postpone?

Mr. MANN. If the previous question is ordered on the conference report, that ends it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. It goes out. The motion of superior preference takes its place.

Mr. MANN. If the previous question on the conference report is not ordered, then the motion to postpone comes before the House.

The SPEAKER. Provided the question of consideration is determined so that the conference report shall be considered, then the motion to postpone to a day certain is in order. A motion to order the previous question on that motion can then be made. That does not, in the opinion of the Chair, carry with it the conference report. If the House determines to consider the conference report, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL] to make his motion to postpone. Then he will recognize the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] to move the previous question.

Mr. HAMILL. On what?

The SPEAKER. On the motion to postpone.

Mr. MANN. And, Mr. Speaker, if the Chair is making a ruling upon it, allow me to call attention to the rule. If consideration is ordered, then the conference report is before the House on a presumed motion to adopt the report, which is put without being made. Under the rules a motion to postpone would be in order, or a motion to amend is in order, and a motion to refer is in order. All three of them might be made if the previous question is not ordered on the conference report, but they are to be put in the order in which they have precedence.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. MANN. If you adopt a motion to postpone to a day certain, although you may have pending a motion to refer, you would dispose of the motion to refer by the adoption of the motion to postpone to a day certain. In the same way a motion for the previous question, having precedence over a motion to postpone, can be offered, and if the previous question be adopted—that is, Shall the main question be now put?—if agreed to, that disposes itself of the motion to postpone.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman a question for information. Some gentleman makes a motion to postpone to a day certain. The previous question is moved on that motion. Does the gentleman from Illinois think it would be fair to the House to construe that motion as being a motion on the previous question on the bill?

Mr. MANN. Certainly not; but suppose, instead of moving the previous question on the motion to postpone, the gentleman moves the previous question on the motion to adopt the conference report, which has priority under the rules over the motion to postpone; having priority, it is in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman another question: Was this privilege of making the motion to postpone put in the rule for amusement, or was it put in there to give somebody a right in the House?

Mr. MANN. There is a right to move to postpone as long as the previous question is not demanded or is not operating.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman any authority on that?

Mr. MANN. The rule itself says that, Mr. Speaker. I suggest, instead of the Speaker endeavoring to determine the matter at this time, that the report be read in the meantime, during which time the Speaker will have an opportunity to look into the question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I call for the reading of the conference report.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call attention to a ruling upon the point suggested by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that that go over until we get this report read.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I call for a reading of the report.

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1340).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the bill (S. 3175) entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States" having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Strike out all of said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the word 'alien' wherever used in this act shall include any person not a native born or naturalized citizen of the United States, but this definition shall not be held to include Indians not taxed or citizens of the islands under the jurisdiction of the United States. That the term 'United States' as used in the title as well as in the various sections of this act shall be construed to mean the United States and any waters, territory, or other place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, except the Isthmian Canal Zone; but if any alien shall leave the Canal Zone and attempt to enter any other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, nothing contained in this act shall be construed as permitting him to enter under any other conditions than those applicable to all aliens. That the term 'seaman' as used in this act shall include every person signed on the ship's articles and employed in any capacity on board any vessel arriving in the United States from any foreign part or place.

"That this act shall be enforced in the Philippine Islands by officers of the General Government thereof designated by appropriate legislation of said Government.

"SEC. 2. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of $5 for every alien, including alien seamen regularly admitted as provided in this act, entering the United States. The said tax shall be paid to the collector of customs of the port of customs district to which said alien shall come, or, if there be no collector at such port or district, then to the collector nearest thereto, by the master, agent, owner, or consignee of the vessel, transportation line, or other conveyance or vehicle bringing such alien to the United States, or by the alien himself if he does not come by a vessel, transportation line, or other conveyance or vehicle. The tax imposed by this section shall be a lien upon the vessel or other vehicle of carriage or transportation bringing such aliens to the United States, and shall be a debt in favor of the United States against the owner or owners of such vessel or other vehicle, and the payment of such tax may be enforced by any legal or equitable remedy. That the said tax shall not be levied on account of aliens who shall enter the United States after an uninterrupted residence of at least one year, immediately preceding such entrance, in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, or the Republic of Mexico, nor on account of otherwise admissible residents of any possession of the United States, nor on account of aliens in transit through the United States, nor upon aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory: Provided, That the Commissioner General of Immigration, under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, by agreement with transportation lines, as provided in section 23 of this act, may arrange in some other manner for the payment of the tax imposed by this section upon any or all aliens seeking admission from foreign contiguous territory: Provided further, That said tax, when levied upon aliens entering the Philippine Islands, shall be paid into the treasury of said islands, to be expended for the benefit of such islands: Provided further, That in the cases of aliens applying for admission from foreign contiguous territory and rejected, the head tax collected shall upon application be refunded to the alien: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to aliens arriving in Guam or Hawaii; but if any such alien, not having become a citizen of the United States, shall later arrive at any port or place of the United States on the North American Continent the provisions of this section shall apply.

While on duty such surgeons shall wear the prescribed uniform of their service and shall be provided with first-class accommodations on such vessel at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act. For every violation of this section any person, including any transportation company, owning or operating the vessel in which such violation occurs shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the next United States port of arrival is located the sum of $1,000 for each and every day during which such violation continues, the term "violation" to include the refusal of any person having authority so to do to permit any such immigrant inspector, matron, or surgeon to be received on board such vessel, as provided in this section, and also the refusal of the master or commanding officer of any such vessel to permit the inspections and visits of any such surgeon, as provided in this section, and no vessel shall be granted clearance papers pending the determination of the question of the liability of such fine, or while it remains unpaid, nor shall such fine be remitted or refunded: Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of all such questions upon the deposit of a sum sufficient to cover such fine and costs, such sum to be named by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

be punishable as provided in section 14 of this act: Provided, That in the case of vessels making regular trips to ports of the United States the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, may, when expedient, arrange for the delivery of such lists of outgoing aliens at a later date: Provided further, That it shall be the duty of immigration officials to record the following information regarding every resident alien and citizen leaving the United States by way of the Canadian or Mexican borders for permanent residence in a foreign country: Name, age, and sex; whether married or single; calling or occupation; whether able to read; nationality; country of birth; country of which citizen or subject; race; last permanent residence in the United States; intended future permanent residence; and time and port of last arrival in the United States; and, if a United States citizen, whether native born or naturalized.

To each alien or head of a family shall be given a ticket on which shall be written his name, a number or letter designating the list in which has name, etc., is contained, and his number on said list, for convenience of identification on arrival. Each list or manifest shall be verified by the signature and the oath or affirmation of the master or commanding officer, or the first or second below him in command, taken before an immigration officer at the port of arrival, to the effect that he has caused the surgeon of said vessel sailing therewith to make a physical and oral examination of each of said aliens, and that from the report of said surgeon and from his own investigation he believes that no one of said aliens is of any of the classes excluded from admission into the United States by section 3 of this act, and that also according to the best of his knowledge and belief, the information in said lists or manifests concerning each of said aliens named therein is correct and true in every respect. That the surgeon of said vessel sailing therewith shall also sign each of said lists or manifests and make oath or affirmation in like manner before an immigration officer at the port of arrival, stating his professional experience and qualifications as a physician and surgeon, and that he has made a personal examination of each of the said aliens named therein, and that the said list or manifest, according to the best of his knowledge and belief, is full, correct, and true in all particulars relative to the mental and physical condition of said aliens. If no surgeon sails with any vessel bringing aliens, the mental and physical examinations and the verifications of the lists or manifests shall be made by some competent surgeon employed by the owners of the said vessels, and the manifests shall be verified by such surgeon before a United States consular officer.

"SEC. 14. That it shall be unlawful for the master or commanding officer of any vessel bringing aliens into or carrying aliens out of the United States to refuse or fail to deliver to the immigration officials the accurate and full manifests or statements or information regarding all aliens on board or taken on board such vessel required by this act, and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that there has been such a refusal or failure, or that the lists delivered are not accurate and full, such master or commanding officer shall pay to the collector of customs at the port of arrival or departure the sum of $10 for each alien concerning whom such accurate and full manifest or statement or information is not furnished, or concerning whom the manifest or statement or information is not prepared and sworn to as prescribed by this act. No vessel shall be granted clearance pending the determination of the question of the liability to the payment of such fine, or while it remains unpaid, nor shall such fine be remitted or refunded: Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of such question upon the deposit with the collector of customs of a sum sufficient to cover such fine.

"SEC. 15. That upon the arrival at a port of the United States of any vessel bringing aliens it shall be the duty of the proper immigration officials to go or to send competent assistants to the vessel and there inspect all such aliens, or said immigration officials may order a temporary removal of such aliens for examination at a designated time and place, but such temporary removal shall not be considered a landing, nor shall it relieve the transportation lines, masters, agents, owners, or consignees of the vessel upon which said aliens are brought to any port of the United States from any of the obligations which, in case such aliens remain on board, would, under the provisions of this act bind the said transportation lines, masters, agents, owners, or consignees: Provided, That where removal is made to premises owned or controlled by the United States, said transportation lines, masters, agents, owners, or consignees, and each of them shall, so long as detention there lasts, be relieved of responsibility for the safekeeping of such aliens. Whenever a temporary removal of aliens is made the transportation lines which brought them and the masters, owners, agents, and consignees of the vessel upon which they arrive shall pay all expenses of such removal and all expenses arising during subsequent detention, pending decision on the aliens' eligibility to enter the United States and until they are either allowed to land or returned to the care of the line or to the vessel which brought them, such expenses to include those of maintenance, medical treatment in hospital or elsewhere, burial in the event of death, and transfer to the vessel in the event of deportation, excepting only where they arise under the terms of any of the provisos of section 18 thereof. Any refusal or failure to comply with the provisions hereof to be punished in the manner specified in section 18 of this act.

"SEC. 16. That the physical and mental examination of all arriving aliens shall be made by medical officers of the United States Public Health Service who shall have had at least two years' experience in the practice of their profession since receiving the degree of doctor of medicine, and who shall certify, for the information of the immigration officers and the boards of special inquiry hereinafter provided for, any and all physical and mental defects or diseases observed by said medical officers in any such alien; or, should medical officers of the United States Public Health Service be not available, civil surgeons of not less than four years' professional experience may be employed in such emergency for such service, upon such terms as may be prescribed by the Commissioner General of Immigration, under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. Medical officers of the United States Public Health Service who have had especial training in the diagnosis of insanity and mental defect shall be detailed for duty or employed at all large ports of entry, and such medical officers shall be provided with suitable facilities for the detention and examination of all arriving aliens in whom insanity or mental defects is suspected, and the services of interpreters shall be provided for such examination. That the inspection, other than the physical and mental examination, of aliens, including those seeking admission or readmission to or the privilege of passing through or residing in the United States, and the examination of aliens arrested within the United States under this act, shall be conducted by immigrant inspectors, except as hereinafter provided in regard to boards of special inquiry. Immigrant inspectors are hereby authorized and empowered to board and search for aliens any vessel, railway car, conveyance, or vehicle in which they believe aliens are being brought into the United States. Said inspectors shall have power to adminster oaths and to take and consider evidence touching the right of any alien to enter, reenter, pass through, or reside in the United States, and where such action may be necessary, to make a written record of such evidence; and any person to whom such an oath has been administered under the provisions of this act, who shall knowingly or willfully give false evidence or swear to any false statement in any way affecting or in relation to the right of any alien to admission, or readmission to, or to pass through, or to reside in the United States shall be deemed guilty of perjury and be punished as provided by section 125 of the act approved March 4, 1909, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States." Any commissioner of immigration or inspector in charge shall also have power to require the attendance and testimony of witnesses before said inspectors and the production of books, papers, and documents touching the right of any alien to enter, reenter, reside in, or pass through the United States, and to that end may invoke the aid of any court of the United States, and any district court within the jurisdiction of which investigations are being conducted by an immigrant inspector may, in the event of neglect or refusal to respond to a subpœna issued by any commissioner of immigration or inspector in charge or refusal to testify before said immigrant inspector, issue an order requiring such person to appear before said immigrant inspector, produce books, papers, and documents is demanded, and testify; and any failure to obey such order of the court shall be punished by the court as a contempt thereof. That any person, including employees, officials, or agents of transportation companies, who shall assault, resist, prevent, impede, or interfere with any immigration official or employee in the performance of his duty under this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment for a term of not less than six months nor more than two years, or by a fine of not less than two hundred nor more than two thousand dollars; and any person who shall use any deadly or dangerous weapon in resisting any immigration official or employee in the performance of his duty shall be deemed guilty of a felony and shall on conviction thereof be punished by imprisonment for not less than 1 nor more than 10 years. Every alien who may not appear to the examining immigrant inspector at the port of arrival to be clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to land shall be detained for examination in relation thereto by a board of special inquiry. In the event of rejection by the board of special inquiry, in all cases where an appeal to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is permitted by this act, the alien shall be so informed and shall have the right to be represented by counsel or other advisor on such appeal. The decision of an immigrant inspector, if favorable to the admission of any alien, shall be subject to challenge by any other immigrant inspector, and such challenge shall operate to take the alien whose right to land is so challenged before a board of special inquiry for its investigation.

"SEC. 17. That boards of special inquiry shall be appointed by the commissioner of immigration or inspector in charge at the various ports of arrival as may be necessary for the prompt determination of all cases of immigrants detained at such ports under the provisions of the law. Each board shall consist of three members, who shall be selected from such of the immigrant officials in the service as the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, shall from time to time designate as qualified to serve on such boards. When in the opinion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor the maintenance of a permanent board of special inquiry for service at any sea or land border port is not warranted, regularly constituted boards may be detailed from other stations for temporary service at such port, or, if that be impracticable, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall authorize the creation of boards of special inquiry by the immigration officials in charge at such ports, and shall determine what Government officials or other persons shall be eligible for service on such boards. Such boards shall have authority to determine whether an alien who has been duly held shall be allowed to land or shall be deported. All hearings before such boards shall be separate and apart from the public. Such boards shall keep a complete permanent record of their proceedings and of all such testimony as may be produced before them; and the decision of any two members of a board shall prevail, but either the alien or any dissenting member of the said board may appeal through the commissioner of immigration at the port of arrival and the Commissioner General of Immigration to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the taking of such appeal shall operate to stay any action in regard to the final disposal of any alien whose case is so appealed until the receipt by the commissioner of immigration at the port of arrival of such decision, which shall be rendered solely upon the evidence adduced before the board of special inquiry. In every case where an alien is excluded from admission into the United States, under any law or treaty now existing or hereafter made, the decision of a board of special inquiry if adverse to the admission of such alien shall be final, unless reversed on appeal to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor: Provided, That the decision of a board of special inquiry, based upon the certificate of the examining medical officer, shall be final as to the rejection of aliens affected with tuberculosis in any form or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, or with any mental or physical disability which would bring such aliens within any of the classes excluded from admission to the United States under section 3 of this act.

"SEC. 18. That all aliens brought to this country in violation of law shall, if practicable, be immediately sent back, in accommodations of the same class in which they arrived, to the country whence they respectively came on the vessels bringing them. The cost of their maintenance while on land, as well as the expense of the return of such aliens, shall be borne by the owner or owners of the vessels on which they respectively came. That it shall be unlawful for any master, purser, person in charge, agent, owner, or consignee of any such vessel to refuse to receive back on board thereof, or on board of any other vessel owned or operated by the same interests, such aliens; or to fail to detain them thereon; or to refuse or fail to return them in the manner aforesaid to the foreign port from which they came; or to pay the cost of their maintenance while on land; or to make any charge for the return of any such alien; or to take any security from him for the payment of such charge; or to take any consideration to be returned in case the alien is landed; or knowingly to bring to the United States at any time within one year from the date of deportation any alien rejected or arrested and deported under any provision of this act, unless prior to reembarkation the Secretary of Commerce and Labor has consented that such alien shall reapply for admission, as required by section 3 hereof; and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that such master, purser, person in charge, agent, owner, or consignee has violated any of the foregoing provisions such master, purser, person in charge, agent, owner, or consignee shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located, or in which any vessel of the line may be found, the sum of $300 for each and every violation of any provision of this section; and no vessel shall have clearance from any port of the United States while any such fine is unpaid, nor shall such fine be remitted or refunded: Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of such question upon the deposit with the collector of customs of a sum sufficient to cover such fine. If the vessel by which any alien ordered deported came has left the United States and it is impracticable for any reason to deport the alien within a reasonable time by another vessel owned by the same interests, the cost of deportation may be paid by the Government and recovered by civil suit from any agent, owner, or consignee of the vessel: Provided further, That the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, may suspend, upon conditions to be prescribed by the Commissioner General of Immigration, the deportation of any alien found to have come in violation of any provision of this act if, in his judgment, the testimony of such alien is necessary on behalf of the United States Government in the prosecution of offenders against any provision of this act; and the cost of maintenance of any person so detained resulting from such suspension of deportation, and a witness fee in the sum of $1 per day for each day such person is so detained, may be paid from the appropriation for the enforcement of this act, or such alien may be released under bond, in the penalty of not less than $500, with security approved by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, conditioned that such alien shall be produced when required as a witness and for deportation. No alien certified, as provided in section 16 of this act, to be suffering from tuberculosis in any form, or from a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease other than one of quarantinable nature, shall be permitted to land for medical treatment thereof in any hospital in the United States, unless with the express permission of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor: Provided further, That upon the certificate of a medical officer of the United States Public Health Service to the effect that the health or safety of an insane alien would be unduly imperiled by immediate deportation, such alien may, at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act, be held for treatment until such time as such alien may, in the opinion of such medical officer, be safely deported: Provided further, That upon the certificate of a medical officer of the United States Public Health Service to the effect that a rejected alien is helpless from sickness, mental or physical disability, or infancy, if such alien is accompanied by another alien whose protection or guardianship is required by such rejected alien, such accompanying alien may also be excluded, and the master, agent, owner, or consignee of the vessel in which such alien and accompanying alien are brought shall be required to return said alien and accompanying alien in the same manner as vessels are required to return other rejected aliens.

"SEC. 19. That any alien, at any time within three years after entry, who shall enter the United States in violation of law; any alien who within three years after entry becomes a public charge from causes existing prior to the landing; except as hereinafter provided, any alien who is hereafter sentenced to imprisonment for a term of one year or more because of conviction in this country of a crime involving moral turpitude, committed within three years after the entry of the alien to the United States; any alien who shall be found an inmate of or connected with the management of a house of prostitution or practicing prostitution after such alien shall have entered the United States, or who shall receive, share in, or derive benefit from any part of the earnings of any prostitute; any alien who is employed by, in, or in connection with any house of prostitution or music or dance hall or other place of amusement or resort habitually frequented by prostitutes, or where prostitutes gather, or who in any way assists, protects, or promises to protect from arrest any prostitute; any alien who shall import or attempt to import any person for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; any alien who, after being excluded and deported or arrested and deported as a prostitute, or as a procurer, or as having been connected with the business of prostitution or importation for prostitution or other immoral purposes in any of the ways hereinbefore specified, shall return to and enter the United States; any alien convicted and imprisoned for a violation of any of the provisions of section 4 hereof; any alien, at any time within three years after entry, who shall enter the United States by water at any time or place other than as designated by immigration officials, or by land at any place other than one designated as a port of entry for aliens by the Commissioner General of Immigration, or at any time, not designated by immigration officials, shall, upon the warrant of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, be taken into custody and deported: Provided, That the provision of this section respecting the deportation of aliens convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude shall not apply to one who has been pardoned, nor shall such deportation be made or directed if the court sentencing such alien for such crime shall, at the time of imposing judgment or passing sentence, make a recommendation to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that such alien shall not be deported in pursuance of this act; nor shall any alien convicted as aforesaid be deported until after the termination of his imprisonment: Provided further, That the provisions of this section, with the exceptions hereinbefore noted, shall be applicable to the classes of aliens therein mentioned irrespective of the time of their entry into the United States. In every case where any person is ordered deported from the United States under the provisions of this act or of any law or treaty now existing, the decisions of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall be final.

"SEC. 20. That the deportation of aliens provided for in this act shall, at the option of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, be to the country whence they came or to the foreign port at which such aliens embarked for the United States; or, if such embarkation was for foreign contiguous territory, to the foreign port at which they embarked for such territory; or, if such aliens entered foreign contiguous territory from the United States and later entered the United States, or if such aliens are held by the country from which they entered the United States not to be subjects or citizens of such country, and such country refuses to permit their reentry, or imposes any condition upon permitting reentry, then to the country of which such aliens are subjects or citizens, or to the country in which they resided prior to entering the country from which they entered the United States. If effected at any time within five years after the entry of the alien, such deportation, including one-half of the entire cost of removal to the port of deportation, shall be at the expense of the contractor, procurer, or other person by whom the alien was unlawfully induced to enter the United States, or, if that can not be done, then the cost of removal to the port of deportation shall be at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act, and the deportation from such port shall be at the expense of the owner or owners of such vessels or transportation line by which such aliens, respectively, came; or, if that is not practicable, at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act. If such deportation is effected later than five years after the entry of the alien, or, if the deportation is made by reason of causes arising subsequent to entry, the cost thereof shall be payable from the appropriation for the enforcement of this act. A failure or refusal on the part of the masters, agents, owners, or consignees of vessels to comply with the order of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to take on board, guard safely, and transport to the destination specified any alien ordered to be deported under the provisions of this act shall be punished by the imposition of the penalties prescribed in section 18 of this act: Provided, That when in the opinion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor the mental or physical condition of such alien is such as to require personal care and attendance, he may employ a suitable person for that purpose, who shall accompany such alien to his or her final destination, and the expense incident to such service shall be defrayed in like manner. Pending the final disposal of the case of any alien so taken into custody he may be released under a bond in the penalty of not less than $500 with security approved by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, conditioned that such alien shall be produced when required for a hearing or hearings in regard to the charge upon which he has been taken into custody, and for deportation if he shall be found to be unlawfully within the United States.

"SEC. 21. That any alien liable to be excluded because likely to become a public charge or because of physical disability other than tuberculosis in any form or a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease may, if otherwise admissible, nevertheless be admitted in the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor upon the giving of a suitable and proper bond or undertaking, approved by said Secretary, in such amount and containing such conditions as he may prescribe, to the United States and to all States, Territories, counties, towns, municipalities, and districts thereof, holding the United States and all States, Territories, counties, towns, municipalities, and districts thereof harmless against such alien becoming a public charge. The admission of such alien shall be a consideration for the giving of such bond or undertaking. Suit may be brought thereon in the name and by the proper law officers either of the United States Government or of any State, Territory, District, county, town, or municipality in which such alien becomes a public charge.

"SEC. 22. That wherever an alien shall have taken up his permanent residence in this country, and shall have filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen, and thereafter shall send for his wife or minor children to join him, if said wife or any of said children shall be found to be affected with any contagious disorder, such wife or children shall be held, under such regulations as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall prescribe, until it shall be determined whether the disorder will be easily curable or whether they can be permitted to land without danger to other persons; and they shall not be either admitted or deported until such facts have been ascertained; and if it shall be determined that the disorder is easily curable and the husband or father or other responsible person is willing to bear the expense of the treatment, they may be accorded treatment in hospital until cured and then be admitted, or if it shall be determined that they can be permitted to land without danger to other persons, they may, if otherwise admissible, thereupon be admitted.

"SEC. 23. That the Commissioner General of Immigration shall perform all his duties under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. Under such direction he shall have charge of the administration of all laws relating to the immigration of aliens into the United States, and shall have the control, direction, and supervision of all officers, clerks, and employees appointed thereunder; he shall establish such rules and regulations, prescribe such forms of bond, reports, entries, and other papers, and shall issue from time to time such instructions, not inconsistent with law, as he shall deem best calculated for carrying out the provisions of this act and for protecting the United States and aliens migrating thereto from fraud and loss, and shall have authority to enter into contract for the support and relief of such aliens as may fall into distress or need public aid, and to remove to their native country, at any time within three years after entry, at the expense of the appropriations for the enforcement of this act, such as fall into distress or need public aid from causes arising subsequent to their entry and are desirous of being so removed; he shall prescribe rules for the entry and inspection of aliens along the borders of Canada and Mexico, so as not to unnecessarily delay, impede, or annoy persons in ordinary travel between the United States and said countries, and shall have power to enter into contracts with transportation lines for the said purpose; it shall be the duty of the Commissioner General of Immigration to detail officers of the Immigration Service from time to time as may be necessary, in his judgment, to secure information as to the number of aliens detained in the penal, reformatory, and charitable institutions (public and private) of the several States and Territories, the District of Columbia, and other territory of the United States and to inform the officers of such institutions of the provisions of law in relation to the deportation of aliens who have become public charges. He may, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, whenever in his judgment such action may be necessary to accomplish the purposes of this act, detail immigration officers, and also surgeons of the United States Public Health Service employed under this act for service in foreign countries. The duties of commissioners of immigration and other immigration officials in charge of districts, ports, or statons shall be of an administrative character, to be prescribed in detail by regulations prepared under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor: Provided, That for the purpose of making effective the provisions of this section relating to the protection of aliens from fraud and loss, and also the provisions of section 30 of this act, relating to the distribution of aliens, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall establish and maintain immigrant stations at such interior places as may be necessary, and, in the discretion of the said Secretary, aliens in transit from ports of landing to such interior stations shall be accompanied by immigrant inspectors.

"SEC. 24. That immigrant inspectors and other immigration officers, clerks, and employees shall hereafter be appointed and their compensation fixed and raised or decreased from time to time by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, upon the recommendation of the Commissioner General of Immigration and in accordance with the provisions of the civil-service act of January 16, 1883: Provided, That said Secretary, in the enforcement of that portion of this act which excludes contract laborers, may employ, without reference to the provisions of the said civil-service act, or to the various acts relative to the compilation of the official register, such persons as he may deem advisable and from time to time fix, raise, or decrease their compensation. He may draw annually from the appropriation for the enforcement of this act $50,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended for the salaries and expenses of persons so employed and for expenses incident to such employment; and the accounting officers of the Treasury shall pass to the credit of the proper disbursing officer expenditures from said sum without itemized account whenever the Secretary of Commerce and Labor certifies that an itemized account would not be for the best interests of the Government: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to alter the mode of appointing commissioners of immigration at the several ports of the United States as provided by the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 18, 1894, or the official status of such commissioners heretofore appointed.

"SEC. 25. That the district courts of the United States are hereby invested with full and concurrent jurisdiction of all causes, civil and criminal, arising under any of the provisions of this act. That it shall be the duty of the United States district attorney of the proper district to prosecute every such writ when brought by the United States under this act. Such prosecutions or suits may be instituted at any place in the United States at which the violation may occur or at which the person charged with such violation may be found. That no suit or proceeding for a violation of the provisions of this act shall be settled, compromised, or discontinued without the consent of the court in which it is pending, entered of record, with the reasons therefor.

"SEC. 26. That all exclusive privileges of exchanging money, transporting passengers or baggage, or keeping eating houses, and all other like privileges in connection with any United States immigrant station, shall be disposed of after public competition, subject to such conditions and limitations as the Commissioner General of Immigration, under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, may prescribe, and all receipts accruing from the disposal of such exclusive privileges shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States. No intoxicating liquors shall be sold at any such immigrant station.

"SEC. 27. That for the preservation of the peace and in order that arrests may be made for crimes under the laws of the States and Territories of the United States where the various immigrant stations are located, the officers in charge of such stations, as occasion may require, shall admit therein the proper State and municipal officers charged with the enforcement of such laws, and for the purpose of this section the jurisdiction of such officers and of the local courts shall extend over such stations.

"SEC. 28. That any person who knowingly aids or assists any anarchist or any person who believes in or advocates the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or who disbelieves in or is opposed to organized government, or all forms of law, or who advocates the assassination of public officials, or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government, or who advocates or teaches the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character, to enter the United States, or who connives or conspires with any person or persons to allow, procure, or permit any such anarchist or person aforesaid to enter therein shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

"SEC. 29. That the President of the United States is authorized in the name of the Government of the United States, to call, in his discretion, an international conference, to assemble at such point as may be agreed upon, or to send special commissioners to any foreign country, for the purpose of regulating by international agreement, subject to the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, the immigration of aliens to the United States; of providing for the mental, moral, and physical examination of such aliens by American consuls or other officers of the United States Government at the ports of embarkation, or elsewhere; of securing the assistance of foreign Governments in their own territories to prevent the evasion of the laws of the United States governing immigration to the United States; of entering into such international agreements as may be proper to prevent the immigration of aliens who, under the laws of the United States, are or may be excluded from entering the United States, and of regulating any matters pertaining to such immigration.

"SEC. 30. That there shall be maintained a division of information in the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization; and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall provide such clerical and other assistance as may be necessary. It shall be the duty of said division to promote a beneficial distribution of aliens admitted into the United States among the several States and Territories desiring immigration. Correspondence shall be had with the proper officials of the States and Territories, and said division shall gather from all available sources useful information regarding the resources, products, and physical characteristics of each State and Territory, and shall publish such information in different languages and distribute the publications among all admitted aliens at the immigrant stations of the United States and to such other persons as may desire the same. When any State or Territory appoints and maintains an agent or agents to represent it at any of the immigrant stations of the United States, such agents shall, under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner General of Immigration, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, have access to aliens who have been admitted to the United States for the purpose of presenting, either orally or in writing, the special inducements offered by such State or Territory to aliens to settle therein. While on duty at any immigrant station such agents shall be subject to all the regulations prescribed by the Commissioner General of Immigration, who, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, may, for violation of any such regulations, deny to the agent guilty of such violation any of the privileges herein granted.

"SEC. 31. That any person, including the owner, agent, consignee, or master of any vessel arriving in the United States from any foreign port or place, who shall knowingly sign on the ship's articles, or bring to the United States as one of the crew of such vessel, any alien, with intent to permit such alien to land in the United States in violation of the laws and treaties of the United States regulating the immigration of aliens, or who shall falsely and knowingly represent to the immigration authorities at the port of arrival that any such alien is a bona fide member of the crew, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding $5,000, for which sum the said vessel shall be liable and may be seized and proceeded against by way of libel in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the offense.

"SEC. 32. That no alien excluded from admission into the United States by any law or treaty of the United States regulating the immigration of aliens, and employed on board any vessel arriving in the United States from any foreign port or place, shall be permitted to land in the United States, except temporarily for medical treatment, or pursuant to regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor providing for the ultimate removal or deportation of such alien from the United States, and the negligent failure of the owner, agent, consignee, or master of such vessel to detain on board any such alien after notice in writing by the immigration officer in charge at the port of arrival, and to deport such alien, if required by such immigration officer or by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, shall render such owner, agent, consignee, or master liable to a penalty not exceeding $1,000, for which sum the said vessel shall be liable, and may be seized and proceeded against by way of libel in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the offense.

"SEC. 33. That it shall be unlawful and be deemed a violation of the preceding section to pay off or discharge any alien employed on board any vessel arriving in the United States from any foreign port or place, unless duly admitted pursuant to the laws and treaties of the United States regulating the immigration of aliens: Provided, That in case any such alien intends to reship on board any other vessel bound to any foreign port or place he shall be allowed to land for the purpose of so reshipping, and may be paid off, discharged, and permitted to remove his effects, anything in such laws or treaties or in this act to the contrary notwithstanding, provided due notice of such proposed action first be given to the principal immigration officer in charge at the port of arrival.

"SEC. 34. That any alien seaman who shall desert his vessel in a port of the United States or who shall land therein contrary to the provisions of this act shall be deemed to be unlawfully in the United States and shall, at any time within three years thereafter, upon the warrant of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, be taken into custody and brought before a board of special inquiry for examination as to his qualifications for admission to the United States, and if not admitted said alien seaman shall be deported at the expense of the appropriation for this act as provided in section 20 of this act.

"SEC. 35. That it shall be unlawful for any vessel carrying passengers between a port of the United States and a port of a foreign country, upon arrival in the United States, to have on board employed thereon any alien afflicted with idiocy, imbecility, insanity, epilepsy, tuberculosis in any form, or a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, if it appears to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, from an examination made by a medical officer of the United States Public Health Service, and is so certified by such officer, that any such alien was so afflicted at the time he was shipped or engaged and taken on board such vessel and that the existence of such affliction might have been detected by means of a competent medical examination at such time; and for every such alien so afflicted on board any such vessel at the time of arrival the owner, agent, consignee, or master thereof shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located the sum of $25; and no vessel shall be granted clearance pending the determination of the question of the liability to the payment of such fine and while it remains unpaid: Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of such question upon the deposit of a sum sufficient to cover such fine: Provided further, That such fine may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, be mitigated or remitted.

"SEC. 36. That upon arrival of any vessel in the United States from any foreign port or place it shall be the duty of the owner, agent, consignee, or master thereof to deliver to the principal immigration officer in charge of the port of arrival lists containing the names of all aliens employed on such vessel, stating the positions they respectively hold in the ship's company, when and where they were respectively shipped or engaged, and specifying those to be paid off and discharged in the port of arrival, or lists containing so much of such information as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall by regulation prescribe; and after the arrival of any such vessel it shall be the duty of such owner, agent, consignee, or master to report to such immigration officer, in writing, as soon as discovered, all cases in which any such alien has deserted the vessel, giving a description of such alien, together with any information likely to lead to his apprehension; and before the departure of any such vessel it shall be the duty of such owner, agent, consignee, or master to deliver to such immigration officer a further list containing the names of all alien employees who were not employed thereon at the time of the arrival, but who will leave port thereon at the time of her departure, and also the names of those, if any, who have been paid off and discharged, and of those, if any, who have deserted or landed or been duly admitted; and in case of the failure of such owner, agent, consignee, or master so to deliver either of the said lists of such aliens arriving and departing, respectively, or so to report such cases of desertion or landing, such owner, agent, consignee, or master shall, if required by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located the sum of $10 for each alien concerning whom correct lists are not delivered or a true report is not made as above required; and no such vessel shall be granted clearance pending the determination of the question of the liability to the payment of such fine and, in the event such fine is imposed, while it remains unpaid, nor shall such fine be remitted or refunded: Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of such question upon deposit of a sum sufficient to cover such fine.

"SEC. 37. The word 'person' as used in this act shall be construed to import both the plural and the singular, as the case may be, and shall include corporations, companies, and associations. When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any director, officer, agent, or employee of any corporation, company, or association acting within the scope of his employment or office shall in every case be deemed to be the act, omission, or failure of such corporation, company, or association, as well as that of the person acting for or in behalf of such corporation, company, or association.

"SEC. 38. That this act, except as otherwise provided in section 3, shall take effect and be enforced from and after July 1, 1913. The act of March 26, 1910, amending the act of February 20, 1907, to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States; the act of February 20, 1907, to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, except section 34 thereof; the act of March 3, 1903, to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, except section 34 thereof; and all other acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed on and after the taking effect of this act: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to repeal, alter, or amend existing laws relating to the immigration or exclusion of Chinese persons or persons of Chinese descent, nor to repeal, alter, or amend section 6, chapter 453, third session, Fifty-eighth Congress, approved February 6, 1905, or the act approved August 2, 1882, entitled 'An act to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea,' and amendments thereto: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to affect any prosecution, suit, action, or proceedings brought, or any act, thing, or matter, civil or criminal, done or existing at the time of the taking effect of this act, except as mentioned in the last proviso of section 19 hereof; but as to all such prosecutions, suits, actions, proceedings, acts, things, or matters, the laws or parts of laws repealed or amended by this act are hereby continued in force and effect."

JOHN L. BURNETT,
AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER,
Managers on the part of the House.
H. C. LODGE,
WM. P. DILLINGHAM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the Senate bill (S. 3175) regulating the immigration of aliens, submit the following detailed statement in explanation of the effect agreed upon and recommended in the conference report:

The Senate having disagreed to the entire House amendment, which in its turn had stricken out the entire Senate bill, the whole subject of immigration came before the conference committee.

The bill as it passed the House contained no features except the illiteracy test. The Senate bill contemplated many changes in the law and an illiteracy test substantially similar to that proposed in the House, the principal difference being that the Senate included "writing" in its test and differed somewhat from the House as to the admissibility of illiterate relatives of qualified immigrants. On all substantial matters of difference between the Senate and the House touching the illiteracy test the Senate receded.

The principal changes in existing law proposed by the Senate to which the managers on the part of the House agreed are as follows:

First. An increase of the head tax from $4 to $5 per alien.

Second. The exclusion of aliens not eligible for naturalization.

Third. Making it permissible for the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to decide beforehand as to the necessity of importing such skilled contract labor as is now admissible under the existing contract-labor law.

Fourth. Providing more severe penalties for transportation lines which violate the law against advertising for immigrants and which bring to the United States aliens who are ineligible to enter.

Fifth. Providing for matrons, inspectors, and surgeons on immigrant ships at the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Sixth. Providing machinery for compelling the attendance and testimony of witnesses before the immigration authorities when required.

Seventh. Providing for the deportation of aliens who become criminals within three years subsequent to entry.

Eighth. Providing for interior immigrant stations.

Ninth. Providing against the illegal entry of seamen and stowaways.

Tenth. Permitting aliens to be represented by counsel in the case of appeals from the decision of boards of special inquiry.

Eleventh. Providing experts in insanity at large ports of entry.

Twelfth. A definition of the meaning of the word "alien" where it appears in the bill.

A provision was added in conference requiring the production of penal certificates in certain cases for the purpose of facilitating the execution of that part of the Senate bill and of the present law which relates to the exclusion of criminals.

JOHN L. BURNETT,
AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER,
Managers on the part of the House.

During the reading,

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, as this is the only time we have had an opportunity to have the bill read in any way, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present, and evidently there is not.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and fifty-eight Members—a quorum—have responded to their names.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call of the House be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] moves that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the report be dispensed with and that the statement be read in lieu of the remainder.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I object——

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the conference report.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the report can not be considered in the House until the original papers are before the House, and that the original papers are not in the possession of the House. I understand the original Senate bill is in the possession of the Clerk. The House adopted an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause, so it is claimed.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker wishes that the gentleman would go over that again. The House will be in order.

Mr. MANN. The House, I believe, agreed to an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause. Under the rules and the laws and the practice that amendment is sent by resolution from the House to the Senate. I have the form of the resolution in my hand, and the form of the resolution is in the possession of the Clerk. It has to be certified to or attested by the Clerk. That has not been done, and the papers that are before the Speaker, I have no doubt the original papers, properly attested by the Clerk, are in the possession of the Senate. I make the point of order that, in the absence of the original papers, the House can not consider the conference report.

The SPEAKER. How did the Senate ever get possession of it, then?

Mr. MANN. I suppose the Senate has possession of the original papers. I do not know what the Senate has done about it.

The SPEAKER. The original Senate bill is here, properly attested by "Charles G. Bennett, Secretary," and "H. M. Rose, Assistant Secretary."

Mr. MANN. The Senate bill is properly attested, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER. The House part, that is attached to the original Senate bill, does not seem to have been attested by the House Clerk. If we can get hold of him we can have him sign it nunc pro tunc.

Mr. MANN. By unanimous consent I suppose he could do that.

The SPEAKER. Why would it take unanimous consent? The Speaker has never investigated it, but he thinks he would have the same power in that kind of a case that a nisi prius judge has. The Chair is not certain about that, however.

Mr. MANN. I take it that we are entitled to the original papers.

The SPEAKER. Unquestionably.

Mr. MANN. We must proceed on what is officially before the House. The House did have this bill up for consideration and did agree to an amendment. We have not official information at this time as to what that amendment consists of, in the absence of the original papers, and if we adopt the practice of considering a bill without the original papers and without the attestation of the Clerk, no one knows what might be presented as the original papers.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that the gentleman's point of order comes too late. The House has proceeded to consider such papers as it had before it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that that point of order is not well taken. This document, purporting to be the conference report, has been read. That is all the proceeding that has been taken on this matter except the parliamentary skirmish that took place earlier in the day. The Chair does not think that the gentleman's point of order comes too late.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I desire to know whether it is now in order to raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to raise the question of consideration until this other matter is determined. The Chair does not have any doubt about the right of the Speaker to order the Clerk to sign that document.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the question is whether the original papers are the ones that were presented to the Senate. Is the Speaker prepared to say that the resolution which was sent to the Senate, not attested, is not merely a copy of the papers that we want—is not merely a copy of the papers we are entitled to?

The SPEAKER. Here is the situation: We have a certified copy of the Senate bill. Then we have the conference report sent over by the Senate, with this House amendment, striking out all after the enacting clause and enacting a new law, so far as the House could make a law, and the Clerk failed to sign it. But the fact that the Senate bill has come back here attached to the House amendment seems to the Chair to be reasonable proof that the document that purports to be the report from the House that is included in this bundle of papers is the same document that the Clerk sent over to the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Well, that might be a guess. How can the Chair know that? It is presumed that the officers of the House properly perform their duties, in which case they sent to the Senate an attested copy of the House amendment.

The SPEAKER. Now comes the Clerk of the House and attests it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Without examining it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have him examine it.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, it is rather late in the day for him to sign it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is a lawyer——

Mr. MANN. Used to be——

The SPEAKER. And has seen a hundred times, if not more, orders entered nunc pro tunc in a nisi prius court without objection from anybody. If there was any doubt about this being the correct paper, of course we would not tolerate it for a second.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know but that I would rule the same way the Speaker has ruled if I were in the chair.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair thinks himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I make a further point of order. The matter is before the House, and perhaps some other Members desire to make a point of order. But the conferees have included matters in the conference report which were not in disagreement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend a moment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] a while ago asked the Chair if the time had come to raise the question of consideration.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to raise that question when the time comes.

Mr. MANN. I do not think that question can be raised until there has been a disposition of the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think I addressed the Chair in the interim between the determination of one point of order and the other.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that if the House is not going to consider the bill there is no use arguing points of order about it.

Mr. MANN. If the question is raised, I think it is probably beyond a point of order, but I do not care.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman on his point of order as soon as this question is determined. The question is, Will the House now consider this conference report on the immigration bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the consideration of this motion preclude the making of other motions, such as to lay on the table, or should they be made now?

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; they can be made afterwards.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HAMILL. For the purpose of making a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMILL. Is it in order now, before the determination of this motion, to present a motion for the postponement of the consideration of this conference report?

The SPEAKER. That will come afterwards. The question is, Will the House consider this conference report at this time?

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SABATH and Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 49.

Mr. SABATH and Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania demanded the yeas and nays.

Pending the division on the ordering of the yeas and nays,

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania raises the point of no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the consideration of this bill will, when their names are called, answer aye, those opposed no, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 179, nays 73, answered "present" 6, not voting 125, as follows:

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I voted "aye." I am paired with my colleague, Mr. FIELD, but he is in favor of this bill, and I feel justified in voting as I did.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman wish his vote to stand?

Mr. LANGLEY. I do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to do with pairs.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the conference report is not in order, because it contains matter which was not properly before the conferees and matter not in dispute between the two Houses. I reserve all points of order on the conference report, so that other gentlemen may present their matters. The Speaker will notice by the original papers in possession of the House that the amendment adopted by the House was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert certain matter that is set forth.

As a matter of fact, the title to the bill and the enacting clause were not in dispute. Yet the conferees have included in their report as a part of the amendment to be agreed to an enacting clause and a title, in addition to the title and enacting clause which go with the Senate bill. As the enacting clause and title were not in dispute, not in disagreement, it was without the power of the conferees to include in their report as a part of the proposition agreed upon a title and an enacting clause.

The conference report provides:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and residence of aliens in the United States.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled"—

And so on.

That is the matter which the conferees have included now as matter in lieu of the House amendment, but that matter was not in dispute, and if the conference report should be agreed to we will then have this anomalous condition.

We will pass an act containing—

An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

Containing an enacting clause—

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled—

And then following that will again appear—

An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled—

And so forth.

The title and enacting clause not being in dispute, it was not in order for the conferees to insert that in the conference report, so that if agreed to it will appear twice in the law that may be enacted.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I felt perfectly sure that the point of order would certainly be made, either that we had two enacting clauses or that we had none. The fact is this: The amendment adopted by the House not only inserted certain words in lieu of the Senate bill, but it provided that the enacting clause should stand. The Senate and the conferees agreed to strike out the House amendment, which may be construed as the equivalent of saying that the enacting clause shall not stand, and therefore that its reinsertion is required. We gave this question some thought, and then we looked the matter up to see what happened under precisely similar circumstances on February 18, 1907, when the conference report on the immigration bill of that year was adopted. In fact, we used that report as our model, and copied the exact wording, used under exactly the same circumstances. Here is what we found:

That the Senate recede from its disagreements to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Strike out all of said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "An act entitled 'An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States.'"

The cases are exactly parallel, and that was why we included the title in our conference report. Mr. Speaker, it does not make a particle of difference whether the bill has a double title or not. The conferees have the widest discretion, and the fact that we have duplicated words which the gentleman claims that both Houses have agreed upon is not in any way outside the discretion of the managers of the conference.

The SPEAKER. The point of order of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is overruled.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer the following motion, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. SABATH. But, Mr. Speaker, I have reserved all points of order, and I desire to make a point of order to the report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] to state his point of order.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that the conferees have exceeded their authority, and did not confine themselves to the differences committed to them; that they have inserted in this report matter and provisions that were not contained in the House bill or in the Senate bill. The language will be found beginning with the fourth line on the third page of the printed conference report, and is as follows:

Citizens and subjects of any country that issues penal certificates or certificates of character who do not produce to the immigration officials such a certificate.

That language, Mr. Speaker, is absolutely new, inserted by the conferees in violation of the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. That was not in the Senate bill?

Mr. SABATH. No; nor in the House bill. It is a new provision. It is new matter, and I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that the conferees had no jurisdiction to insert that provision in the report or to agree to it. If there is any doubt in the Speaker's mind, I will refer him to the rules of the House. I read from page 279 of Jefferson's Manual, section 539:

The managers of a conference must confine themselves to the differences committed to them, and may not include subjects not within the disagreements, even though germane to the question in issue.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman finished?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I have also other authorities, but I do not think it is necessary for me to cite them. They hold the same way.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is perfectly correct in his statement of the facts. It is entirely new matter, but it was not inserted until a very careful examination of the decision rendered by Mr. Speaker CLARK on August 14, 1911, in the matter of the woolen bill. I quote from the words of Mr. Speaker CLARK when a similar point of order was raised at that time:

The Chair does not know anything about the parliamentary clerks to Mr. Speaker Colfax and Mr. Speaker Carlisle, but the Chair is fully persuaded that every Member of this House who has served in prior Congresses will agree that Mr. Speaker Henderson and Mr. Speaker CANNON had the advantage of being advised by one of the most skillful parliamentarians in this country, the present Member from Maine [Mr. HINDS]. [Applause.]

All four of these Speakers, three Republicans and one Democrat, have passed on this question, and they have all ruled that where everything after the enacting clause is stricken out and a new bill substituted it gives the conferees very wide discretion, extending even to the substitution of an entirely new bill.

Then the Speaker proceeded to have incorporated in his opinion the opinions of Mr. Speaker Colfax, Mr. Speaker Carlisle, Mr. Speaker CANNON, and Mr. Speaker Henderson, the opinion of Mr. Speaker CANNON being delivered on a case exactly on all fours with this. The opinion related to the conference on the immigration bill of 1907, to which I have already alluded. The much-discussed provision as to Japanese passports did not appear either in the House or in the Senate bill, but was inserted in conference. That decision was cited by Mr. Speaker CLARK in overruling the point of order made under precisely similar circumstances against the new legislation in the woolen bill last year.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order, and the Clerk will report the motion of Mr. HAMILL, of New Jersey.

The Clerk read as follows:

Postpone the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 3175) entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and residence of aliens in the United States" until Thursday, January 23, 1913.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to adopt the report of the conference committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the preferential motion that the report lie upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has preference.

Mr. SABATH. What is his motion?

The SPEAKER. To lay on the table. That finishes the bill if carried.

Subdivision 4 of Rule XVI runs as follows:

When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but to adjourn, to lay on the table, for the previous question (which motion shall be decided without debate), to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to amend, or postpone indefinitely; which several motions shall have precedence in the foregoing order.

Now, there are three motions pending at once. The motion of the gentleman from Alabama takes precedence of the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey, and the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky takes precedence of both of them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that motion is dilatory. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] to lay on the table.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 91.

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is dilatory.

Mr. MANN. A point of no quorum can not be dilatory; that is a constitutional right.

Mr. FOSTER. We have just had a roll call and determined there was a quorum present.

Mr. MANN. The Speaker can determine whether there is a quorum present or not.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the ayes are 39 and the noes are 91.

Mr. BOEHNE. And I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, and I make the point of order that that is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. One hundred and seventy-three gentlemen are present; not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees——

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, is it too late to raise the point of order——

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I am raising a point of order.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's query?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. That it is not in order to lay a conference report on the table under the rule.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that it is too late and that in the absence of a quorum no business is in order.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. My query is, is it too late to raise that point of order?

The SPEAKER. One at a time, the gentleman from Massachusetts——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the Speaker having declared that no quorum was present the House can not transact any business until a quorum is here.

The SPEAKER. That is undoubtedly correct and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 60, nays 192, answered "present" 8, not voting 123, as follows:

So the motion to lay the conference report on the table was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. ANSBERRY with Mr. SPEER.

Mr. BATHRICK with Mr. AINEY.

Mr. JAMES with Mr. GILLETT.

Mr. HULL with Mr. AMES.

Mr. CLAYPOOL with Mr. BATES.

Mr. COX with Mr. HEALD.

Mr. FITZGERALD with Mr. MCKINLEY.

Mr. HARRISON of New York with Mr. MOTT.

Mr. NEELEY with Mr. CURRY.

Mr. POU with Mr. LAWRENCE.
Mr. TAGGART with Mr. VARE.
Mr. CARTER with Mr. MCGUIRE of Oklahoma.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I voted "nay," but because I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. UNDERWOOD, I desire to be recorded "present."

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. MANN, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present, and the Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to raise the point of order that the conferees exceeded their jurisdiction. I do not think the attention of the Chair was called——

The SPEAKER. It is too late. The Chair passed on that matter after elaborate argument.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Well, I wanted to say to the Chair that I do not think the attention of the Chair was called to the fact that there are certain provisions in this conference report that are in nowise pertinent to the provisions of the bill as it came from the Senate or as it was reported from the House committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair ruled that it is too late. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] reserved a point of order; and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] both took a turn at that very question which the gentleman raises now, and the Chair passed on it and overruled their objections and points of order, and the House has passed on the question of laying the conference report on the table.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURRAY. Do I understand the Chair to rule that if the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] suggests something in addition to what has already been suggested as having been done beyond the rights of the conferees, it is not in order?

The SPEAKER. The bill has passed that stage, and the Chair has passed on it.

Mr. MURRAY. So that, even if additional matter is presented as having been included in the conference report outside of the rights of the conferees, it could not be in order?

The SPEAKER. No. There must be an end to everything.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. If, as has occurred, the motion to lay the conference report on the table was voted on and defeated, would that prevent the raising of a point of order that the conferees had exceeded their jurisdiction?

The SPEAKER. That matter is res adjudicata. It has been passed upon, and there is a motion pending before the House——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, another parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. If the point of order that I desire now to raise relates to matter that did not come up at all under the point of order that was raised before, am I not in order to raise that point now?

The SPEAKER. The orderly conduct of the House requires that everything have a time and a season, and when you pass that you can not get that up any more.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. But that which is now to be presented is what we did not consider.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman had the opportunity to consider it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentlemen who argued the points of order presented their propositions, and thereupon a motion was made, which the Chair very properly recognized, namely, to lay the conference report on the table. The Chair was bound to put that motion when it was made.

The SPEAKER. Here is the situation: The gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MANN, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SABATH, raised points of order, and each one of them raised the question that the gentleman raises now. They argued it elaborately and learnedly, and the Chair ruled them out of order, and that closed the incident, unless somebody else did then what the gentleman from New York is trying to do now.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. But the further opportunity to raise points of order was cut off when the motion to lay on the table was made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is aware of that, but a motion for the previous question is now pending. The question is on agreeing to the motion for the previous question.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 111, noes 67.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MADDEN. I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. This is the easiest way of finding out whether there is a quorum.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I raise the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of ordering the previous question will, when their names are called, answer "aye"; those opposed will answer "no," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 167, nays 76, answered "present" 9, not voting 131, as follows:

Mr. POU with Mr. GREENE of Vermont.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. FORNES. I voted "aye," and I desire to withdraw that vote and to be recorded present.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. There will be a debate of 40 minutes, 20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] and 20 minutes by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

[Mr. BURNETT addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. BURNETT. I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. POWERS].

[Mr. POWERS addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I will thank the Chair to notify me when I have consumed five minutes of time. I admit, Mr. Speaker, that the three provisions that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] has stated were eliminated from the Dillingham bill were of some importance, but for every elimination from the Dillingham bill the conferees have substituted and inserted at least 10 harsh, stringent, and unfair provisions, so that now it is without doubt the most vicious, the most drastic, the most undemocratic and un-American measure that was ever brought to this House. [Applause.] Some weeks ago the House was called upon to vote upon the so-called Burnett bill, comprising a page and a half, which simply provided for the educational test. To-day you are urged to consider and vote upon a bill that contains 60 pages, and I venture to say that there are not 10 Members present who have read or who are acquainted with all of the provisions contained in this bill.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Certainly.

Mr. MURRAY. Is it not a fact that the bill itself is not yet printed, and is not available for distribution in the House?

Mr. SABATH. A copy of the report is printed, but I am satisfied that hardly a dozen Members have had an opportunity to see it or read it. I say without fear of successful contradiction that everything that was good in the Dillingham bill was eliminated, and everything that could possibly be inserted to make it harsher and more stringent was injected by the conferees. The limited time at my disposal does not permit of my going into details and pointing out to the Members of this House the various matters that have been inserted in the bill, but I wish to call attention to some of the harshest provisions now incorporated in this bill.

On the very first page we find that should this bill pass it will apply not only to immigrants but to all aliens, it matters not whether they have resided here for 5, 10, 15, or 20 years. Unless they become citizens, and our strict naturalization laws practically preclude this in the majority of instances, they will be subjected to all of the harsh provisions of this bill if, perchance, they go abroad to visit their aged father and mother or other relatives or to adjust any estate they may have in the old country.

The deportation clause in the bill provides that anyone who may be found guilty of a crime punishable by imprisonment for one or more years will be deported after the expiration of his sentence, though he has paid the penalty for his indiscretions, and notwithstanding the fact that he may have resided here for any number of years and may have an American wife and children born in this country.

The bill increases the head tax from $4 to $5, and this applies not only to immigrants but to all aliens.

Then, on the fourth page of this bill, we find the provision that "citizens or subjects of any country that issues penal certificates or certificates of character who do not produce to the immigration officials such a certificate shall be debarred." What is the significance of this, gentlemen? It means that practically one-half of the immigrants from such European countries as Russia, Austria, and other countries that issue such certificates will be prevented from entering this country, due to the fact that they will be unable to secure these certificates, for practically that number leave their homes surreptitiously for fear that if they make known their plans they will be prevented from embarking. I ask you, gentlemen, is it just that we should demand from these people a certificate of character when they already have so many obstacles interposed to prevent their leaving their native land? Is it fair that we should give to these Governments the power to say who can and who can not emigrate to America? [Applause.]

As to the educational test, the House managers did attempt to make some exceptions in the case of the wives, parents, and children of the immigrants, so that they would be exempted from this test, but further on in the bill this exemption is nullified by a provision which directs that a fine shall be imposed on anyone and on any steamship company that brings into this country anyone who does not know how to read. Are you gentlemen aware that this provision would debar practically all of the women who emigrate from Russia, Roumania, Galacia, Poland, and many other countries? These women are denied the opportuity of learning to read, and therefore this clause would absolutely prevent their entry into the United States. Then let me direct your attention to the proviso which stipulates that all persons shall be excluded who "have committed a felony"; notice that this does not provide for the exclusion of those who have been convicted of a felony, but those who have committed a felony. This will give the Russian spies an opportunity to cause the deportation of anyone whom they desire to have excluded, for all that is necessary is that they accuse the immigrant of having committed a felony. It also confers arbitrary power on immigrant inspectors to try aliens and punish them by deportation under an act which confers authority on the immigrant inspector to subpœna witnesses, but gives no such authority to the alien. No other law ever proposed was ever so unjust to one party to a trial.

I have mentioned only a few of the more drastic provisions which have been inserted in this bill, but there are numerous others which impose unjust and unreasonable restrictions upon those seeking admission to the United States.

I feel sure that those of you who voted for the passage of the Burnett bill were convinced that the literacy test which that measure provided was the utmost restriction that should be demanded. When the Dillingham bill was originally reported to the House it was very evident that the provisions contained therein were deemed most obnoxious, and it was voted that they be stricken out; yet you now have presented to you a much harsher and more drastic measure, the passage of which is advocated by a few professional patriots and narrow-minded restrictionists. [Applause.] Will you yield to their demands? For fear that you may, I again appeal to you to carefully consider your action lest you may later regret your haste and indiscretion.

Mr. Speaker, when the managers on the part of the House were appointed to this conference it was understood that they would represent the wishes of this House; yet they have tolerated and agreed to the insertion of practically all of the most stringent provisions of the original Dillingham bill—provisions that were rejected by this body—as well as additional provisions that were never considered by this House.

Will the Members of the House now ratify the action of the conferees, who have deliberately exceeded their power, by passing the measure. I hope not. If you do, you will establish a dangerous precedent, as you will sanction legislation by six—yes, by four—conferees, as in this case, instead of legislation by the House as a whole.

Before concluding permit me again to counsel you not to be carried away by prejudice. This legislation means a great deal to thousands upon thousands of honest, industrious, freedom and liberty seeking people, now persecuted and oppressed by tyrannical governments, for this bill will not keep out educated disturbers and anarchists, but it will exclude honest, thrifty, hard-working people, who have, on account of conditions over which they exercise no control, been deprived of an opportunity to secure an education.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Immigration Committee, as a member of this conference, and upon the floor of this House, I have done everything within my power to secure certain changes and modifications in this bill. In a few cases I have succeeded, in the majority I have failed, but I am confident that you will agree with me that my failure has not been due to indifference on my part. I am satisfied that I have done everything possible to convince the Members of this House of the justice of my views. If I have failed, I regret it exceedingly and feel sure that in the near future you will. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed five minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Eight minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES], if he is present.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call to the attention of the House one of the provisions included by the conferees in this bill. It provides for the exclusion of a class of aliens not heretofore excluded under our laws by adding the following to the excluded classes:

Persons who can not become eligible under existing law to become citizens of the United States by naturalization unless otherwise provided for by existing agreements as to passports, or by treaties, conventions, or agreements that may hereafter be entered into. The provision next foregoing, however, shall not apply to persons of the following status or occupations: Government officers, ministers or religious teachers, missionaries, lawyers, physicians, chemists, engineers, teachers, students, authors, editors, journalists, merchants, bankers, and travelers for curiosity or pleasure, nor to their legal wives or their children under 16 years of age who shall accompany them or who subsequently may apply for admission to the United States, but such persons or their legal wives or foreign-born children who fail to maintain in the United States a status or occupation placing them within the excepted classes shall be deemed to be in the United States contrary to law, and shall be subject to deportation as provided in section 19 of this act.

Some of the exceptions of this provision I do not approve. I wish they were not in the bill. I doubt the wisdom of substituting a sort of gentlemen's agreement between nations for the provisions of legislative enactment, especially in a matter so vital as immigration. But I do enthusiastically indorse the principle which by the provision above quoted is incorporated into the immigration law. Any people who are not to be fully assimilated and included in the whole body of our citizenship, with all the rights and duties incident thereto should be rigidly excluded from our shores. This rule should be made a fundamental principle of our immigration laws, to be strictly adhered to at all times and under all circumstances. To admit to this country any considerable number of immigrants from a country the inhabitants of which we do not admit to citizenship under our laws is to import another race problem similar to the one we now have in the South. I believe that no man on this floor would like to see that problem duplicated in the West.

Four years ago I introduced a bill embodying the principle above referred to, and have been advocating it ever since. I am much gratified that the conferees on the part of the House have incorporated this provision in their report.

For many years I have advocated the extension of the Chinese-exclusion act so as to exclude all Asiatic laborers. I still believe that some positive legislative enactment which would effectually exclude them would be better than the gentleman's agreement between this country and Japan, and I still hope to see such an act take the place of that agreement. I will admit, however, that so far this agreement has worked fairly well. It is only fair to say that under it laborers from Japan have been generally excluded. It has worked quite as satisfactorily as the Chinese-exclusion act has in excluding Chinese laborers. When it ceases to so work the agreement can be abrogated and the provisions of the bill to which I have referred made applicable.

I also desire to especially commend the provision in the bill that when the classes excepted from the operation of its provisions—fail to maintain in the United States a status or occupation placing them within the excepted classes they shall be deemed to be in the United States contrary to law, and shall be subject to deportation.

The lack of such a provision has always been a great weakness in the Chinese-exclusion law. In the Fifty-ninth Congress I introduced a bill to incorporate such a provision in our exclusion laws, and have reintroduced it in every subsequent Congress, and I am gratified that at last it is in a fair way of becoming a part of the law of the land.

On the whole, the bill is a long step in the right direction. I shall cheerfully vote to adopt the conference report.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. GUDGER].

[Mr. GUDGER addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield some of his time?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me to be a very bad and dangerous practice to place in the hands of six conferees the power to write legislation that has never been considered in the House. We are confronted in this instance with a bill, the print of which in italics in the report covers 24 pages—the bill itself covering some 60 pages—and being a bill which practically revises all the immigration and naturalization laws of the United States. The House has not considered any phase of this legislation as it now comes up to us except the illiteracy test, which we discussed here in a separate bill several weeks ago. It seems to me this kind of legislation ought to originate in the House, and the House ought surely to have the right to discuss the change of laws affecting immigration.

As for the bill itself, I have not had the time to read it, and I question whether any other gentleman in the House has had time to read it carefully or to make comparisons with the existing law, but as I read some sections of the bill I find it to be very objectionable. There are some admirable features in the bill; some intended to prevent, for instance, the admission of those who surreptitiously ship as sailors or who seek to come in as stowaways. I have not time to enumerate any of these features. What I particularly object to is that feature of the bill providing an illiteracy test which bars from the country poor but law-abiding labor, which we need here and which comes of its own volition. Of course the anarchist, the murderer, the criminal, and certain objectionable classes are barred, but we have ample existing law against them. The hardship is as to the common laborer who can not read, and while the bill denies him admission, it excepts from the forbidden classes certain other classes that may be equally undesirable. Let me show you: Here is the lawyer. He can come in. Judging from the number of lawyers in this House and elsewhere throughout the country, it is fair to presume we have enough lawyers already. [Laughter.] But the American lawyer has no protection in this bill against the foreigner. The bill admits "ministers, religious teachers and missionaries, and students." The Lord knows we have enough poorly paid ministers in this country now. We also have plenty of students to preach all sorts of doctrines and stir up all sorts of unrest. Then the bill admits the "journalist." Will anyone tell me what a journalist is?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I have one minute more?

Mr. SABATH. I am very sorry, but I can not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The journalist is that high-grade gentleman who trades upon the reputation of legitimate newspaper men——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Who are competed with in this bill. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, what has just transpired illustrates the absurdity of attempting to discuss a bill of this importance in three minutes. Altogether only 40 minutes of debate is to be allowed on this bill, and in that time the House is to learn all it is intended it should know about the repeal, revision, and amendment of nearly all the laws affecting immigration in addition to the new matter which has been injected into the bill in conference, without regard to either the Senate or the House. If the majority is satisfied to do business this way, however, there is no alternative but to submit until the people at large more thoroughly understand the sumptuary methods of propulsion and suppression that are possible under the rules of the House. If in the past, under any system of rules, there has been any just cause for grievance on the part of those who constitute a deliberative body, the action of to-day does not fall far short of the high record mark in the annals of parliamentary gagging.

But I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that the bill which has thus been thrust upon us keeps out the downtrodden poor and admits the elect. I have already referred to the lawyers, the ministers, and the missionaries as excepted classes. The list must be extended to include physicians, chemists, engineers, teachers, students, authors, editors, merchants, bankers, and journalists. I have commented briefly upon journalists and have wondered whether, under this denomination, common labor being barred, it is proposed to admit every nonworking writer who has peculiar notions of government and who will unload upon us the moment he is admitted. It would seem to me we have enough poorly paid editors in this country, but the bill proposes to take on more, and apparently there is no labor union to step in and say "nay." It is interesting to note that "merchants" are to come in, the term being sufficiently elastic to include anyone from the shoe-string vender up to the mail-order house magnate, but common labor is not desired. To the Pujo investigating committee is commended that clause of the bill which admits "bankers" free. Evidently we have not enough of this commodity in the United States and invite competition.

Indeed, it is interesting to observe how we shut out the trench diggers and sewer builders, while we admit the professional classes, particularly the actors and actresses, the authors and preachers, who come over to pick up a few American dollars and go back to write up their impressions of the country. In the effort to prevent the separation of families, which is one of the cruel features of existing law, the bill makes some progress, but it is so severe on children under 16 years that it would exclude any child below that age who is sent to this country to be educated, and yet we have universities and colleges, particularly in medicine and dentistry, that are the admiration of the world.

On the whole, the bill as rewritten seems to favor the admission of nonworking professionals of whom we would seem to have a plenty in the United States, but it cuts out the drudge for whom, at least in some families and in some employments, there is a present need. I am obliged to the House for the leave thus granted to extend by remarks.

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL].

[Mr. HAMILL addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I voted for the House bill. I have been in full sympathy with those who desire legislation upon this subject at this session, and have done what I could to bring it about. But, Mr. Speaker, I can not vote for this conference report chiefly because of one provision in the bill which reads as follows, as to excluded classes:

> Citizens or subjects of any country that issues penal certificates or certificates of character who do not produce to the immigration officials such a certificate.

That means, Mr. Speaker, that this country, for the first time in its history, is willing by this legislation to say to the world that in addition to the classes that we propose to exclude we will let them say what others shall be excluded as well from admission into the United States. Mr. Speaker, what will be the result? Russia could to-morrow issue certificates of character when this becomes a law, and does anyone believe for one moment a Jew after that could be admitted into the United States? You know he could not. And it is the same with other countries.

Another provision a little later in the bill exempts those who have been convicted of political offenses, but with this provision that I have quoted in the bill, though they have been convicted of political offenses, and they ought not to be excluded for that reason, does anyone believe any nation on earth would issue a certificate of character to one of its subjects who had been convicted of a political offense? And in the absence of the certificate they could not be admitted.

Another provision permits certain relatives of a citizen of the United States to come in without passing the illiteracy test. As the bill stands they will be required to produce a certificate of character. Failing to secure it, a man's wife will not be permitted to come into this country. Are we by this vote to say to these countries, "We will let you decide who shall not be admitted into this country," instead of deciding it for ourselves? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, in order to get it clearly in the RECORD, may I inquire of the Chair whether it is in order during this debate to move to strike out from the pending bill any of the objectionable provisions mentioned by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]?

The SPEAKER. It is not. You will have to take the conference report as a whole or reject it as a whole.

Mr. KONIG. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of no quorum.

Mr. BURNETT. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. KONIG. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KONIG] withdraw his point?

Mr. KONIG. I raise the point of order that there is no quorum present. You can not do business without a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty-three gentlemen are present, not a quorum.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] moves a call of the House.

Mr. SABATH. I move to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BURNETT. I hope that will be voted down.

The SPEAKER. That is not debatable. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. To save time, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Nineteen gentlemen have arisen—not a sufficient number. The yeas and nays are refused. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] demands a division on the motion to adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 63, noes 81.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is not required on a question of adjournment.

Mr. MURRAY. But it requires a quorum to do business.

Mr. MANN. The motion for a call of the House has already been made.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], that there shall be a call of the House.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. GARNER. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 65.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and forty-four Members have responded to their names—a quorum.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] has seven minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] has eight minutes remaining.

Mr. BURNETT. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER of Masachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], who has discussed this question of penalty certificates, or certificates of character, evidently does not understand the meaning of the clause to which he objects. Italy—and, I believe, other countries—have a system under which every citizen is supplied with a document which he must show on demand. If he has ever been convicted of an offense the fact is entered on that document. When the Immigration Commission was abroad it was pointed out to them that it would be very wise to put into our law a provision of this sort which we are discussing. In order to exclude criminals, it was suggested that we should ordain that when an immigrant comes here who is a citizen of any country which issues these certificates of character and penal certificates, we should say to him, "Now, sir, show us that paper which your Government requires you to possess. If that paper shows that you are a criminal, then you can not come in. If there are no convictions against you, we judge that you are no criminal. If you come from Italy and refuse to show us your papers we shall believe that there is something wrong with you."

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I ask the gentleman to let me complete my statement. Now, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, Mr. Nagel, is at the head of the Bureau of Immigration, and this clause in the law is included in the recommendation of that bureau. I think section 10 of the draft bill submitted by the Bureau of Immigration contains exactly this language——

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I can not yield. The provision is:

> Citizens or subjects of any country that issues penal certificates or certificates of character who do not produce to the immigration officials such a certificate.

The commissioner points out in his report that this provision will be effective in preventing men with criminal records slipping by at Ellis Island.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I can not yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman says, "Oh, but suppose Russia passes a law and takes up that same system of criminal jurisprudence."

Was ever anything more fantastic than such a supposition? The gentleman perhaps believes that Russia is going to change her whole system of criminal jurisprudence for the purpose of keeping the Jews in Russia. Why, we know that the fact is that the Russian Government dislikes the Jews and does not wish to keep them in Russia. Nothing more fanciful has been dreamed in the whole course of this debate. Russia telling us whom we shall admit, forsooth!—and that was a very effective way in which the gentleman put it—Russia changing her criminal system merely to keep some of her people at home. She has plenty of ways of keeping them at home if she so desires. Do not be alarmed, Mr. Speaker, at the ghost of Russia instructing us as to whom we shall admit to this country. Russia is not going to tell us whom we shall admit and whom we shall exclude; but when would-be immigrants are in possession of documents which show whether or not they have criminal records, we propose to see those documents. Before men who possess certificates pass through Ellis Island they must produce those certificates, so that this country shall not be flooded with criminals.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SABATH. I yield two minutes and a half to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] is recognized for two minutes and a half.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, the brief time allotted to me to speak in opposition to the conference report affords no fair opportunity to analyze the many provisions which have been inserted by the conferees. I can but utter my earnest, vigorous, and emphatic protest against the adoption of this measure. It abounds with provisions that are pernicious and which, if enacted, will give rise to hardship. It is, with few exceptions, the Dillingham bill all over again, and in some one or two respects is somewhat worse than when that measure came to us from the Senate.

The method adopted to secure the enactment of this legislation calculated to restrict immigration is amazing. The House Committee on Immigration struck out the provisions of the Dillingham bill, and, lo, the conferees bring back the measure with most of the features of that bill all reinserted and even more drastic than before. I am conscious that the temper of this House to-day favors the report, yet I would not sit by and see this measure go through by this steam-roller process without uttering any protest against both this report and the hasty, ill-considered way in which it is proposed this bill shall become a law.

Only last night the conferees reported this measure to the House. As we passed the bill it contained but one provision. It was the literacy-test provision. It was the reading test proposed in the Burnett bill. Behold now, we get from the conferees a lengthy bill of about 60 printed pages, and this only found printed for the first time this morning. Certain it is that few Members have read the provisions of the bill. Few, indeed, could have in these few hours familiarized themselves with its many clauses and provisions. Legislation produced in this way and rushed through in this fashion can not ever be said to be the result of statesmanlike consideration or of deliberate action.

It has been already well suggested that under the bill as now reported by the conferees an alien who has been in this country for a considerable period of time and who for any reason may have temporarily returned to his mother country can not return here without being subjected to all the examinations and inconveniences and restrictions that apply to immigrants that come to our shores for the first time. I wish I had the time to illustrate fully the viciousness of this and the abuses to which such legislation may lead. A father or mother, though having been for years a law-abiding inhabitant of this country and then returning to his or her native land, might, through means of being subjected to the provisions of this restrictive legislation, be debarred from coming in again, and perhaps be separated from their families forever. So it might be in respect to sons and daughters who, returning from their native lands after having been lawfully here for some years, might meet with the obstacles and difficulties which this proposed law would put in their way when seeking readmittance to this country.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, while the first section of the bill brings forth these observations, because no longer, as in the present law, is the statute to apply to immigrants who have not heretofore been lawfully admitted to the country, but the bill is made to apply to "any person not a native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States" and is to include all these aliens. Yet important as it may be to carefully consider such a situation, or the effect of the language which the conferees have inserted, you want to rush this bill hastily and hurriedly to a vote.

In the third clause of the bill it is proposed to absolutely exclude from entrance into this country all "citizens or subjects of any country that issues penal certificates or certificates of character who do not produce to the immigration officials such a certificate." In countries such as Russia and Roumania the emigrant desirous of leaving to migrate hither might find himself or herself in severe plight and encounter intolerable hardships to get such certificate, if he or she belong to the class of people who come within their policy of proscription or against whom their religious or racial intolerance is directed.

In some countries, whether Russia or Italy, Roumania or Hungary, Poland or elsewhere, conditions might and at times are likely to arise when those who would seek to leave these foreign lands to come here would encounter difficulty to get such certificates. Any country may at any time adopt a system of issuing such certificates, and thus her subjects or citizens would come under these provisions. Russia already issues certificates of the nature called for by the bill before us. Need I tell you, from what you already know of the unfortunate and pitiful condition of the Jew in that autocratic country, what difficulty he would meet with there? How rich might be the field of petty officials in foreign lands when they would be called on to grant these certificates that would enable the intending emigrant to leave his country to turn his footsteps to this land of freedom and opportunity? Only a little more than a year ago this House by practically a unanimous vote condemned the autocratic and outrageous conduct of Russia against the Jew, and now here to-night you propose to subject the very class for whom you professed your sympathy to being compelled to seek a certificate from the hands of a government under whose oppression he lives before you will permit him entrance to our shores. You would invest the Government of the Czar with the power, if it or its officials, high or low, great or petty, saw fit to exercise it, to keep the man or woman from coming here, though he or she would be in every way a desirable immigrant.

But I have not time to pursue this subject. I have heretofore opposed, as I still oppose, the educational or literacy test. It is no test of fitness or character. Under it the bad, the vicious, or criminal minded might, if they can read, come in, while those who may be worthy, able-bodied, capable of self-support, and honest, but, unfortunately, illiterate, be kept out.

So, with these hurried remarks, I conclude my protest. Regarding the measure proposed by the conferees as harsh, ill conceived, undemocratic, un-American, and opposed to American principles, and attended with a spirit of narrowness, I can not give it my vote.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, hundreds of years ago the Chinese built a wall around their country for the purpose of keeping out foreigners, foreign influences, foreign culture, and whatever smacked of foreigners. We are much smarter than that. We do not build a physical wall, but we build a Chinese wall in the shape of a law, and we do it because we believe we already have a monopoly upon all the culture, all the science, all the arts the world is possessed of to-day. We do not need any more from the outside.

Mr. Speaker, I dislike to see the spirit which is behind this bill; it is not in harmony with the conception I have of true Americanism; it is a spirit of proscription, of intolerance, and of race prejudice; it is a spirit of nativism which has not been in the books of the fathers of this Republic.

It is impossible, of course, to discuss in the short time I have the several sections in this bill. I have been in this House for 20 years, but never within my recollection has it been attempted to pass a bill of this magnitude without the House of Representatives asserting its rights in at least preserving a chance to discuss and amend it. Yet we are confronted here with a parliamentary situation which requires this important measure to be acted upon without a chance for amendment, without a chance to discuss it. You are increasing the head tax from $4 to $5, and you think the steamship companies are to pay that. Nothing of the kind. The steamship companies will put it onto the immigrant, and taking a dollar from that poor man at a time when he needs it more than ever in all his life is like taking a nickel from the eyes of a blind man. Yet you insist on filching it from his pockets in spite of the fact that the immigrant fund is already overflowing with "blood money" collected in the same heartless manner.

Furthermore, you require a certificate of character from all immigrants coming from countries issuing such certificates. There may now be but one or two of such countries, but this new American statute will be incentive to all European countries to immediately pass laws stipulating, in effect, that certificates of character may be issued to those they want to get rid of and withheld from all those whom the authorities wish to stay at home. To this class belong, among others, all the young men subject to military duty, and thus the very flower of European manhood, the most desirable of all immigrants, will be prevented from coming to our shores.

I venture the prediction, Mr. Speaker, that it will not be long before you will deeply regret the action that is about to be taken. By this legislation you will build up Canada, Mexico, Brazil, and the Argentine Republic at the expense of the United States. You will find that you have killed the hen that lays the golden eggs, and that if our present prosperity is allowed to continue under Democratic rule, scarcity of labor will soon be the standing complaint of American industries. You will find that in enacting this bill you are listening to the voice of prejudice and ignorance rather than that of wisdom, to the braying of the jackass rather than to the voice of reason and intellect, and I can foresee the time when you will be willing not only to again open wide the doors of the Republic, but to offer premiums to immigrants whose coming you now regard as a hostile invasion; but then I am afraid it will be too late. By our unfriendly attitude we have already scared off the best—the Germans, the Irish, the Scandinavians—and with this new piece of legislation we will divert from us the balance of them.

I realize that those of us who have more closely studied the problem of immigration, and therefore more fully appreciate the monumental folly of this Know-nothing legislation, could preach until doomsday and yet could not make a dent on the prejudice which is responsible for it. It requires, like in the case of tariff legislation, the lessons of practical experience to change the people's minds. Indeed, it seems to be a human trait to exhaust every folly to its utmost extremity before reason will be given its way. This is true with respect to the war preparations of the nations at the time when the great masses of all of them are entirely willing to dwell in peace and harmony and settle their differences peacefully. It is true in regard to the prohibition movement, which foolishly contemplates the changing of innocent individual habits by law rather than by moral suasion; and it seems to be true in the matter of regulating the immigration problem, which you now propose to solve by simply stopping the influx of foreigners, totally ignoring the fact that you will thereby create a new problem much more serious than the one you are trying to solve. We shall see who is right.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] undertook to explain that Russia dislikes her Jewish subjects and does not want to keep them in that country. As a matter of fact, however, the reason assigned by the Government of the Czar for refusing to allow Jewish citizens of the United States of Russian birth to return to their native land under passports issued to them by the country of their adoption is that the Jews expatriated themselves and left Russia without the consent of the Russian Government. It seems to me that the provision contained in the conference report, which requires the production of penal certificates or certificates of character of any country that issues such certificates, in order to secure admission into the United States, will make it exceedingly difficult for the citizens of Russia of the Jewish faith to enter our ports in case Russia should adopt a law for the issuance of such certificates. It would also be difficult for political offenders from that country to come here. In my travels I have learned that it takes very little to constitute a political offense in most of the monarchical countries of Europe. The provision which has been inserted by the conferees requiring the production of such certificates to our officials constitutes one of my objections to the conference report. I think this feature of the law would result in many hardships.

I freely admit that there are many excellent provisions in the law, but there are also many provisions that, in my judgment, should never be enacted into law. The matter of the literacy test is the most important of these. I discussed that at some length when the Burnett bill was up for consideration in the House. The application of that test will be particularly hard in the case of the Territory of Hawaii, for the provisions in this bill will require all immigrants who go to the Territory of Hawaii to be able to read. For many years the labor in the sugar fields and plantations of Hawaii has been oriental. At first it was altogether Chinese coolies who were the workmen on these plantations. When we annexed Hawaii we extended our Chinese exclusion laws to the islands. Subsequently there was a large influx of Japanese coolies to the Territory. Indeed, the immigration of the latter was of such proportions that to-day the Japanese population far outnumbers any other on the Islands. The experience of many years has demonstrated that the oriental is not a satisfactory laborer. The planters and the citizens of Hawaii desire to supplant these orientals with Caucasian labor. An effort has been made to bring Portuguese and Spanish laborers to the islands to supplant the Chinese and Japanese laborers. Several shiploads of the former were brought to Hawaii to work on the plantations. This experiment met with great success. The natives of the Iberian Peninsula were paid one-third more salary than was paid the coolies of the Orient for similar services. The planters willingly paid the increase because they found that the Caucasian was a more desirable workman. But the Portuguese and Spaniards are largely illiterates. Under the terms of the conference report they could not be permitted to enter Hawaii and we will have the remarkable spectacle of one of our own Territories, which is trying to supplant its oriental workmen with Caucasian workmen, frustrated in its plans by the immigration laws of our own country. We find one of our Territories compelled to seek its labor from the exceedingly cheap labor countries of China and Japan. We of the West are decidedly averse to the orientalization of any section of our country. We of the West feel that Caucasian laborers are to be preferred to Chinese and Japanese coolies, and we feel that this bill, so far as Hawaii is concerned, discriminates in favor of the oriental and against the Caucasian.

It is needless for me to go into other details that make the conference report objectionable. I think those that I have enumerated show plainly that the measure has features that should never be placed upon the statute books, and for that reason I shall oppose the conference report.

Mr. SABATH. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CURLEY].

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, with reference to the section pointed out by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and which has been referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], which refers to the certificate of character from foreign governments, I want to point out that it is not the subjects of Russia alone with whom we are concerned as Members of this House, it is that splendid German citizenship, that French citizenship, that Italian citizenship, that we would have lost for the last 50 years if a bill of this character was on the statute books. We got the youth, we got the muscle, we got the intelligence, we got the determination, we got the ambition of those older civilizations in Europe whose people fled here to escape compulsory military service in Germany, in France, in Italy, and in every other section of Europe. [Applause.] This is the same old story. This bill comes in here, some 58 pages long, and in one afternoon's discussion an abomination has been discovered. I venture to say if we had seven days to discuss it there is not a man in the House who would be ready to vote for the bill. It is the same character of proscription that would have deprived this country of the splendid services of Thomas Francis Meagher, who at the head of his brigade captured more colors and standards than the rest of the Union Army put together in 1864. It would have deprived this country of the splendid attainments and qualifications of that masterly genius, John Boyle O'Reilly, who in protesting against the same character of proscriptive legislation, speaking for his own people, said:

No treason we bring from Erin,
Nor bring we shame nor guilt;
The sword we hold may be broken,
But we have not dropped the hilt.
The wreath we bear to Columbia
Is twisted of thorns, not bays,
And the songs we sing are saddened
By the thoughts of desolate days.
But the hearts we bring for freedom
Are bathed in a surge of tears,
And we claim our right by a freeman's fight
Outlasting a thousand years.

[Mr. BURNETT addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER. All time has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion is dilatory.

Mr. SHERLEY. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that since any motion of that kind has been made we have debated at some length.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not debatable. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SABATH) there were—ayes 31, noes 141.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is not required on a motion to adjourn.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURRAY. Is a quorum required to do business?

The SPEAKER. Certainly it is.

Mr. MURRAY. I suppose the thing the House will do is to proceed to do business after the declaration of the vote on the motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The roll call which was had a short time ago disclosed the presence of a quorum; 244 Members answering to their names. [Applause.]

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURRAY. Does the vote just declared by the Speaker disclose the absence of a quorum?

The SPEAKER. Every Member of the House does not stand up on a division.

Mr. MURRAY. A further parliamentary inquiry. Will the Chair take judicial notice of the fact that a quorum is present even in the absence of a quorum as disclosed by a recent division?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take judicial notice of the fact that 10 minutes ago the roll was called and 244 Members answered to their names. [Applause.] The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Speaker, is a motion in order at this time?

The SPEAKER. That depends upon what it is.

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House disagree to the conference report and send it back to the conferees.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the conference report to the committee on conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send his motion to the Clerk's desk, and the Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BARTHOLDT moves to recommit the bill to the committee on conference, with instruction to report forthwith and strike out the following: "Citizens or subjects of any country that issues penal certificates or certificates of character who do not produce to the immigration officials such a certificate."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced the "noes" seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BARTHOLDT) there were—ayes 62, noes 132.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Thirty-six gentlemen have arisen, not a sufficient number.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the other side.

Mr. BURNETT. Too late; I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. But there is a quorum present on this count.

Mr. SHERLEY. I beg the Chair's pardon, the count did not disclose a quorum.

The SPEAKER. One hundred and thirty-one plus 62 makes 193, and the Speaker makes 194. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. What is twice that number?

The SPEAKER. Why, there are certain vacancies in the House that makes 194 a quorum.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SABATH. I ask for the other side on this question.

Mr. BURNETT. It is too late.

The SPEAKER. No; it is not too late. The gentleman from Illinois demands the other side. [After counting.] Thirty-six have risen for the yeas and nays and 138 against it; that is one-fifth, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has no right to demand tellers.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the demand.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 70, nays 149, answered "present" 9, not voting 155, as follows:

TO THE SENATE:

I hereby name Hon. BENJAMIN F. SHIVELY, senior Senator from the State of Indiana, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence Saturday, the 18th day of January, 1913.

AUGUSTUS O. BACON,
President of the Senate Pro Tempore.

Mr. SHIVELY thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer for to-day, and directed the Secretary to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. LODGE and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

ELECTORS FOR PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, an authentic copy of the certificate of ascertainment of electors for President and Vice President appointed in the State of Florida at the election held in that State December 5, 1912; which was ordered to be filed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution:

S. 7637. An act to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge across the Illinois River near Havana, Ill.; and

S. J. Res. 150. Joint resolution appropriating $40,000 for expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

The message further announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 6380) to incorporate the American Hospital of Paris, disagreed to by the Senate; agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CLAYTON, Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia, and Mr. STERLING managers at the conference on the part of the House.

MEMORIAL SERVICES FOR THE LATE VICE PRESIDENT.

Mr. CUMMINS. From the Committee on Rules, to which was referred Senate resolution 426, directing the Committee on Rules to report an order for ceremonies in honor of the memory of the late Vice President JAMES S. SHERMAN, I report a resolution which I ask to have read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 435) was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

That invitations shall be extended to the President of the United States, the members of the Cabinet, the Chief Justice and Justices of the Supreme Court, the Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives, the judges of the Commerce Court, the judges of the Court of Customs Appeals, the judges of the courts of the District of Columbia, the officers of the Army and Navy stationed in Washington, the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the members of the Civil Service Commission. That such other invitations shall be issued as to the said committee shall seem best.

All expenses incurred by the committee in the execution of this order shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

HARRY S. WADE.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Committee on Claims reported favorably just before the close of the last session the bill (H. R. 15181) for the relief of Harry S. Wade. It was passed by the Senate, and at the request of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. BOURNE] I entered a motion to reconsider the vote, and the bill was returned from the House. The session ended without its being acted upon, but the papers are here, the bill was passed here, and I should like to have the bill with the report of the Committee on Claims placed on the calendar so that the motion for reconsideration may come up in regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CLAIMS OF AMERICAN CITIZENS.

Mr. DU PONT. On December 14, 1912, the Secretary of War transmitted to the Senate a report of the commission appointed by the War Department to investigate the claims of American citizens for damages suffered within American territory and growing out of the late insurrection in Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I ask that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the report, and that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMPILATION OF SENATE ELECTION CASES.

Mr. DILLINGHAM submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 436), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to have compiled and printed as a document a revised edition of the document entitled "Compilation of Senate Election Cases," bringing the same down to the close of the Sixty-second Congress.

ALICE V. HOUGHTON.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The bill (S. 5137) for the relief of Alice V. Houghton, the young lady who met with a serious accident in the Census Office Building was, at the request of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] recalled from the House and nothing has been done about it since. I have had a conversation on the subject with the Senator from New Jersey. It seems to be proper to send the bill back to the Committee on Claims so that the subcommittee may make an investigation of the condition of the case at the present time and report it again to the full committee. I ask that the bill be rereferred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I trust the Senator from South Dakota will not press a rereference of the matter. It will only entail a further humiliation upon this poor young woman, who has suffered for nearly two years. I think the 30th of this January it will be two years since this unfortunate woman met with the horrid accident.

Night before last I went to her home in order that I might fortify myself with further facts regarding the case. I say today that she is blind in one eye; the other is in a weeping and weak condition; and she is unable to read and unable to write. Her scalp is still in an unhealed condition. A thin, crackly skin covers a portion of her skull, breaking out at the least provocation. The wounds are dressed each day now by the family. The son of the doctor, Dr. White, stated to me in my own office yesterday that he felt it was making a bill against the family that it would be hardly possible for them to meet, and he said to them, "I will teach you to dress these wounds, though I will come once a week," and he says that studiously and punctiliously he has been there every week for the purpose of dressing the wounds.

The horrid story need not be recited. Two years ago this accident occurred while in performance of her duties as tabulator in the Census Bureau. The girl has suffered the agony and tortures of the damned through being coiled on an unprotected revolving shaft, whereby she was bereft of her splendid shock of hair; a comely woman, 28 years old, has been in suffering and torture.

I have on my desk, and desire to bring it up, if possible, today, a bill proposing that the Senate shall appropriate for her the sum of $8,000, $2,000 of which shall be paid upon the passage of the bill and the further sum of $6,000 paid in installments of $75 a month until the $6,000 shall have been used up.

I feel that this is but humanity; and here in Christmas time, while we are talking good will and kind fellowship and love of our fellows, this poor girl is disfigured beyond parallel. The scalp was torn from the back of her head and from the nape of her neck, over to and including the eyebrows, and the skin was torn from the bridge of her nose. I will state that the skin on the bridge of her nose has healed, but the veins and muscles stand out like whipcords on this poor girl's forehead. For all purposes in life, with her comeliness gone, money recompense can not bring back to her her splendid shock of hair, her glorious tresses, the pride of womanhood, and money can not make compensation for it. None of us, for ourselves, our wives, or daughters, would take a sum three times that which I earnestly urge. But this in a way can relieve at least the situation in which this poor girl is placed.

I urge you, my fellow Senators, with big hearts and broad and generous impulses, in God's name do not press this young woman to further humiliation and torture. I have here the affidavit of three or four physicians; I have the statement of Director Durand, of the Census Office—all certifying to this case. We had it thrashed out in our committee, and I urge that this further humiliation be not placed on this poor and unfortunate woman.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to ask what is the amount of this claim?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. There is no claim. The Senate passed a bill appropriating, I believe, $4,200.

Mr. NEWLANDS. How long has the case been pending?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Nearly two years.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will ask the Senator if he does not think that any jury in a suit against a private corporation would bring in a verdict of ten or fifteen or twenty thousand dollars for such injuries?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Surely, against any private corporation in this land, I care not what. No jury in a civilized community would pretend to fix less than $25,000, and I believe in such a case the party could recover $50,000. That I do not ask.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I desire to inquire of the Senator from New Jersey the parliamentary attitude of this bill. I wish to say, so far as I am individually concerned, I have read of this accident in the newspapers and of the suffering of this poor woman from time to time; I have felt from the start that if it had been an ordinary case of employer's liability in a suit against a private corporation a verdict of an enormous amount would have been found. I have witnessed with indignation the delay of Congress in satisfying this claim. So far as I am concerned I want to act speedily and justly and liberally on this subject.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to ask what is the parliamentary status of the claim presented by the Senator from New Jersey?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] asks unanimous consent for the reference of the bill back to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I be permitted to say a word?

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to have the Senator explain the parliamentary status of the matter.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, we are all, I think, in sympathy with what the Senator from New Jersey has said. It is an appealing case, and I do not for one moment wish it to be understood that I desire in the slightest degree, directly or indirectly, to retard the case, nor to take any steps that are unnecessary in the matter of having it fairly presented to the Senate.

The Committee on Claims had the bill before it. It gave it consideration and it made a report to the Senate. The report was adopted after some debate and the bill passed. Afterwards, during the last session, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] made an appeal to the Senate on the ground that in his belief we had not allowed a sufficient amount, and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] joined him in the request, and we brought the bill back from the House.

I do not think that responsibility for inaction since that time is chargeable to the Committee on Claims or to its chairman, because we have had no jurisdiction over it. The Senate recalled the bill from the House; and the Senator from New Jersey, who was active in having it recalled, has never brought the matter up, nor has the Senator from Mississippi. The chairman of the Committee on Claims has been engaged with the omnibus claims bill, and after having a conversation with the Senator from New Jersey, and sympathizing with him in his desire, my only object in bringing up the matter in this way was that we might, in an orderly manner, in the situation as it now exists, have the bill brought before the Senate and that we might take such action in regard to it as the merits of the case require.

If it is better to have it acted upon without going back to the committee, I will not insist upon it at all; but because it has been lying idle and nothing has been done about it since it came back from the other House, I desired to present it to the Senate, and I assure the Senator from New Jersey that he need have no apprehension that the claim upon its merits will not be considered by the Committee on Claims, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I believe that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey insist upon his objection?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I object, sir.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. In deference to the Senator from Massachusetts, I withdraw the objection until he may be heard in regard to the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I merely wanted to say that, as I understand, this bill has been recalled from the other House, and therefore it occupies exactly the same position as it did when it left the Senate. I can see no reason for recommitting the bill. I think we can dispose of it now, and I think we ought to dispose of it now.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Let me give one reason why the matter has been seemingly delayed. During the last session, in the interest and with the general purpose of facilitating public business, I was urged to hold the bill over from time to time, which I did. At that time I conferred with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] regarding the matter. His suggestion was that the bill be again rereferred, and that prompted me immediately to go to the home of this young woman, and I have come back fortified and reenforced with the facts. I feel that I am justified, with no purpose other than to do justice to this suffering young woman, in asking that the bill be not rereferred to the committee. I should like, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] says, to have the bill taken up and disposed of now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is asked for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Now, Mr. President, I move to amend the bill, on page 1, line 5, after the name "Houghton," by adding the words:

Sum of $8,000, $2,000 of said sum to be paid to Alice V. Houghton upon the passage of this act, and the balance of said amount to be paid in monthly installments of $75 each: Provided, That no sum of money due or to become due to said Alice V. Houghton under this act shall be liable to attachment, levy, or seizure by or under any legal or equitable process whatever, but shall inure wholly to the benefit of said Alice V. Houghton.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests to the Senator from New Jersey that it would seem necessary to first move a reconsideration of the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Then, I move, Mr. President, a reconsideration of the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, I should like to hear the bill read before we do anything further.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I inquire of the Senator from New Jersey whether he is using the printed copy of the bill as it previously passed the Senate? There were some changes made in it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill as it passed the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 5137) for the relief of Alice V. Houghton, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Alice V. Houghton the sum of $4,200, for injuries received while employed in the Bureau of the Census, Washington, D. C., January 31, 1911, said amount to be paid in monthly installments of $50 each, and not otherwise, for the period of seven years: Provided, That no sum of money due or to become due to the said Alice V. Houghton under this act shall be liable to attachment, levy, or seizure by or under any legal or equitable process whatever, but shall inure wholly to the benefit of the said Alice V. Houghton.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I presume the Senator from New Jersey means to strike out certain words that appear in the bill and to insert the amendment proposed by him, though it is not so stated.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Undoubtedly; that is my proposition, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask the chairman of the Committee on Claims what amount has already been paid to this unfortunate woman? I think there was a bill passed in her behalf some time ago.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, no bill for her relief except this one has ever passed. At the time she was injured the Director of the Census came before the committee and some proceeding was had which possibly resulted in a bill being introduced.

Mr. SMOOT. It resulted in a bill being passed.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think that is correct, but that was before I was chairman of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is unquestionably true.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There was an allowance for expenses in the hospital while she was there and for nurses, I think, although I am not sure about it, because it was before I had jurisdiction.

Mr. SMOOT. And her wage for one year.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It amounted to about $1,500, but it has now all been expended.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; I so understand, but I wanted the record correct. A payment has already been made.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think that statement is absolutely correct, and I think the amount provided was $1,500. The Senator from Utah was on the committee at that time, and he may have some distinct recollection about it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I had an impression it was a thousand dollars, but I am not sure about it.

Mr. SMOOT. A relief bill for Miss Houghton was passed which allowed her her wage for one year, which, I think, amounted to a thousand dollars.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Eight hundred and forty dollars.

Mr. SMOOT. Eight hundred and forty dollars and whatever expenses there were. I do not remember just the exact amount.

Mr. CRAWFORD. My recollection is that it was $1,500.

Mr. McCUMBER. Was the $1,500 paid to her individually, for her own benefit?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I understand that some of it was expended in paying her expenses.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, it is impossible to hear what is being said.

Mr. McCUMBER. What I am trying to get at is what has been received by this young lady herself.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Practically nothing, because, as I understand, every dollar of the appropriation which was made was used in defraying her expenses in the hospital and for nurses during the early period of her injury.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is that true, I will ask the Senator, regarding the $840 which was paid?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I understand so.

Mr. McCUMBER. And she received no benefit from that?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have that impression about it—that it all went for her expenses.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That, I think, is correct, Mr. President.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota whether he thinks the sum allowed by this amendment sufficiently compensates this young woman for this terrible accident?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No sum of money can compensate one for an injury of this kind. Money could not compensate the Senator for losing his sight or losing his hearing or losing a leg. There is no money which can compensate for injuries of that kind.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me ask the Senator another question. Does he not think that in a case against a private corporation involving an employer's liability the judgment obtained would be a larger sum than the Government of the United States proposes to pay, even under the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That would depend entirely upon the question of negligence and some other questions that might be involved whether it was purely accidental or not. This case was what you might class as an accident, not attributable to the negligence of this young lady nor attributable to the negligence of the Government. It was one of those unfortunate happenings which sometimes occur.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Was it not negligence to have such a shaft as that in that room uncovered and unprotected?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It was not unprotected. We went into that very carefully. There was a revolving shaft running horizontally next to the floor, which was protected by rods.

Mr. NEWLANDS. By what?

Mr. CRAWFORD. By rods; a network of rods covered it. I think it might be said it is just about a stand-off, when you come to the consideration of the question of negligence. This young lady had been working there for months; she knew about this shaft being there; she dropped some cards, as the record shows, and some of them fell under this revolving shaft, so that it was necessary for her to get down on the floor, apparently on her hands and knees, and put her head down pretty close to the floor to reach under and get what she had lost. In that way her hair came in contact with the shaft, even through these rods. Perhaps the electricity or magnetic influence of that shaft was responsible. At any rate her hair was caught and wrapped around the shaft. The accident occurred in that way.

I think the question of negligence is scarcely to be considered in the case at all, because it would be unfortunate for her if we should apply any such rule as that. It is not a clear case where you could charge the Government with being negligent, in view of the fact that the protecting rods had been placed over the shaft. That is the situation with reference to that matter.

If we follow the rule of undertaking to give full compensation, we will have to go back and reconsider many and many a case of injury in the gun shops and on the Isthmus, where we have paid the unfortunate victims only one year's salary, even where they have lost their eyes or both legs or both hands, and where there is present every element that appeals to sympathy.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, so far as I am individually concerned, I regard this as a very inadequate compensation for this terrific injury and for the sufferings this poor girl has undergone, and I should be glad largely to increase this amount, but the Senator from New Jersey urges me to permit it to go through granting the amount provided for in his amendment, and, as he has had charge of the matter, I yield to his judgment, although individually, I repeat, I regard this as a very meager allowance to this young woman.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Jersey. Does the Chair understand the Senator desires to modify his amendment?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to modify it, as I have indicated to the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of," it is proposed to strike out "$4,200" and in lieu to insert "$8,000," and in line 9, after the date "1911," to strike out:

Said amount to be paid in monthly installments of $50 each, and not otherwise, for the period of seven years: Provided, That no sum of money due or to become due to the said Alice V. Houghton under this act shall be liable to attachment, levy, or seizure by or under any legal or equitable process whatever, but shall inure wholly to the benefit of the said Alice V. Houghton.

And insert:

Two thousand dollars of said sum to be paid to the said Alice V. Houghton upon the passage of this act and the remainder of said sum to be paid in monthly installments of $75 each: Provided, That no sum of money due or to become due to said Alice V. Houghton under this act shall be liable to attachment, levy, or seizure by or under any legal of equitable process whatever, but shall inure wholly to the benefit of the said Alice V. Houghton.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENTS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to have put into the RECORD certain precedents bearing on the question of unanimous-consent agreements, which we discussed here the other day, as to the power of the Chair to resubmit a request and whether the Chair should ask unanimous consent to resubmit it. I have only had opportunity to examine or have examined the RECORD of this Congress partly.

I find that on January 23, 1912, the following occurred:

Mr. BROWN. I wish to appeal to the Senator from Utah to let the bill go over. No hearing on the bill has been printed——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hardly thinks that this proceeding is regular. The motion is not debatable. It has been declared carried, and no Senator has questioned it.

Mr. BROWN. I question now whether the motion has been carried.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair asked the Senator from Missouri if he questioned it; the Chair understood that he simply asked to make a statement; and the Chair asked if unanimous consent would be given therefor.

Mr. REED. The President is in error in regard to my position. I——

The VICE PRESIDENT. If that is so, the Chair will again put the motion. The Chair did not mean to foreclose anybody's right to vote on the proposition.

I find that on April 11, 1912, the following occurred:

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think it is absolutely necessary to have a fair expression of the Senate as to whether one-fifth of its membership or one-fifth of a quorum can demand the yeas and nays if a quorum is not present.

Mr. LODGE. Let the request be again put, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will again put the request.

Which had already been put and announced as carried.

On the 1st of May, 1912, the following took place:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the message of the President, with the accompanying report, will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I had not finished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And, without objection, the resolution offered by the Senator from Maryland is referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GALLINGER. The resolution should be stated from the desk.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I had the floor, and I had not finished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair begs the pardon of the Senator from Georgia. The Chair supposed the Senator had finished.

The question was again put, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] will be read.

And it was again put.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. Just one more.

On August 10, 1912, the following took place:

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] be the President of the Senate pro tempore from Monday, August 12, 1912, to Saturday, August 17, 1912, both inclusive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate has heard the motion of the Senator from Utah. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. GRONNA. We can not hear in this part of the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota not having heard the motion, the Secretary will state it from the desk.

And he put it again.

I merely wish to show that it is not unheard of for the Chair, without asking unanimous consent, to again put the question when any Senator rose and said he had not heard the request or could not obtain the floor before the request was announced as granted.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think there will be no controversy with the Senator from Massachusetts, and I do not think it very important that he should have put this in the RECORD.

None of the cases to which he alludes involved a unanimous-consent agreement to vote upon a bill on a certain day, and voting upon a bill on a certain day is very much more important than the questions involved in the citations the Senator has made.

I suggested, when interrogated, that had I been in the chair, and objection had been made, I would not have felt it my privilege to put the request again. But it is inconsequential. The Chair can do pretty much anything on matters of that kind as long as it is agreeable to Senators. But I doubt very much whether the authority of the Chair extends to the point the Senator from Massachusetts contends.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed, under Rule VIII, to the consideration of bills on the calendar to which there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent for the consideration of unobjected cases on the calendar. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the first bill in order will be stated.

The bill (S. 2493) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make an examination of certain claims of the State of Missouri was announced as first in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1505) for the relief of certain officers on the retired list of the United States Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 2151) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to use, at his discretion, surplus moneys in the Treasury in the purchase or redemption of the outstanding interest-bearing obligations of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill has been read a couple of times.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill has heretofore been read.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We should like to have the bill again read.

The Secretary again read the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This bill has been on the calendar for a very great length of time, so much so that it has almost escaped the attention of a number of us. I had reached the conclusion that it would not be pressed. It seems to me, if it is desired to press it, it ought to go over for a few days, and that we ought to have a distinct understanding, so that all Senators may be notified that the bill is to come up.

Mr. SMOOT. Make the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 256) affecting the sale and disposal of public or Indian lands in town sites, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The consideration of this bill has heretofore been objected to by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], whom I do not see in his seat, and I ask that it go over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to state that the senior Senator from Georgia is detained at home on account of serious illness in his family. He is in Macon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 3) to cooperate with the States in encouraging instruction in agriculture, the trades, and industries and home economics in secondary schools; in maintaining instruction in these vocational subjects in State normal schools; in maintaining extension departments in State colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over; and the next one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 5076) to promote instruction in forestry in States and Territories which contain national forests, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I know there are a number of Senators who have objected to the bill in the past, and they are not at present in the Chamber. Therefore I ask that it go over, although I have no special objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 2234) to provide for a primary nominating election in the District of Columbia, at which the qualified electors of the said District shall have the opportunity to vote for their first and second choice among those aspiring to be candidates of their respective political parties for President and Vice President of the United States, to elect their party delegates to their national conventions, and to elect their national committeemen, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

THE LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

The bill (S. 2051) to promote the efficiency of the Life-Saving Service was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has heretofore been considered in Committee of the Whole, and has been read.

Mr. SMOOT. Has the bill been read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been read twice.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5728) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in claims of the Osage Nation of Indians against the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

The resolution (S. Res. 242) directing the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to inquire into and report to the Senate whether post-office inspectors are being sent through the country to influence postmasters to aid in the election of delegates for or against any candidate for the Presidency, etc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, it will go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it go over under Rule IX, if it is to remain on the calendar at all. It ought to be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SMOOT. I think so, too.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move its indefinite postponement.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let it go to the calendar under Rule IX instead of being indefinitely postponed.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the resolution will go over under Rule IX.

Mr. GALLINGER. I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire withdraws his motion to indefinitely postpone.

The bill (S. 3316) to repeal an act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GORE. Let the bill go over. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is objected to, and goes over.

CONTRACTORS FOR BATTLESHIP INDIANA.

The bill (S. 4840) to carry into effect the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the contractors for building the United States battleship Indiana was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let this and the next three bills be passed over.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed. There has been an adverse report here for months.

Mr. LODGE. And the next three bills.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The next three bills ought to be placed under Rule IX.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator will allow the bill for the relief of the contractors of the battleship Indiana to go over under Rule IX.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to say to the Senator from Utah that that is utterly ridiculous. I have allowed that bill, notwithstanding an adverse report, to be kept here because parties have said they wanted to propose it as an amendment to the omnibus claims bill, and they have never even proposed the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. CRAWFORD. There is a unanimous adverse report here. No minority views have ever even been filed. As a matter of courtesy I allowed the bill to stand on the calendar, when it should have been indefinitely postponed months ago. It has been here for several months.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator from South Dakota say the bill has received a unanimous adverse report from the committee?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is a unanimous adverse report.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not so understand it.

Mr. OLIVER. I did not so understand it, either.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Where is the minority report, then?

Mr. OLIVER. It is not necessary to file the views of the minority.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over under Rule IX.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I insist upon the indefinite postponement of the bill. If counsel insist upon the bill remaining upon the calendar of the Senate, I will entertain the Senate with a two or three hours' discussion of the claim, and its merits can be aired. Otherwise Senators had better let it be indefinitely postponed. I am willing to give counsel a challenge on that right now. If anyone wants the merits of that claim challenged, he can get it.

Mr. OLIVER. What does the Senator from South Dakota mean by "counsel"?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I mean "Senator." "Counsel" is an honorable designation, but I will change it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota——

Mr. CRAWFORD. I move that the further consideration of the bill be indefinitely postponed, basing it upon the adverse report.

Mr. SMOOT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement we are proceeding here with the consideration of bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right; by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMOOT. We are proceeding with the consideration of bills to which there is no objection. Any Senator can object to the consideration of the bill. I have no more interest in this claim than I have in any other claim.

Mr. CRAWFORD. We will discuss it at length some day.

Mr. SMOOT. Under that rule I shall now reserve the right to object.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask that the bill may go over. I do not want it to go under Rule IX. There is no graveyard for the bill, unless it is going to be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present consideration of the bill is objected to, and it goes over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the next three bills be passed over.

The bill (S. 4159) for the relief of F. M. Lyman, jr., the bill (S. 4230) for the relief of Robert F. Scott, and the bill (S. 364) for the relief of Ranney Y. Lyman were announced as next in order on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills will be passed over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let them go over under Rule IX, unless there is objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 111) to authorize the sale and disposition of the surplus and unallotted lands in Washabaugh County, in the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, and making appropriation to carry the same into effect, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let that bill go over.

Mr. CLAPP rose.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Did the Senator from Minnesota desire to have it read?

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator's colleague, who is interested in the bill, is absent.

Mr. CRAWFORD. My colleague is likely to be here within a day or two. I think the bill should go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The consideration of the bill is objected to, and it goes over.

The bill (S. 5186) to incorporate the Brotherhood of North American Indians was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The consideration of the bill is objected to, and it goes over.

The bill (S. 461) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in claims of the Ponca Tribe of Indians against the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 5917) relating to procedure in United States courts was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The consideration of the bill is objected to, and it goes over.

Mr. BRISTOW subsequently said: Inadvertently I objected to the consideration of Senate bill 5917. I thought the Secretary was referring to Senate bill 461. Personally I have no objection to Senate bill 5917.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas withdraw his objection?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then let the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection having been withdrawn, the Senate will return to the bill, without objection.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, the scope of that bill goes beyond its title. The effect of it would be to make a very radical change in the entire judicial system as administered in the Federal courts, and it ought to have very thorough discussion before it is seriously considered by the Senate. I object to its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the bill goes over.

The bill (S. 118) granting an increase of pension to Harriet Pierson Porter was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] not being present, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1) to establish a department of health, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 5169) authorizing the Ponca Tribe of Indians to intervene in the suit of the Omaha Indians in the Court of Claims, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Consideration being objected to, the bill goes over.

The bill (S. 6497) to protect migratory game and insectivorous birds in the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over, as I understand the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], who has the bill in charge, has given notice that he will call it up next Wednesday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The consideration of the bill is objected to, and it goes over.

The bill (S. 3463) to establish a Bureau of National Parks, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

The bill (S. 2371) to amend section 3224 of the United States Compiled Statutes so as to prevent the restraining of the assessment or collection of any tax—State, county, municipal, district, or Federal—was announced as next in order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 5455) to establish a system of wireless telegraphy in the Philippine Islands was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Consideration is objected to, and the bill goes over.

The bill (S. 1231) for the relief of the heirs of John W. West, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

Mr. GORE. I should like to have it go to Rule IX.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma asks that the bill go over under Rule IX. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. No objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 5955) for the relief of certain retired officers of the Navy and Marine Corps was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The consideration of the bill is objected to, and it goes over.

The bill (H. R. 1332) regulating Indian allotments disposed of by will was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator reporting the bill not being present, I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Present consideration is objected to, and the bill goes over.

The bill (S. 5863) for the retirement of employees in the civil service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I object to the present consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Present consideration is objected to, and the bill goes over.

The bill (S. 4654) to regulate contracts for the future delivery of cotton was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Consideration is objected to, and the bill goes over.

STATE GAME RESOURCES.

The bill (S. 6109) for the protection and increase of State game resources was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator reporting the bill is not here to explain it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have sent for the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], and he will be here in just a minute. Until he arrives I will take care of the bill, if the Senator will withhold his objection until that time.

Mr. SMOOT. I will withhold it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. There is a report accompanying the bill, which I have not had time to look into. I notice that the bill was introduced by the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], who is a member of the committee from which it was reported. The chairman of the committee will be here in a minute. I will ask, if there be no objection, that the bill be put on its passage.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, this is another measure of very comprehensive application. It is rather a novel subject to be treated by national legislation. I had always rested under the impression that the game of the several States belonged to the State until it was taken by the citizens of the State, and that it was subject to the statutes the several States saw proper to pass. It would be an interesting investigation to determine that ownership is in the National Government or subject to the regulation of the National Government, and I think the bill had better wait until we have time to discuss that. We are working to-day under a rule which provides for the consideration of unobjected bills, which practically means those that provoke no discussion and require no explanation—bills that are somewhat local in character or which are so obviously proper that nobody objects to their consideration.

I have no more interest in the general question involved in the bill than other Senators, but I would rather have it discussed and be ready to discuss it when there would be room for some remarks from me. I believe I will ask that the bill shall go over.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, what the Senator says is equivalent to an objection, and I therefore make no further request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The consideration of the bill is objected to, and it goes over.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LAS VEGAS, N. MEX.

The bill (S. 6744) to provide for the purchase of an extension to the site and the erection of a Federal building in Las Vegas, N. Mex., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to contract for the erection and completion in the city of Las Vegas, N. Mex., of a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, for the use and accommodation of the United States post office, Federal court, and other Government offices upon ground already authorized by the Government for such purpose, the cost of said building not to exceed the sum of $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the erection of a Federal building in Las Vegas, N. Mex."

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The next business on the calendar was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 4584) to promote the efficiency of the Naval Militia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I object to that bill being considered to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The consideration of the bill being objected to, it goes over.

The bill (S. 5069) to promote the efficiency of the enlisted personnel of the United States Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I make the same request as to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present consideration of the bill being objected to, it goes over.

PAROLE OF PRISONERS.

The bill (H. R. 14925) to amend "An act to parole United States prisoners, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 1 of the "Act to parole United States prisoners, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910, so as to read:

That every prisoner who has been or may hereafter be convicted of any offense against the United States and is confined in execution of the judgment of such conviction in any United States penitentiary or prison for a definite term or terms of over one year, or for the term of his natural life, whose record of conduct shows that he has observed the rules of such institution, and who, if sentenced for a definite term, has served one-third of the total of such term or terms for which he was sentenced, or, if sentenced for the term of his natural life, has served not less than 15 years, may be released on parole as hereinafter provided.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask permission to insert the following letter from the Attorney General in relation to the bill.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, July 31, 1912.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am very much interested in a bill now pending before the Senate, having passed the House, being H. R. 14925, amending the act to parole United States prisoners, approved June 25, 1910, by extending the benefit of the parole law to prisoners who have been sentenced for life terms. This amendment was recommended by the members of the Federal boards of parole (see Report Attorney General, Appendix 29, p. 398) and by me in my annual report for 1911 (p. 73). In that report I used the following language:

"I concur in the recommendations made by the boards of parole in their report that the law should be modified so as to include within its provisions prisoners undergoing life sentences by providing, as is done in the statutes of a number of States, that such prisoners shall be eligible to parole when they shall have actually served some long period of years. There are now upward of 200 prisoners serving life sentences in Federal penitentiaries. At present the only hope of a life prisoner, no matter how exemplary his conduct may be, lies in the exercise by the President of the power of Executive clemency. I believe it to be more to the interests of society that such prisoners should be liberated on parole, subject to the supervision and regulation which is possible under the parole law, than that they should be discharged absolutely by Executive pardon. In this connection I invite careful attention to a consideration by Congress of the desirability of adopting the indeterminate sentence for prisoners, such as prevails in many of the States. That system is an important, if not a necessary, adjunct to a parole law. The system has produced excellent results and is regarded by the most enlightened penologists as embodying the most successful method of dealing with the punishment of crime."

The subject of the extension of the parole law to life prisoners was considered by the American Prison Association, among whose members are the most able and prominent students of prison discipline and reform in the country, at its meeting held at Richmond, Va., in 1908, and a committee of five was appointed to make investigations and report the following year upon the advisability of extending the benefit of parole to life prisoners. That committee submitted a report to the association at its meeting in Seattle in 1909, which is printed in the report of the transactions of the association for that year. It unanimously reported in favor of the extension of the benefit of parole to life prisoners, discussing very fully all of the arguments for and against such action, and its report was adopted by the association. The committee discusses the two main hostile criticisms which have been urged against the extension of the parole law to cover life prisoners, namely, first, that it would tend to blur the deterrent effects of life imprisonment; and, second, that the power of parole might be exercised unwisely. These objections, the committee states, seem to mistake fears for facts and shadows for substance. The first for the reason that, after a period ranging from 10 to 30 years and after the details of the crime have faded from public memory, the deterrent influence which life imprisonment exerts upon others becomes vitiated, if, indeed, the value of life penalties is not rated too highly as a preventive force; and the second for the reason that, to quote the words of the committee:

"* * * every consideration by which responsible authorities are moved would encourage the avoidance of rashness and the exercise of caution and discrimination in granting conditional releases to life prisoners and would operate against any reckless breaking of eggs to make liberty omelets."

The conclusions reached by the committee are as follows:

"1. The extension of parole to life prisoners who, according to expert judgment, are safe to be at large, whose offense was born of an overmastering impulse, and whose previous record was not vicious puts in their hands the tools of social rehabilitation, interprets penalties in terms of humanity and of hope, fosters a more even distribution of justice, and is a sound public policy.

"2. No parole that would offend public opinion in the State should be granted. Conditional releases that affront popular sentiment would tend to discredit the whole parole system and would be a tragedy of administration.

"3. No life prisoner should be paroled until he has served long enough to satisfy the reasonable requirements of justice, as construed by the enlightened sentiment of the Commonwealth, and until the immediate prejudices growing out of the crime disappear and suitable employment for the convict has been procured.

"4. A parole should not be based on any arbitrary compliance with prison rules, but the question should be determined by a broad consideration of all the facts bearing on the case, such as the nature and circumstances of the crime, the man's record in prison and out of prison, his general character, and the likelihood of his leading an honorable life. Emphatically no political or personal pressure should be permitted to influence the calm judgment of the paroling authority.

"5. The wisdom of discarding the definite life penalty for an indeterminate sentence, whose minimum term shall be fixed by law or by the court, and whose maximum term shall be the offender's natural life, is commended to the attention of State legislatures."

I inclose a memorandum of the laws of those States which have extended the benefits of the parole system to life prisoners. Fifteen States in all have taken this action. In probably not more than two of them is it necessary for a life prisoner to serve more than 15 years before he is eligible to parole. This period would seem to be amply sufficient to impress upon the prisoner the seriousness of his crime and to act as a deterrent to others, while at the same time not being long enough to prevent his release until the period when his mental and physical powers are so deteriorated that he can not be of any value in the community. The alternative to granting a parole is the present system of Executive clemency. I inclose a memorandum showing the commutations of sentences which have resulted in the release of prisoners sentenced for terms of life imprisonment during the past five years. There are 51 of them in all, an average of about 10 a year, and of that number only 10 had actually served more than 15 years' imprisonment, the average being about 11¼ years. Of course, these prisoners being discharged on the commutation of sentence, the authorities had no further hold upon them, and the experiment of release must be solved in advance, whereas under the parole system, should the release of the prisoner prove to be detrimental to society, he may be retaken and returned to the penitentiary.

There are applications for Executive clemency in 21 life cases now pending before the department, action on which has been delayed because of the pendency of the bill H. R. 14925.

I believe the proposed law is in conformity with the views of the best-known penologists and of the most thoughtful students of prison reform. I sincerely hope you may see your way clear to support it, and I should be much obliged if you would give me an opportunity to discuss the matter further with you in case you are not disposed to favor the passage of the bill.

Very respectfully, yours, GEORGE W. WICKERSHAM, Attorney General.

BOTANICAL LABORATORY.

The bill (S. 93) to establish a botanical laboratory at Denver, Colo., was announced as next in order.

Mr. OLIVER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made and the bill goes over.

MOUNT RAINIER NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (S. 4958) to accept the cession by the State of Washington of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Mount Rainier National Park, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I simply desire to state that the bill is practically a copy of the law that is now in force with reference to the protection of the Yellowstone National Park. While it contains a number of provisions of a criminal character and so on, those provisions are just the same as those which have been in force in connection with the Yellowstone National Park. The bill is urged very strongly by the Secretary of the Interior, and it is a matter of considerable importance.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 15, before the word "courts," to strike out "and circuit," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That said park shall constitute a part of the United States judicial district of Washington, and the district courts of the United States in and for said district shall have jurisdiction of all offenses committed within said boundaries.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, to strike out section 7, in the following words:

SEC. 7. That any United States commissioner duly appointed by the United States Court for the Western District of Washington and residing in said district shall have power and jurisdiction to hear and act upon all complaints made of any and all violations of this act or of the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Interior for the government of the park and for the protection of the animals, birds, and fish, and objects of interest therein, and for other purposes authorized by this act. That any such commissioner shall have power, upon sworn complaint, to issue process in the name of the United States for the arrest of any person charged with a violation of this act or of the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Interior, as aforesaid, or with any misdemeanor or other like offense, the punishment provided for which does not exceed a fine of $100, and to try the person thus charged, and, if found guilty, to impose the punishment and adjudge the forfeiture prescribed. In all cases of conviction an appeal shall lie from the judgment of any such commissioner to the United States District Court for the Western District of Washington. The said United States district court shall prescribe rules of procedure and practice for said commissioner in the trial of cases and with reference to said appeals.

And to insert in lieu thereof a new section, as follows:

SEC. 7. That the United States District Court for the Western District of Washington shall appoint a commissioner, who shall reside in the park and who shall have jurisdiction to hear and act upon all complaints made of any violation of law or of the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Interior for the government of the park and for the protection of the animals, birds, and fish, and objects of interest therein, and for other purposes authorized by this act. Such commissioner shall have power, upon sworn information, to issue process in the name of the United States for the arrest of any person charged with the commission of any misdemeanor, or charged with a violation of the rules and regulations, or with a violation of any provision of this act prescribed for the government of said park and for the protection of the animals, birds, and fish in said park, and to try the person so charged, and, if found guilty, to impose the punishment and adjudge the forfeiture prescribed. In all cases of conviction an appeal shall lie from the judgment of said commissioner to the United States District Court for the Western District of Washington, and the United States district court in said district shall prescribe rules of procedure and practice for said commissioner in the trial of cases and for appeal to said United States district court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, to strike out section 10, in the following words:

SEC. 10. That such commissioner and the marshal of the United States and his deputies in the western district of Washington shall be paid the same fees and compensation as are now provided by law for like services in said district.

And to insert in lieu thereof a new section, as follows:

SEC. 10. That the commissioner provided for in this act shall, in addition to the fees allowed by law to commissioners of the district courts of the United States, be paid an annual salary of $1,500, payable quarterly.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I call attention to the word "courts," in section 2, page 2, line 15. It should be in the singular number; it should be "court."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, page 2, line 15, after the words "the district," it is proposed to strike out "courts" and insert "court."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM MULLALLY.

The bill (S. 1485) for the relief of William Mullally was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. That bill is adversely reported, and I suggest that it be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LODGE. No; I do not object.

Mr. SANDERS. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] asked that this bill go to the calendar, and I see that he is now in the Chamber. The bill is accompanied by an adverse report, and, unless the Senator from Ohio objects, I think it should be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection of the Senator from Ohio, the bill goes over.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF ARTS AND LETTERS.

IMMIGRATION OF ALIENS.

Mr. LODGE. I submit a conference report on the immigration bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts submits a privileged report, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the bill (S. 3175) entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States" having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows.

Strike out all of said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the word 'alien' wherever used in this act shall include any person not a native born or naturalized citizen of the United States, but this definition shall not be held to include Indians not taxed or citizens of the islands under the jurisdiction of the United States. That the term 'United States' as used in the title as well as in the various sections of this act shall be construed to mean the United States and any waters, territory, or other place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, except the Isthmian Canal Zone; but if any alien shall leave the Canal Zone and attempt to enter any other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, nothing contained in this act shall be construed as permitting him to enter under any other conditions than those applicable to all aliens. That the term 'seaman' as used in this act shall include every person signed on the ship's articles and employed in any capacity on board any vessel arriving in the United States from any foreign part or place.

"That this act shall be enforced in the Philippine Islands by officers of the General Government thereof designated by appropriate legislation of said Government.

"SEC. 2. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of $5 for every alien, including alien seamen regularly admitted as provided in this act, entering the United States. The said tax shall be paid to the collector of customs of the port of customs district to which said alien shall come, or, if there be no collector at such port or district, then to the collector nearest thereto, by the master, agent, owner, or consignee of the vessel, transportation line, or other conveyance or vehicle bringing such alien to the United States, or by the alien himself if he does not come by a vessel, transportation line, or other conveyance or vehicle. The tax imposed by this section shall be a lien upon the vessel or other vehicle of carriage or transportation bringing such aliens to the United States, and shall be a debt in favor of the United States against the owner or owners of such vessel or other vehicle, and the payment of such tax may be enforced by any legal or equitable remedy. That the said tax shall not be levied on account of aliens who shall enter the United States after an uninterrupted residence of at least one year, immediately preceding such entrance, in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, or the Republic of Mexico, nor on account of otherwise admissible residents of any possession of the United States, nor on account of aliens in transit through the United States, nor upon aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory: Provided, That the Commissioner General of Immigration, under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, by agreement with transportation lines, as provided in section 23 of this act, may arrange in some other manner for the payment of the tax imposed by this section upon any or all aliens seeking admission from foreign contiguous territory: Provided further, That said tax, when levied upon aliens entering the Philippine Islands, shall be paid into the treasury of said islands, to be expended for the benefit of such islands: Provided further, That in the cases of aliens applying for admission from foreign contiguous territory and rejected, the head tax collected shall upon application be refunded to the alien: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to aliens arriving in Guam or Hawaii; but if any such alien, not having become a citizen of the United States, shall later arrive at any port or place of the United States on the North American Continent the provisions of this section shall apply.

"SEC. 3. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons, and persons who have been insane within five years previous; persons who have had one or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; paupers; persons likely to become a public charge; professional beggars; vagrants; persons afflicted with tuberculosis in any form or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease; persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living; persons who have committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; citizens or subjects of any country that issues penal certificates or certificates of character who do not produce to the immigration officials such a certificate; polygamists, or persons who admit their belief in the practice of polygamy; anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or of all forms of law, or who disbelieve in or are opposed to organized government, or who advocate the assassination of public officials; persons who are members of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government, or who advocate or teach the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character; prostitutes, or women or girls coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who procure or attempt to bring in prostitutes or women or girls for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who are supported by or receive in whole or in part the proceeds of prostitution; persons hereinafter called contract laborers, who have been induced, assisted, encouraged, or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment, whether such offers or promises are true or false, or in consequence of agreements, oral, written or printed, express or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled; persons who have come in consequence of advertisements for laborers printed, published, or distributed in a foreign country; persons who have been deported under any of the provisions of this act, and who may again seek admission within one year from the date of such deportation, unless prior to their reembarkation at a foreign port the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall have consented to their reapplying for admission; persons whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another, or who is assisted by others to come, unless it is affirmatively and satisfactorily shown that such person does not belong to one of the foregoing excluded classes; persons whose ticket or passage is paid for by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign Government, either directly or indirectly; stowaways, except that any such stowaway may be admitted in the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor; all children under 16 years of age, unaccompanied by one or both of their parents, at the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor or under such regulations as he may from time to time prescribe; persons who can not become eligible, under existing law, to become citizens of the United States by naturalization, unless otherwise provided for by existing agreements as to passports, or by treaties, conventions, or agreements that may hereafter be entered into. The provision next foregoing, however, shall not apply to persons of the following status or occupations: Government officers, ministers or religious teachers, missionaries, lawyers, physicians, chemists, engineers, teachers, students, authors, editors, journalists, merchants, bankers, and travelers for curiosity or pleasure nor to their legal wives or their children under 16 years of age who shall accompany them or who subsequently may apply for admission to the United States, but such persons or their legal wives or foreign-born children who fail to maintain in the United States a status or occupation placing them within the excepted classes shall be deemed to be in the United States contrary to law, and shall be subject to deportation as provided in section 19 of this act.

To each alien or head of a family shall be given a ticket on which shall be written his name, a number or letter designating the list in which his name, and so forth, is contained, and his number on said list, for convenience of identification on arrival. Each list or manifest shall be verified by the signature and the oath or affirmation of the master or commanding officer, or the first or second below him in command, taken before an immigration officer at the port of arrival, to the effect that he has caused the surgeon of said vessel sailing therewith to make a physical and oral examination of each of said aliens, and that from the report of said surgeon and from his own investigation he believes that no one of said aliens is of any of the classes excluded from admission into the United States by section 3 of this act, and that also according to the best of his knowledge and belief, the information in said lists or manifests concerning each of said aliens named therein is correct and true in every respect. That the surgeon of said vessel sailing therewith shall also sign each of said lists or manifests and make oath or affirmation in like manner before an immigration officer at the port of arrival, stating his professional experience and qualifications as a physician and surgeon, and that he has made a personal examination of each of the said aliens named therein, and that the said list or manifest, according to the best of his knowledge and belief, is full, correct, and true in all particulars relative to the mental and physical condition of said aliens. If no surgeon sails with any vessel bringing aliens the mental and physical examinations and the verifications of the lists or manifests shall be made by some competent surgeon employed by the owners of the said vessels, and the manifests shall be verified by such surgeon before a United States consular officer.

"SEC. 14. That it shall be unlawful for the master or commanding officer of any vessel bringing aliens into or carrying aliens out of the United States to refuse or fail to deliver to the immigration officials the accurate and full manifests or statements or information regarding all aliens on board or taken on board such vessel required by this act, and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that there has been such a refusal or failure, or that the lists delivered are not accurate and full, such master or commanding officer shall pay to the collector of customs at the port of arrival or departure the sum of $10 for each alien concerning whom such accurate and full manifest or statement or information is not furnished, or concerning whom the manifest or statement or information is not prepared and sworn to as prescribed by this act. No vessel shall be granted clearance pending the determination of the question of the liability to the payment of such fine, or while it remains unpaid, nor shall such fine be remitted or refunded: Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of such question upon the deposit with the collector of customs of a sum sufficient to cover such fine.

"SEC. 15. That upon the arrival at a port of the United States of any vessel bringing aliens it shall be the duty of the proper immigration officials to go or to send competent assistants to the vessel and there inspect all such aliens, or said immigration officials may order a temporary removal of such aliens for examination at a designated time and place, but such temporary removal shall not be considered a landing, nor shall it relieve the transportation lines, masters, agents, owners, or consignees of the vessel upon which said aliens are brought to any port of the United States from any of the obligations which, in case such aliens remain on board, would, under the provisions of this act bind the said transportation lines, masters, agents, owners, or consignees: Provided, That where removal is made to premises owned or controlled by the United States, said transportation lines, masters, agents, owners, or consignees, and each of them shall, so long as detention there lasts, be relieved of responsibility for the safekeeping of such aliens. Whenever a temporary removal of aliens is made the transportation lines which brought them and the masters, owners, agents, and consignees of the vessel upon which they arrive shall pay all expenses of such removal and all expenses arising during subsequent detention, pending decision on the aliens' eligibility to enter the United States and until they are either allowed to land or returned to the care of the line or to the vessel which brought them, such expenses to include those of maintenance, medical treatment in hospital or elsewhere, burial in the event of death, and transfer to the vessel in the event of deportation, excepting only where they arise under the terms of any of the provisos of section 18 thereof. Any refusal or failure to comply with the provisions hereof to be punished in the manner specified in section 18 of this act.

"SEC. 16. That the physical and mental examination of all arriving aliens shall be made by medical officers of the United States Public Health Service who shall have had at least two years' experience in the practice of their profession since receiving the degree of doctor of medicine, and who shall certify, for the information of the immigration officers and the boards of special inquiry hereinafter provided for, any and all physical and mental defects or diseases observed by said medical officers in any such alien; or, should medical officers of the United States Public Health Service be not available, civil surgeons of not less than four years' professional experience may be employed in such emergency for such service, upon such terms as may be prescribed by the Commissioner General of Immigration, under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. Medical officers of the United States Public Health Service who have had especial training in the diagnosis of insanity and mental defect shall be detailed for duty or employed at all large ports of entry, and such medical officers shall be provided with suitable facilities for the detention and examination of all arriving aliens in whom insanity or mental defect is suspected, and the services of interpreters shall be provided for such examination. That the inspection, other than the physical and mental examination, of aliens, including those seeking admission or readmission to or the privilege of passing through or residing in the United States, and the examination of aliens arrested within the United States under this act, shall be conducted by immigrant inspectors, except as hereinafter provided in regard to boards of special inquiry. Immigrant inspectors are hereby authorized and empowered to board and search for aliens any vessel, railway car, conveyance, or vehicle in which they believe aliens are being brought into the United States. Said inspectors shall have power to administer oaths and to take and consider evidence touching the right of any alien to enter, reenter, pass through, or reside in the United States, and, where such action may be necessary, to make a written record of such evidence; and any person to whom such an oath has been administered, under the provisions of this act, who shall knowingly or willfully give false evidence or swear to any false statement in any way affecting or in relation to the right of any alien to admission, or readmission to, or to pass through, or to reside in the United States shall be deemed guilty of perjury and be punished as provided by section 125 of the act approved March 4, 1909, entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.' Any commissioner of immigration or inspector in charge shall also have power to require the attendance and testimony of witnesses before said inspectors and the production of books, papers, and documents touching the right of any alien to enter, reenter, reside in, or pass through the United States, and to that end may invoke the aid of any court of the United States; and any district court within the jurisdiction of which investigations are being conducted by an immigrant inspector may, in the event of neglect or refusal to respond to a subpœna issued by any commissioner of immigration or inspector in charge or refusal to testify before said immigrant inspector, issue an order requiring such person to appear before said immigrant inspector, produce books, papers, and documents if demanded, and testify; and any failure to obey such order of the court shall be punished by the court as a contempt thereof. That any person, including employees, officials, or agents of transportation companies, who shall assault, resist, prevent, impede, or interfere with any immigration official or employee in the performance of his duty under this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment for a term of not less than six months nor more than two years, or by a fine of not less than $200 nor more than $2,000; and any person who shall use any deadly or dangerous weapon in resisting any immigration official or employee in the performance of his duty shall be deemed guilty of a felony and shall on conviction thereof be punished by imprisonment for not less than 1 nor more than 10 years. Every alien who may not appear to the examining immigrant inspector at the port of arrival to be clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to land shall be detained for examination in relation thereto by a board of special inquiry. In the event of rejection by the board of special inquiry, in all cases where an appeal to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is permitted by this act, the alien shall be so informed and shall have the right to be represented by counsel or other advisor on such appeal. The decision of an immigrant inspector, if favorable to the admission of any alien, shall be subject to challenge by any other immigrant inspector, and such challenge shall operate to take the alien whose right to land is so challenged before a board of special inquiry for its investigation.

"SEC. 17. That boards of special inquiry shall be appointed by the Commissioner of Immigration or inspector in charge at the various ports of arrival as may be necessary for the prompt determination of all cases of immigrants detained at such ports under the provisions of the law. Each board shall consist of three members, who shall be selected from such of the immigrant officials in the service as the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, shall from time to time designate as qualified to serve on such boards. When in the opinion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor the maintenance of a permanent board of special inquiry for service at any sea or land border port is not warranted, regularly constituted boards may be detailed from other stations for temporary service at such port, or, if that be impracticable, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall authorize the creation of boards of special inquiry by the immigration officials in charge at such ports, and shall determine what Government officials or other persons shall be eligible for service on such boards. Such boards shall have authority to determine whether an alien who has been duly held shall be allowed to land or shall be deported. All hearings before such boards shall be separate and apart from the public. Such boards shall keep a complete permanent record of their proceedings and of all such testimony as may be produced before them; and the decision of any two members of a board shall prevail, but either the alien or any dissenting member of the said board may appeal through the commissioner of immigration at the port of arrival and the Commissioner General of Immigration to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the taking of such appeal shall operate to stay any action in regard to the final disposal of any alien whose case is so appealed until the receipt by the commissioner of immigration at the port of arrival of such decision, which shall be rendered solely upon the evidence adduced before the board of special inquiry. In every case where an alien is excluded from admission into the United States, under any law or treaty now existing or hereafter made, the decision of a board of special inquiry if adverse to the admission of such alien shall be final, unless reversed on appeal to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor: Provided, That the decision of a board of special inquiry, based upon the certificate of the examining medical officer, shall be final as to the rejection of aliens affected with tuberculosis in any form or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, or with any mental or physical disability which would bring such aliens within any of the classes excluded from admission to the United States under section 3 of this act.

"SEC. 18. That all aliens brought to this country in violation of law shall, if practicable, be immediately sent back, in accommodations of the same class in which they arrived, to the country whence they respectively came on the vessels bringing them. The cost of their maintenance while on land, as well as the expense of the return of such aliens, shall be borne by the owner or owners of the vessels on which they respectively came. That it shall be unlawful for any master, purser, person in charge, agent, owner, or consignee of any such vessel to refuse to receive back on board thereof, or on board of any other vessel owned or operated by the same interests, such aliens; or to fail to detain them thereon; or to refuse or fail to return them in the manner aforesaid to the foreign port from which they came; or to pay the cost of their maintenance while on land; or to make any charge for the return of any such alien; or to take any security from him for the payment of such charge; or to take any consideration to be returned in case the alien is landed; or knowingly to bring to the United States at any time within one year from the date of deportation any alien rejected or arrested and deported under any provision of this act, unless prior to reembarkation the Secretary of Commerce and Labor has consented that such alien shall reapply for admission, as required by section 3 hereof; and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that such master, purser, person in charge, agent, owner, or consignee has violated any of the foregoing provisions such master, purser, person in charge, agent, owner, or consignee shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located, or in which any vessel of the line may be found, the sum of $300 for each and every violation of any provision of this section; and no vessel shall have clearance from any port of the United States while any such fine is unpaid, nor shall such fine be remitted or refunded: Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of such question upon the deposit with the collector of customs of a sum sufficient to cover such fine. If the vessel by which any alien ordered deported came has left the United States and it is impracticable for any reason to deport the alien within a reasonable time by another vessel owned by the same interests, the cost of deportation may be paid by the Government and recovered by civil suit from any agent, owner, or consignee of the vessel: Provided further, That the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, may suspend, upon conditions to be prescribed by the Commissioner General of Immigration, the deportation of any alien found to have come in violation of any provision of this act if, in his judgment, the testimony of such alien is necessary on behalf of the United States Government in the prosecution of offenders against any provision of this act; and the cost of maintenance of any person so detained resulting from such suspension of deportation, and a witness fee in the sum of $1 per day for each day such person is so detained, may be paid from the appropriation for the enforcement of this act, or such alien may be released under bond, in the penalty of not less than $500, with security approved by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, conditioned that such alien shall be produced when required as a witness and for deportation. No alien certified, as provided in section 16 of this act, to be suffering from tuberculosis in any form, or from a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease other than one of quarantinable nature, shall be permitted to land for medical treatment thereof in any hospital in the United States, unless with the express permission of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor: Provided further, That upon the certificate of a medical officer of the United States Public Health Service to the effect that the health or safety of an insane alien would be unduly imperiled by immediate deportation, such alien may, at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act, be held for treatment until such time as such alien may, in the opinion of such medical officer, be safely deported: Provided further, That upon the certificate of a medical officer of the United States Public Health Service to the effect that a rejected alien is helpless from sickness, mental or physical disability, or infancy, if such alien is accompanied by another alien whose protection or guardianship is required by such rejected alien, such accompanying alien may also be excluded, and the master, agent, owner, or consignee of the vessel in which such alien and accompanying alien are brought shall be required to return said alien and accompanying alien in the same manner as vessels are required to return other rejected aliens.

"SEC. 19. That any alien, at any time within three years after entry, who shall enter the United States in violation of law; any alien who within three years after entry becomes a public charge from causes existing prior to the landing; except as hereinafter provided, any alien who is hereafter sentenced to imprisonment for a term of one year or more because of conviction in this country of a crime involving moral turpitude, committed within three years after the entry of the alien to the United States; any alien who shall be found an inmate of or connected with the management of a house of prostitution or practicing prostitution after such alien shall have entered the United States, or who shall receive, share in, or derive benefit from any part of the earnings of any prostitute; any alien who is employed by, in, or in connection with any house of prostitution or music or dance hall or other place of amusement or resort habitually frequented by prostitutes, or where prostitutes gather, or who in any way assists, protects, or promises to protect from arrest any prostitute; any alien who shall import or attempt to import any person for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; any alien who, after being excluded and deported or arrested and deported as a prostitute, or as a procurer, or as having been connected with the business of prostitution or importation for prostitution, or other immoral purposes in any of the ways hereinbefore specified, shall return to and enter the United States; any alien convicted and imprisoned for a violation of any of the provisions of section 4 hereof; any alien, at any time within three years after entry, who shall enter the United States by water at any time or place other than as designated by immigration officials, or by land at any place other than one designated as a port of entry for aliens by the Commissioner General of Immigration, or at any time not designated by immigration officials, shall, upon the warrant of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, be taken into custody and deported: Provided, That the provision of this section respecting the deportation of aliens convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude shall not apply to one who has been pardoned, nor shall such deportation be made or directed if the court sentencing such alien for such crime shall, at the time of imposing judgment or passing sentence, make a recommendation to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that such alien shall not be deported in pursuance of this act; nor shall any alien convicted as aforesaid be deported until after the termination of his imprisonment: Provided further, That the provisions of this section, with the exceptions hereinbefore noted, shall be applicable to the classes of aliens therein mentioned irrespective of the time of their entry into the United States. In every case where any person is ordered deported from the United States under the provisions of this act or of any law or treaty now existing, the decision of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall be final.

"SEC. 20. That the deportation of aliens provided for in this act shall, at the option of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, be to the country whence they came or to the foreign port at which such aliens embarked for the United States; or, if such embarkation was for foreign contiguous territory, to the foreign port at which they embarked for such territory; or, if such aliens entered foreign contiguous territory from the United States and later entered the United States, or if such aliens are held by the country from which they entered the United States not to be subjects or citizens of such country, and such country refuses to permit their reentry, or imposes any condition upon permitting reentry, then to the country of which such aliens are subjects or citizens, or to the country in which they resided prior to entering the country from which they entered the United States. If effected at any time within five years after the entry of the alien, such deportation, including one-half of the entire cost of removal to the port of deportation, shall be at the expense of the contractor, procurer, or other person by whom the alien was unlawfully induced to enter the United States, or, if that can not be done, then the cost of removal to the port of deportation shall be at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act, and the deportation from such port shall be at the expense of the owner or owners of such vessels or transportation line by which such aliens respectively came, or, if that is not practicable, at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act. If such deportation is effected later than five years after the entry of the alien, or, if the deportation is made by reason of causes arising subsequent to entry, the cost thereof shall be payable from the appropriation for the enforcement of this act. A failure or refusal on the part of the masters, agents, owners, or consignees of vessels to comply with the order of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to take on board, guard safely, and transport to the destination specified any alien ordered to be deported under the provisions of this act shall be punished by the imposition of the penalties prescribed in section 18 of this act: Provided, That when in the opinion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor the mental or physical condition of such alien is such as to require personal care and attendance, he may employ a suitable person for that purpose, who shall accompany such alien to his or her final destination, and the expense incident to such service shall be defrayed in like manner. Pending the final disposal of the case of any alien so taken into custody he may be released under a bond in the penalty of not less than $500 with security approved by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, conditioned that such alien shall be produced when required for a hearing or hearings in regard to the charge upon which he has been taken into custody, and for deportation if he shall be found to be unlawfully within the United States.

"SEC. 21. That any alien liable to be excluded because likely to become a public charge or because of physical disability other than tuberculosis in any form or a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease may, if otherwise admissible, nevertheless be admitted in the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor upon the giving of a suitable and proper bond or undertaking, approved by said Secretary, in such amount and containing such conditions as he may prescribe, to the United States and to all States, Territories, counties, towns, municipalities, and districts thereof, holding the United States and all States, Territories, counties, towns, municipalities, and districts thereof harmless against such alien becoming a public charge. The admission of such alien shall be a consideration for the giving of such bond or undertaking. Suit may be brought thereon in the name and by the proper law officers either of the United States Government or of any State, Territory, district, county, town, or municipality in which such alien becomes a public charge.

"SEC. 22. That wherever an alien shall have taken up his permanent residence in this country, and shall have filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen, and thereafter shall send for his wife or minor children to join him, if said wife or any of said children shall be found to be affected with any contagious disorder, such wife or children shall be held, under such regulations as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall prescribe, until it shall be determined whether the disorder will be easily curable or whether they can be permitted to land without danger to other persons; and they shall not be either admitted or deported until such facts have been ascertained; and if it shall be determined that the disorder is easily curable and the husband or father or other responsible person is willing to bear the expense of the treatment, they may be accorded treatment in hospital until cured and then be admitted, or if it shall be determined that they can be permitted to land without danger to other persons, they may, if otherwise admissible, thereupon be admitted.

"SEC. 23. That the Commissioner General of Immigration shall perform all his duties under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. Under such direction he shall have charge of the administration of all laws relating to the immigration of aliens into the United States, and shall have the control, direction, and supervision of all officers, clerks, and employees appointed thereunder; he shall establish such rules and regulations, prescribe such forms of bond, reports, entries, and other papers, and shall issue from time to time such instructions, not inconsistent with law, as he shall deem best calculated for carrying out the provisions of this act and for protecting the United States and aliens migrating thereto from fraud and loss, and shall have authority to enter into contract for the support and relief of such aliens as may fall into distress or need public aid, and to remove to their native country, at any time within three years after entry, at the expense of the appropriations for the enforcement of this act, such as fall into distress or need public aid from causes arising subsequent to their entry and are desirous of being so removed; he shall prescribe rules for the entry and inspection of aliens along the borders of Canada and Mexico, so as not to unnecessarily delay, impede, or annoy persons in ordinary travel between the United States and said countries, and shall have power to enter into contracts with transportation lines for the said purpose; it shall be the duty of the Commissioner General of Immigration to detail officers of the Immigration Service from time to time as may be necessary, in his judgment, to secure information as to the number of aliens detained in the penal, reformatory, and charitable institutions (public and private) of the several States and Territories, the District of Columbia, and other territory of the United States and to inform the officers of such institutions of the provisions of law in relation to the deportation of aliens who have become public charges. He may, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, whenever in his judgment such action may be necessary to accomplish the purposes of this act, detail immigration officers, and also surgeons of the United States Public Health Service employed under this act for service in foreign countries. The duties of commissioners of immigration and other immigration officials in charge of districts, ports, or stations shall be of an administrative character, to be prescribed in detail by regulations prepared under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor: Provided, That for the purpose of making effective the provisions of this section relating to the protection of aliens from fraud and loss, and also the provisions of section 30 of this act, relating to the distribution of aliens, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall establish and maintain immigrant stations at such interior places as may be necessary, and, in the discretion of the said Secretary, aliens in transit from ports of landing to such interior stations shall be accompanied by immigrant inspectors.

"SEC. 24. That immigrant inspectors and other immigration officers, clerks, and employees shall hereafter be appointed and their compensation fixed and raised or decreased from time to time by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, upon the recommendation of the Commissioner General of Immigration and in accordance with the provisions of the civil-service act of January 16, 1883: Provided, That said Secretary, in the enforcement of that portion of this act which excludes contract laborers, may employ, without reference to the provisions of the said civil-service act or to the various acts relative to the compilation of the official register, such persons as he may deem advisable and from time to time fix, raise, or decrease their compensation. He may draw annually from the appropriation for the enforcement of this act $50,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended for the salaries and expenses of persons so employed and for expenses incident to such employment; and the accounting officers of the Treasury shall pass to the credit of the proper disbursing officer expenditures from said sum without itemized account whenever the Secretary of Commerce and Labor certifies that an itemized account would not be for the best interests of the Government: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to alter the mode of appointing commissioners of immigration at the several ports of the United States as provided by the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 18, 1894, or the official status of such commissioners heretofore appointed.

"SEC. 25. That the district courts of the United States are hereby invested with full and concurrent jurisdiction of all causes, civil and criminal, arising under any of the provisions of this act. That it shall be the duty of the United States district attorney of the proper district to prosecute every such writ when brought by the United States under this act. Such prosecutions or suits may be instituted at any place in the United States at which the violation may occur or at which the person charged with such violation may be found. That no suit or proceeding for a violation of the provisions of this act shall be settled, compromised, or discontinued without the consent of the court in which it is pending, entered of record, with the reasons therefor.

"SEC. 26. That all exclusive privileges of exchanging money, transporting passengers or baggage, or keeping eating houses, and all other like privileges in connection with any United States immigrant station shall be disposed of after public competition, subject to such conditions and limitations as the Commissioner General of Immigration, under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, may prescribe, and all receipts accruing from the disposal of such exclusive privileges shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States. No intoxicating liquors shall be sold at any such immigrant station.

"SEC. 27. That for the preservation of the peace and in order that arrests may be made for crimes under the laws of the States and Territories of the United States where the various immigrant stations are located, the officers in charge of such stations, as occasion may require, shall admit therein the proper State and municipal officers charged with the enforcement of such laws, and for the purpose of this section the jurisdiction of such officers and of the local courts shall extend over such stations.

"SEC. 28. That any person who knowingly aids or assists any anarchist or any person who believes in or advocates the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or who disbelieves in or is opposed to organized government, or all forms of law, or who advocates the assassination of public officials, or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government, or who advocates or teaches the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character, to enter the United States, or who connives or conspires with any person or persons to allow, procure, or permit any such anarchist or person aforesaid to enter therein shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine or not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

"SEC. 29. That the President of the United States is authorized, in the name of the Government of the United States, to call, in his discretion, an international conference, to assemble at such point as may be agreed upon, or to send special commissioners to any foreign country, for the purpose of regulating by international agreement, subject to the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, the immigration of aliens to the United States; of providing for the mental, moral, and physical examination of such aliens by American consuls or other officers of the United States Government at the ports of embarkation, or elsewhere; of securing the assistance of foreign Governments in their own territories to prevent the evasion of the laws of the United States governing immigration to the United States; of entering into such international agreements as may be proper to prevent the immigration of aliens who, under the laws of the United States, are or may be excluded from entering the United States, and of regulating any matters pertaining to such immigration.

"SEC. 30. That there shall be maintained a division of information in the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization; and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall provide such clerical and other assistance as may be necessary. It shall be the duty of said division to promote a beneficial distribution of aliens admitted into the United States among the several States and Territories desiring immigration. Correspondence shall be had with the proper officials of the States and Territories, and said division shall gather from all available sources useful information regarding the resources, products, and physical characteristics of each State and Territory, and shall publish such information in different languages and distribute the publications among all admitted aliens at the immigrant stations of the United States and to such other persons as may desire the same. When any State or Territory appoints and maintains an agent or agents to represent it at any of the immigrant stations of the United States, such agents shall, under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner General of Immigration, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, have access to aliens who have been admitted to the United States for the purpose of presenting, either orally or in writing, the special inducements offered by such State or Territory to aliens to settle therein. While on duty at any immigrant station such agents shall be subject to all the regulations prescribed by the Commissioner General of Immigration, who, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, may, for violation of any such regulations, deny to the agent guilty of such violation any of the privileges herein granted.

"SEC. 31. That any person, including the owner, agent, consignee, or master of any vessel arriving in the United States from any foreign port or place, who shall knowingly sign on the ship's articles, or bring to the United States as one of the crew of such vessel, any alien, with intent to permit such alien to land in the United States in violation of the laws and treaties of the United States regulating the immigration of aliens, or who shall falsely and knowingly represent to the immigration authorities at the port of arrival that any such alien is a bona fide member of the crew, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding $5,000, for which sum the said vessel shall be liable and may be seized and proceeded against by way of libel in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the offense.

"SEC. 32. That no alien excluded from admission into the United States by any law or treaty of the United States regulating the immigration of aliens, and employed on board any vessel arriving in the United States from any foreign port or place, shall be permitted to land in the United States, except temporarily for medical treatment, or pursuant to regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor providing for the ultimate removal or deportation of such alien from the United States, and the negligent failure of the owner, agent, consignee, or master of such vessel to detain on board any such alien after notice in writing by the immigration officer in charge at the port of arrival, and to deport such alien, if required by such immigration officer or by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, shall render such owner, agent, consignee, or master liable to a penalty not exceeding $1,000, for which sum the said vessel shall be liable, and may be seized and proceeded against by way of libel in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the offense.

"SEC. 33. That it shall be unlawful and be deemed a violation of the preceding section to pay off or discharge any alien employed on board any vessel arriving in the United States from any foreign port or place, unless duly admitted pursuant to the laws and treaties of the United States regulating the immigration of aliens: Provided, That in case any such alien intends to reship on board any other vessel bound to any foreign port or place he shall be allowed to land for the purpose of so reshipping, and may be paid off, discharged, and permitted to remove his effects, anything in such laws or treaties or in this act to the contrary notwithstanding, provided due notice of such proposed action first be given to the principal immigration officer in charge at the port of arrival.

"SEC. 34. That any alien seaman who shall desert his vessel in a port of the United States or who shall land therein contrary to the provisions of this act shall be deemed to be unlawfully in the United States and shall, at any time within three years thereafter, upon the warrant of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, be taken into custody and brought before a board of special inquiry for examination as to his qualifications for admission to the United States, and if not admitted said alien seaman shall be deported at the expense of the appropriation for this act as provided in section 20 of this act.

"SEC. 35. That it shall be unlawful for any vessel carrying passengers between a port of the United States and a port of a foreign country, upon arrival in the United States, to have on board employed thereon any alien afflicted with idiocy, imbecility, insanity, epilepsy, tuberculosis in any form, or a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, if it appears to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, from an examination made by a medical officer of the United States Public Health Service, and is so certified by such officer, that any such alien was so afflicted at the time he was shipped or engaged and taken on board such vessel and that the existence of such affliction might have been detected by means of a competent medical examination at such time; and for every such alien so afflicted on board any such vessel at the time of arrival the owner, agent, consignee, or master thereof shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located the sum of $25; and no vessel shall be granted clearance pending the determination of the question of the liability to the payment of such fine and while it remains unpaid: Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of such question upon the deposit of a sum sufficient to cover such fine: Provided further, That such fine may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, be mitigated or remitted.

"SEC. 36. That upon arrival of any vessel in the United States from any foreign port or place it shall be the duty of the owner, agent, consignee, or master thereof to deliver to the principal immigration officer in charge of the port of arrival lists containing the names of all aliens employed on such vessel, stating the positions they respectively hold in the ship's company, when and where they were respectively shipped or engaged, and specifying those to be paid off and discharged in the port of arrival; or lists containing so much of such information as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall by regulation prescribe; and after the arrival of any such vessel it shall be the duty of such owner, agent, consignee, or master to report to such immigration officer, in writing, as soon as discovered, all cases in which any such alien has deserted the vessel, giving a description of such alien, together with any information likely to lead to his apprehension; and before the departure of any such vessel it shall be the duty of such owner, agent, consignee, or master to deliver to such immigration officer a further list containing the names of all alien employees who were not employed thereon at the time of the arrival, but who will leave port thereon at the time of her departure, and also the names of those, if any, who have been paid off and discharged, and of those, if any, who have deserted or landed or been duly admitted; and in case of the failure of such owner, agent, consignee, or master so to deliver either of the said lists of such aliens arriving and departing, respectively, or so to report such cases of desertion or landing, such owner, agent, consignee, or master shall, if required by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located the sum of $10 for each alien concerning whom correct lists are not delivered or a true report is not made, as above required; and no such vessel shall be granted clearance pending the determination of the question of the liability to the payment of such fine, and, in the event such fine is imposed, while it remains unpaid; nor shall such fine be remitted or refunded: Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of such question upon deposit of a sum sufficient to cover such fine.

"SEC. 37. The word 'person' as used in this act shall be construed to import both the plural and the singular, as the case may be, and shall include corporations, companies, and associations. When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any director, officer, agent, or employee of any corporation, company, or association acting within the scope of his employment or office shall in every case be deemed to be the act, omission, or failure of such corporation, company, or association, as well as that of the person acting for or in behalf of such corporation, company, or association.

"SEC. 38. That this act, except as otherwise provided in section 3, shall take effect and be enforced from and after July 1, 1913. The act of March 26, 1910, amending the act of February 20, 1907, to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States; the act of February 20, 1907, to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, except section 34 thereof; the act of March 3, 1903, to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, except section 34 thereof; and all other acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed on and after the taking effect of this act: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to repeal, alter, or amend existing laws relating to the immigration or exclusion of Chinese persons or persons of Chinese descent, nor to repeal, alter, or amend section 6, chapter 453, third session Fifty-eighth Congress, approved February 6, 1905, or the act approved August 2, 1882, entitled 'An act to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea,' and amendments thereto: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to affect any prosecution, suit, action, or proceedings brought, or any act, thing, or matter, civil or criminal, done or existing at the time of the taking effect of this act, except as mentioned in the last proviso of section 19 hereof; but as to all such prosecutions, suits, actions, proceedings, acts, things, or matters, the laws or parts of laws repealed or amended by this act are hereby continued in force and effect."

H. C. LODGE,
WM. P. DILLINGHAM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JOHN L. BURNETT,
AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as several Senators interested in the bill are absent, and the Senate is so thin, I desire to give notice that I shall call up the conference report for consideration on Monday, immediately after the routine morning business.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this is a bill of great public interest and concern, and I will ask the Senator in a word to state the salient changes proposed to be made in the existing law.

Mr. LODGE. I am very happy to comply with the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire. The Senate disagreed to the entire House amendment. The House struck out the whole bill which passed the Senate and inserted an illiteracy test of their own. The House illiteracy test consisted of reading alone, while the Senate test provided both reading and writing. I read from the statement of the action of the conference committee:

The Senate having disagreed to the entire House amendment, which in its turn had stricken out the entire Senate bill, the whole subject of immigration came before the conference committee.

The bill as it passed the House contained no features except the illiteracy test. The Senate bill contemplated many changes in the law and an illiteracy test substantially similar to that proposed in the House, the principal difference being that the Senate included "writing" in its test and differed somewhat from the House as to the admissibility of illiterate relatives of qualified immigrants. On all substantial matters of difference between the Senate and the House touching the illiteracy test the Senate receded.

We accepted the House illiteracy test, which was based on reading alone. In other respects, as to the exceptions and the methods of enforcing the test, the Senate provision and the House provision were the same.

The principal changes in existing law proposed by the Senate to which the managers on the part of the House agreed are as follows:

First. An increase of the head tax from $4 to $5 per alien.

The Senate, it will be remembered, increased the head tax from $4 to $5, and the House accepted that proposed change in existing law.

Second. The exclusion of aliens not eligible for naturalization.

I will say that the conferees also agreed to strike out all the provisions in the bill relating to the Chinese, so as to leave the subject of Chinese immigration under the law exactly as it exists now, with no change. The repealing clauses and all relating to that subject were stricken out. The conferees decided that it was better to leave the Chinese-exclusion law and the situation of Chinese in the United States precisely as they are to-day.

Third. Making it permissible for the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to decide beforehand as to the necessity of importing such skilled contract labor as is now admissible under the existing contract-labor law.

Fourth. Providing more severe penalties for transportation lines which violate the law against advertising for immigrants and which bring to the United States aliens who are ineligible to enter.

Senators will understand that I am reading now the provisions of the Senate bill which have been agreed to by the House.

Fifth. Providing for matrons, inspectors, and surgeons on immigrant ships at the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Sixth. Providing machinery for compelling the attendance and testimony of witnesses before the immigration authorities when required.

Seventh. Providing for the deportation of aliens who become criminals within three years subsequent to entry.

Eighth. Providing for interior immigrant stations.

Ninth. Providing against the illegal entry of seamen and stowaways.

Tenth. Permitting aliens to be represented by counsel in the case of appeals from the decisions of boards of special inquiry.

Eleventh. Providing experts in insanity at large ports of entry.

Twelfth. A definition of the meaning of the word "alien" where it appears in the bill.

Thirteenth. A provision was added in conference requiring the production of penal certificates in certain cases for the purpose of facilitating the execution of that part of the Senate bill and of the present law which relates to the exclusion of criminals.

I have touched on all the salient points, I think, but, in a general way, it may be said that the House took, with very few modifications, and those chiefly in details, the Senate revision of the existing law as it passed the Senate, and the Senate accepted the House illiteracy test, which is confined to reading alone. I believe the bill to be an extremely good one, especially in its administrative features.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I did not understand the Senator's explanation as to the provision of the bill with reference to——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not understand the Senator's statement with reference to the provision as to contract labor.

Mr. LODGE. The law now provides, and has for many years provided, that in a case where skilled labor was required in a new industry, for instance, and could not be found in the United States, it could be imported and could remain in the country, if approved by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. It is not a case that occurs very often. Now and then some new industry is started and mechanics capable of doing the work are not to be found in our country, but have to be brought from abroad in order to teach others. In such cases it is very hard to bring men over here and have the question of their right to enter the United States decided subsequent to their coming. The provision as found in the conference report simply allows the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to decide before the men are imported whether the case is one which comes within the law. The change was urged by the Department of Commerce and Labor, was embodied in the Senate bill, passed the Senate in that form, and was agreed to by the House.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is the decision of the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor to be made before such persons embark on the other side?

Mr. LODGE. Yes. A person desiring to import skilled labor lays the case before the Secretary of Commerce and Labor for his decision. I believe this provision will be better both for the men and for the enforcement of the law.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I understand the Senator to say that the bill is so framed as to leave the present laws with reference to Chinese exclusion intact?

Mr. LODGE. Precisely.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Does it have any effect at all upon the question of Japanese immigration? Is there anything contained in the measure with reference to that?

Mr. LODGE. Well, the clause in the bill which passed the Senate, providing that no alien who was not eligible for naturalization should be admitted, has been retained in the bill. As the Senator is well aware, the old naturalization law, which has been on the statute books for many years, excludes from entry into the United States anyone who does not belong either to the white or to the black race. Therefore any Asiatic would be excluded under the bill as it now stands unless provision is made otherwise by treaty or by agreement. It is just as it passed the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill, of course, applies to all immigrants, but does it apply to all aliens?

Mr. LODGE. It applies to all aliens.

Mr. SMOOT. But suppose a person has resided in this country 5 or 10 years, and has not taken out his naturalization papers, and returning to his former home, comes to the United States again. Is he subject to the provisions of this measure?

Mr. LODGE. He comes in just like any other alien.

Mr. SMOOT. But suppose he can not read and has heretofore lived here 10 years. He can not go home if he ever intends to come back to the United States?

Mr. LODGE. I think that is probable. I think that is the case to-day.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I will ask whether or not the bill does not provide that the reading and writing shall be in any language.

Mr. LODGE. Any language.

Mr. GALLINGER. That covers that.

Mr. LODGE. Any language or any dialect. It is to read in any language or dialect, but does not include writing.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not writing.

Mr. LODGE. Not writing.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand there has been a somewhat remarkable decision in one of the Western States, upon which I will not now elaborate, to the effect that a law providing for a reading qualification can only be applied to the English language. I think we ought to be careful in our legislation to make it broad enough to cover any language.

Mr. LODGE. I will explain to the Senator how that confusion in regard to the "English language" arose: When there was put into the bill the clause excluding all persons not eligible for naturalization, the attention of the committee of the Senate was called to the fact that the naturalization act required that every person who applied for naturalization should be able to sign his name to his application and should be able to speak English. The point was made that if we adopted language excluding persons not eligible for naturalization, it might be interpreted to mean persons who could not write and who were unable to speak in English, or read in English. I do not think it was legitimately open to that interpretation, but for greater precaution we put in a clause that inability to read English or to write should not be ground of exclusion.

In conference we framed the exclusion on the ground of noneligibility to naturalization in such a way that it removed all possible question as to the qualification for naturalization being applied to the admission of the immigrant. The only thing applied to the immigrant is that if he does not belong to the white race or to the black race he can not come in, unless otherwise provided by treaty or agreement.

That was the origin of the confusion about the reading test being in English. The reading test is not in English. It is in the broadest possible language—to read in any language or dialect, including Hebrew and Yiddish. It was made as broad as possible and even went so far as to say specifically "including Hebrew or Yiddish," because the point was made by some of those who were anxious about it that Hebrew and Yiddish might not be construed strictly as either an existing language or dialect. I think they were entirely covered by the clause, but we put it in by excess of caution. That is the substance of the literacy test. The exceptions are exactly the same as when the bill passed the Senate.

I understood the Senator from Missouri to say he thought it desirable that the bill should go over on account of the absence of the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN].

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to say that, with the exception of the change of the literacy test resulting from the elimination of the word "write," the remainder of the Senate amendment was substantially adopted.

Mr. LODGE. Substantially; precisely the same; in fact, a large part of the Senate provision and House provision were in identical language.

Mr. STONE. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that the report be printed in the RECORD, and that its further consideration go over until Monday.

Mr. LODGE. That is the request I made—that it go over and be printed in the RECORD. The report is really the bill. The report, of course, is privileged, and I gave notice that I would call it up immediately after the morning business on Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next bill in order on the calendar.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Before we leave this subject, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether this bill includes any outlying territory of the United States; whether it is applicable, say, to the Hawaiian Islands or to Porto Rico?

Mr. LODGE. In what respect; on the reading test?

Mr. POINDEXTER. On all tests.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, the old law has applied to those islands hitherto, and the only question that has arisen is in regard to the reading test being applied to Hawaii, to which great objection was made, and I think with justice. Owing to an accident—it was nothing else—Hawaii was omitted as an exception to the reading test. I do not want to take the time of the Senate, but it is necessary to explain the point for a moment.

They are very anxious to replace Japanese labor and Chinese labor with European labor, and are making every effort in that direction. The European labor they are getting is chiefly Portuguese, and the percentage of illiteracy among the Portuguese happens to be higher than among any other immigrants. Therefore the imposition in Hawaii of the literacy test as framed in the bill they think would work a great hardship to them. It was the intention of the Senate committee to make an exception in that respect for the islands of Hawaii, but by an omission, for which I suppose I am more responsible than anybody else, we took the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina in the place of our illiteracy amendment, and in accepting his we forgot to add the exception of Hawaii, which was in our bill.

Mr. ROOT. It was done on the floor.

Mr. LODGE. It was done on the floor, and we forgot to add the Hawaiian exception. We expected it to be put in in the House. It was not put in in the House, and though the conferees, I think, were unanimous in desiring to put it into the bill, they had no power to do it, because neither House had inserted it. I think it is an error that ought to be corrected.

I do not know whether that is the point the Senator from Washington desired me to explain.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is exactly the point I had in mind, and I am very much obliged to the Senator for explaining it. I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to state that the law is to be amended by this bill so as to exclude all persons who are not qualified to become citizens of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. Not able to become eligible for naturalization.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is that the language of the bill?

Mr. LODGE. That is the language of the bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does that provision apply to Hawaii and Porto Rico?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; to everything under our jurisdiction.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And that is an amendment to the existing law, as I understand.

Mr. LODGE. That is a new provision, changing existing law, which passed the Senate. It was in the Senate bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And it is reported by the conferees, I understand?

Mr. LODGE. Yes. The House conferees agreed to it just as it passed the Senate.

Mr. President, I understand consent was given that this report go over and be printed in the RECORD, together with the statement I sent to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Consent was given.

Mr. GRONNA subsequently said: May I ask what was done with the conference report? My attention was diverted for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and notice given that it would be called up on Monday next.

CREEK INDIANS.

The bill (S. 2344) to pay the balance due the loyal Creek Indians on the award made them by the Senate on February 16, 1903, was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being objection, the bill will go over.

M'CLELLAN PARK.

The bill (S. 2845) to acquire certain land in Washington Heights for a public park to be known as McClellan Park was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I hope no objection will be made to considering this bill. It has been read, and it went over on the objection of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I understand he does not press his objection at this time. I think it is a very necessary bill and ought to be passed.

Mr. SMOOT. If I understand the bill correctly, it proposes to create a park out of a little piece of ground up on Connecticut Avenue.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Or Columbia Road, I should say.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think it is on Columbia Road.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is on Columbia Road.

Mr. SMOOT. On Columbia Road. I have heard a good many Senators and others criticize it, and for that reason I objected to it. I should like to look into it myself before consenting to its passage.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before objection is made, and lest the bill at some time should be called up and passed in its present form, I should like to submit two or three amendments. They are not very material, but yet necessary.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the committee amendment, on page 3, after the word "commissioners," in line 12, I move to insert the words "of the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 1, page 4, where it is provided that the Government shall pay this entire amount of $180,000 and that one-half of the sum shall be reimbursed by the District of Columbia in four equal annual installments, after the word "installments" I move to amend by adding "with interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum."

Mr. SMOOT. Had we not better pay it all at once?

Mr. GALLINGER. The government of the District of Columbia is paying one-half. It is the usual form. We give them time to pay their one-half back. They have not any money.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to one further proposed amendment. The sum named in this bill is exactly the sum that the owner of this property is willing to take; and there is a provision commencing in line 9, on page 4, that—

> If said commissioners shall be unable to purchase said land at a price not exceeding $180,000, then they shall proceed to acquire said land by condemnation.

After the word "dollars," in line 11, I move to insert "or if said commissioners shall deem the price to be excessive"; so that they can go to condemnation if they, in their judgment, think the price is excessive.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is no objection to that.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not think the Government ought to be paying $180,000——

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask whether the amendment has been agreed to, if the Senator will permit me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not. It is pending. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am perfectly willing to have the bill amended, but after that I want to object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDINIG OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BRISTOW. As I understand, this tract of land is about two blocks from the Zoological Park, and I can not see why we should be spending money for parks there. If we want to spend money for parks, we ought to put them in other parts of the city, where they are not adjacent to other parks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the bill goes over.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The motion by Mr. POINDEXTER that the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 3297, to abolish the Commerce Court, etc., and that said bill be placed upon the calendar, under Rule VIII, for consideration by the Senate, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the motion go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

The bill (S. 7030) to provide for a permanent supply of coal for the use of the United States Navy and other governmental purposes, to provide for the leasing of coal lands in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It goes over.

The bill (S. 6896) to reopen and extend certain letters patent granted to Richard B. Painton, to insert certain claims in said letters patent dated May 9, 1899, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over, on objection by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. GALLINGER subsequently said: I was unavoidably out of the Chamber a few moments ago. I will ask what became of Senate bill 6896.

Mr. SMOOT. It went over.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right. It ought to go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill 6896 went over on objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. It ought to have gone over. That is proper.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that Senate bill 6896 be placed under Rule IX.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that the bill go over under Rule IX.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator who reported the bill is not on the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. If there is any objection, I will withhold the request until the Senator comes in. I did not observe that the Senator who reported it is absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah withdraws the request.

The bill (S. 2518) to provide for raising the volunteer forces of the United States in time of actual or threatened war was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Has the bill been read, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been read.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, this is a measure of a good deal of importance, and as the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is not here for the moment, I think the bill ought to go over until he may be present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon object to its present consideration?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the objection of the Senator from Oregon the bill goes over.

The bill (S. 6172) to regulate the method of directing the work of Government employees, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. WORKS. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California requests that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

BUREAU OF MINES.

The bill (H. R. 17260) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish in the Department of the Interior a Bureau of Mines," approved May 16, 1910, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 2, line 13, after the word "the," where it occurs the first time, to strike out "direction" and insert "approval"; in line 18, after the word "and," to insert "conserving resources through"; in line 22, before the word "peat," to strike out "the"; in the same line, after the word "and," where it occurs the second time, to insert "on behalf of the Government to investigate the"; and in line 25, after the word "efficient," to insert "mining, preparation, treatment, and," so as to read:

> SEC. 2. That it shall be the province and duty of the Bureau of Mines, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to conduct inquiries and scientific and technologic investigations concerning mining, and the preparation, treatment, and utilization of mineral substances with a view to improving health conditions, and increasing safety, efficiency, economic development, and conserving resources through the prevention of waste, in the mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries; to inquire into the economic conditions affecting these industries; to investigate explosives and peat; and on behalf of the Government to investigate the mineral fuels and unfinished mineral products belonging to, or for the use of, the United States, with a view to their most efficient mining, preparation, treatment and use; and to disseminate information concerning these subjects in such manner as will best carry out the purposes of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 17, to strike out:

SEC. 4. That nothing in this act shall be construed as authorizing the Bureau of Mines or any employee of said bureau to undertake any investigation or operation in behalf of any private party, except for the health and safety of persons employed in the mining, quarrying, metallurgical, or other mineral industries and with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior; nor shall the director or any member of said bureau have any personal or private interest in any mine or the products of any mine under investigation.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 4. In conducting inquiries and investigations authorized by this act neither the director nor any member of the Bureau of Mines shall have any personal or private interest in any mine or the products of any mine under investigation, or shall accept employment from any private party for services in the examination of any mine or private mineral property, or issue any report as to the valuation or the management of any mine or other private mineral property.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 16, after the word "investigations," to insert "of explosives," so as to read:

SEC. 5. That for tests or investigations of explosives authorized by the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of this act, other than those performed for the Government of the United States or State governments within the United States, a reasonable fee covering the necessary expenses shall be charged, according to a schedule prepared by the Director of the Bureau of Mines and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, who shall prescribe rules and regulations under which such tests and investigations may be made. All moneys received from such sources shall be paid into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

INTERSTATE SHIPMENT OF LIQUORS.

The bill (S. 4043) to prohibit interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors in certain cases was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. That is a special order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over, being a special order.

SANTIAM NATIONAL FOREST.

The bill (S. 7237) to reserve certain lands and to incorporate the same and make them a part of the Santiam National Forest was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 1, line 11, after the word "Oregon," to strike out "be, and the same are hereby, reserved and withdrawn from entry and made a part of and included in the Santiam National Forest" and insert "in the event of final decision vacating, annulling, or setting aside the outstanding patents heretofore issued therefor, shall be, and are hereby, reserved and withdrawn from all disposition and included within the Santiam National Forest," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described lands, to wit, the southeast quarter of section 24, township 14 south, range 2 east; all of section 14, the north half of section 20, the northwest quarter of section 22, the west half of section 24, the northwest quarter of section 28, the northeast quarter of section 31, all of section 34, and all of section 35, township 14 south, range 3 east; all in Linn County, Oreg., in the event of final decision vacating, annulling, or setting aside the outstanding patents heretofore issued therefor, shall be, and are hereby, reserved and withdrawn from all disposition and included within the Santiam National Forest.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. GRONNA. I should like to have some explanation from a Senator who is interested in the bill as to why this legislation is necessary.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The land proposed to be withdrawn embraces about 3,000 acres, I think. Patents to it have already issued to a large lumber concern, and the United States has instituted a suit to cancel the patents. In the event that the suit is won by the Government of the United States it was desired to have these lands included within the reserve so that they might not be taken up by speculators. If, however, the suit is decided in behalf of the defendants, the bill will be inoperative and will not affect the lands at all.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 21524) for the relief of Frederick H. Ferris was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Is there a report accompanying that bill?

Mr. SMOOT. There is a report.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It seems to me that the bill was reported adversely at one time by the Committee on Military Affairs, but I may be mistaken about it. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over on the objection of the Senator from Arkansas.

The bill (S. 6812) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of land in severalty," etc., approved February 28, 1891, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I object to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

The next business on the calendar was the resolution (S. Res. 362) for an investigation into the expenditures of the Forest Service and the appointment of a committee for the purpose.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution goes over on the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The bill (H. R. 22913) to create a Department of Labor was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over on the request of the Senator from Utah.

The bill (S. 7089) to remove the charge of desertion against Charlie Meyers was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROOT. I think that bill had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over on the objection of the Senator from New York.

The bill (S. 2058) for the relief of William Wentworth was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that bill go over likewise, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over on the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

INSPECTION AND GRADING OF GRAIN.

The bill (S. 223) to provide for the inspection and grading of grain entering into interstate commerce, and to secure uniformity in standards and classification of grain, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Let that bill go over.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator permit me to say that it of course would be entirely futile to ask the Senate to dispose of the bill under Rule VIII, but, as I understand it, the Senate passed a similar bill once. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] is very much interested in the measure and he wanted me to submit the matter to the Senate whether it was possible to get a unanimous-consent agreement to take up the bill at some day in the near future. I simply am putting out that feeler to see whether it can possibly be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. NELSON. I object to its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over on the objection of the Senator from Minnesota.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

The bill (S. 6100) appropriating $100,000 for the use of the Interstate Commerce Commission in addition to the sum or sums already appropriated for their use was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over on the objection of the Senator from New Hampshire.

LIMIT OF VISITORIAL POWERS.

The bill (H. R. 24153) to amend and reenact section 5241 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over on the objection of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I understand that the consideration of the bill was objected to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was, by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope the Senator who made the objection will withdraw it. The Pujo investigating committee in the House can not proceed another step until this legislation is enacted. By the morning papers and the papers of the day before the proceedings of the committee are within the information of all Senators. The present law reads as follows:

No association shall be subject to any visitorial powers other than such as are authorized by this title, or are vested in the courts of justice.

When the Pujo investigating committee began to examine witnesses for the purpose of arriving at the information which the House of Representatives desired, they found this statute lying athwart their pathway. It is subject to some doubt as to construction, it is true, but many of the witnesses have refused to answer questions and permit to be examined certain evidence within their possession because of this statute.

The House passed a bill, and in the Senate Committee on Finance certain members of that committee proposed as a substitute for the House bill the following; and if Senators will follow me they will note that down to the word "justice" it is a repetition of the existing law. It proposes to amend the act so that it will read:

SEC. 5241. No national banking association shall be subject to any visitorial powers other than such as are authorized by this title, or are vested in the courts of justice.

Then begins the new language, and I call the attention of Senators to it:

Or such as shall be necessary to secure information by any committee appointed by Congress or either House thereof, within the limits of the authority conferred by Congress or either House on said committee.

The bill was adversely reported from the Finance Committee. The views of the minority are signed by Senators MCCUMBER, LA FOLLETTE, SIMMONS, WILLIAMS, and JOHNSON.

I think it is a right serious thing, Mr. President, for a Senator or for the Senate to take the position of blocking an investigation by the House of Representatives. I think it is more serious of course for one Senator to do it than for the entire Senate. I am satisfied that if this bill could come before the Senate for a vote it would be passed. Ordinary comity between the two Houses would demand it, if nothing else. Besides that, ordinary justice demands it, because the House ought to have the opportunity, the Senate ought to have the opportunity, both Houses ought to have it, of investigating the affairs of its own creature.

The national banks are the creatures of the National Government; they are the creatures of the law passed by us; and to say that we shall permit to stand upon the statute book a provision to prevent the Congress of the United States, the law-making authority of the people, from getting that information which in the opinion of Congress or either House of Congress is necessary for the public welfare, is a position I take it which nobody ought to stand upon.

I do not know whether under the present arrangement it would be in order to move to take up the measure or not. I will make the inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it would not be in order, as the Senate is operating now under a unanimous-consent agreement to go to the Calendar to consider only unobjected bills.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I asked because I was not present when the unanimous-consent agreement was adopted, but I judged from the manner in which we have been proceeding that it had been adopted in that form.

I appeal to the Senator who made the objection to withdraw it, and at least permit the Senate to consider this matter, and not have it appear to the country that the Senate is thwarting an investigation by the House of Representatives, an investigation with the very highest purpose in view and of the highest importance to the people of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no desire whatever to interfere with the investigation on the part of the House of any matter, but this bill was referred to the Finance Committee of the Senate, and a majority of that committee voted upon it adversely. It was reported by the chairman adversely, and the chairman is not in the city to-day. It would be very unjust to him and to the committee, I think, to have the bill acted upon to-day, when there are very few Senators in the Chamber.

Mr. President, I shall certainly insist upon my objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope the Senator will pardon me for an interruption merely to this extent: While it is true that the bill was acted upon adversely in the committee, it is also true that the committee sent it here to be placed on the calendar for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. The chairman of the committee is not here. The bill proposes to change the existing law in a most radical way. I think the question would lead to a great deal of discussion, which is impossible at this time and under the present order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the objection of the Senator from Utah, the bill goes over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I must rest satisfied with having called the attention of the country to it.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE TREATY OF GHENT.

The bill (S. 4256) to approve of the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the treaty of Ghent was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the President is hereby authorized to appoint a commission of seven members, to be known as the Peace Centennial Commission. It shall be the duty of the commission to confer with such other commissions or committees as may be constituted for similar purposes in other English-speaking countries, and to report to the Congress a plan for the appropriate celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the treaty of Ghent. The commissioners shall serve without compensation. For the expenses of the commission, including salary of secretary, clerical service, traveling and office expenses, and printing plans, the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

The bill (S. 3315) to prohibit corporations from making contributions in connection with political elections and to limit the amount of said contributions by individuals or persons was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. The chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections [Mr. DILLINGHAM] is not present, and the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], who is interested in the bill, is also absent. So I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over under the objection of the Senator from Washington.

TRADE RESTRAINTS AND MONOPOLIES.

The bill (S. 3345) to amend the act of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies" was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. From what committee was the bill reported? The Committee on Interstate Commerce?

Mr. GALLINGER. The committee was discharged and the bill placed on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. I see that the committee was discharged. The bill had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over on the objection of the Senator from Utah.

CAPT. FRANK E. EVANS.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the report in that case be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The report referred to, which was submitted by Mr. WETMORE on December 18, 1912, is as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7169) to transfer Capt. Frank E. Evans from the retired to the active list of the Marine Corps, have had the same under consideration and report it back without amendment.

This officer was placed on the retired list of the Marine Corps after a total service, including Volunteer Army service in the Spanish War, of eight years and three months. Since that time he has led an active life and last year was accepted for life insurance by one of the conservative companies as a perfect risk. He has also been advised on expert authority that his cause of disability, heart disease, no longer exists to the point where it unfits him for the demands of active service. A similar case, that of Capt. Harold S. Jackson, United States Army, passed the Senate at the last session and in addition restored Capt. Jackson to the next higher grade in the number which he would have reached had he not been retired. Capt. Robert M. Gilson, United States Marine Corps, was restored by Congress to the active list, in his original number, following his resignation. Capt. Glison's length of service at the time was approximately half as long as that of Capt. Evans, his separation from the active list approximately the same, and his resignation was voluntary, while the retirement of Capt. Evans was not desired by that officer. Other cases in which officers of the Navy have been restored to the active list by Congress were those of Leonard M. Cox, Corps of Civil Engineers, on March 4, 1907; Commander K. McAlpine on June 25, 1910; Capt. S. M. Ackley on April 18, 1904.

Capt. Evans is now drawing pay as a retired officer but performing no duty. If restored to the active list, the Marine Corps would have the services of a trained officer at a comparatively small increase of pay. It is not considered likely, moreover, that he would reach a higher grade only to be again retired for disability, as the regulations of the Navy now require monthly tests of the officers on the active list. There is now pending in Congress a bill to increase the number of officers in the Marine Corps by appointments from the Naval Academy and from civil life. The passage of this bill would give the Marine Corps the services of an officer of more than eight years' total service as an enlisted man and officer at sea, in the Tropics, at the headquarters of the Marine Corps, on special duty in connection with the training of officers and enlisted men, and recruiting duty.

NATIONAL CARTAGE & WAREHOUSE CO., OF NEW YORK CITY.

Y., $95.40 collected on two cases of majolica ware in excess of the actual duty thereon.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CIGARS FURNISHED EMPLOYEES BY MANUFACTURERS.

The bill (H. R. 25741) amending section 3392 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by section 32 of the act of August 5, 1909, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I see there is no report accompanying that bill. I therefore ask that it go over, because I desire to obtain some information concerning it.

Mr. BRYAN. If the Senator from Utah will withhold his objection for just a moment, I think I can explain to him the situation which this bill is designed to relieve.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. BRYAN. I say I think I can explain to the Senator from Utah the position taken by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in reference to this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah withhold his objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I know what the object of the bill is, but I do not know what position the Commissioner of Internal Revenue takes regarding it nor do I know what effect the passage of the bill will have upon the collection of revenue hereafter from the manufacturers of cigars. It may be perfectly feasible, it may be all right; but I ask the Senator to allow the bill to go over to-day, and I promise him that I will look the matter up before the calendar is again considered.

Mr. BRYAN. Before the bill goes over I should like to say a few words, if the Senator from Utah will withhold his objection. In September, 1911, a question was raised by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as to whether or not the internal-revenue tax should be imposed on the small amounts of cigar tobacco used by the employees of factories, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at that time taking the position that he would enforce the tax. Subsequently to that, in March of this year, the Secretary of the Treasury, in commenting upon this bill and similar bills, made this statement:

No objection, however, would be offered to the bills submitted amended so as to read that: "On and after the passage of this act no manufacturer of cigars shall be taxed for cigars consumed on the factory premises by the cigar makers employed in the actual fabrication or production of cigars, and the manufacturers themselves"—

And so forth.

The bill has been amended so as to meet that view. The only change from existing law is now found in the second proviso of the bill, which permits employees to use for their own consumption 21 cigars a week, or an average of 3 cigars a day. It seems to me the Secretary himself has practically said in his letter of March 11, 1912, that he has no objection to it.

Now, the contest, prior to October, 1911, by the cigar manufacturers was that for the whole time no Secretary of the Treasury or Commissioner of Internal Revenue had undertaken to enforce a tax on cigars used by employees. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue at that time, Mr. Cabell, took the position that they ought to be taxed, and a friendly suit was brought, which, so far as I know, has not yet been determined.

This bill was introduced to avoid the payment of the internal-revenue tax in case it should be held that they could, under existing law, be forced to pay this tax, inasmuch as it was not anything out of which the manufacturers would reap any benefit and was something which in the nature of things they had to yield to to satisfy their employees. As I have said, the proposition seems not to have met with any objection on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury, as I gather from his letter as it appears in the House report upon this bill. In view of that statement and in view of the fact that the bill has been reported by the Ways and Means Committee of the House and by the Finance Committee of the Senate, if the Senator from Utah could allow this bill, which has remained upon the calendar for some considerable time, to be acted upon now, I do not feel that either the Secretary of the Treasury or any one else would have the right to complain of it.

Mr. SMOOT. I appreciate the position of the Senator, but for reasons already stated I shall have to object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under objection the bill goes over.

VALIDATION OF CERTAIN HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

The bill (S. 7568) to validate certain homestead entries was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that all pending homestead entries made in good faith prior to September 1, 1911, under the provisions of the enlarged homestead laws, by persons who before making such enlarged homestead entry had acquired title to land under the homestead laws and therefore were not qualified to make an enlarged homestead entry, shall be validated, if in all other respects regular, in all cases where the original homestead entry was for less than 160 acres of land.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PHOSPHATE AND OIL LANDS IN IDAHO.

The bill (S. 7638) to provide for State selections on phosphate and oil lands was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRISTOW. It seems to me that this is rather an unusual bill, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. No. Such a bill has been passed heretofore for every State in the West.

Mr. BRISTOW. It has?

Mr. SMOOT. It applies to lands that have been withdrawn for oil or phosphate, and under the law of withdrawal people can not homestead these lands. This gives a homesteader a right to homestead those lands, reserving to the Government the phosphate or oil there may be under them.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, on page 1, line 6, after the word "shall," to insert "if otherwise available under existing laws," so as to make the section read:

That from and after the passage of this act unreserved public lands of the United States in the State of Idaho which have been withdrawn or classified as phosphate or oil lands or are valuable for phosphates or oil shall, if otherwise available under existing laws, be subject to selection by the State of Idaho under indemnity and other land grants made to it by Congress, whenever such selections shall be made with a view of obtaining or passing title, with a reservation to the United States of the phosphates and oil in such lands and of the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, to strike out section 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 3. That upon satisfactory proof of full compliance with the provisions of the laws under which selection is made and this act, the State shall, upon approval of the selection by the Secretary of the Interior, be entitled to have the lands certified to it, with a reservation to the United States of all the phosphates and oil in the land so certified, together with the right in the United States, or persons authorized by them, to prospect for, mine, and remove the same; but before any person shall be entitled to enter upon the lands certified for the purpose of prospecting, mining, or removing phosphates or oil therefrom he shall furnish, subject to approval by the Secretary of the Interior, a bond or undertaking as security for the payment of all damages to the crops and improvements on said lands by reason of such prospecting for and removal of phosphates or oil. The reserved phosphate and oil deposits in approved selections under this act shall not be subject to exploration or entry other than by the United States, except as hereinafter authorized by Congress.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 8053) to authorize the creation of a temporary commission to investigate and make recommendation as to the necessity or desirability of establishing a national aerodynamical laboratory and prescribing the duties of said commission, and providing for the expenses thereof, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator reporting this bill is not present. No doubt many Senators would like to ask the Senator questions in relation to the policy outlined in the bill. I therefore ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

Mr. GALLINGER subsequently said: I was called from the Chamber when some bills were acted on. I wish to inquire what became of the bill (S. 8053) to authorize the creation of a temporary commission to investigate and make recommendation as to the necessity or desirability of establishing a national aerodynamical laboratory, and so forth?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill went over under objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust that the objection will be withdrawn. This is a very simple matter. The President has appointed a commission corresponding to commissions that almost every other country in the world has in existence, and it is only to be continued until the 4th day of March next. It is simply an appropriation of $5,000, and I hope that the objection will be withdrawn.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that the commission has already been appointed, and I also call to mind that there was an appropriation made in the appropriation act of $5,000 for this particular purpose. I therefore withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The reserved oil and gas deposits in such lands shall be disposed of only as shall be hereafter expressly directed by law," and insert: "SEC. 3. THE LATE GEORGE H. UTTER, REPRESENTATIVE FROM RHODE ISLAND.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the order which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY introduced the following order:

"Ordered, That Sunday, the 9th day of February, 1913, be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public services of Hon. GEORGE H. UTTER, late a Representative from the State of Rhode Island."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this order? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the order.

The order was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 27941, the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 27941, the Army appropriation bill, with Mr. SAUNDERS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is in session for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 27941. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For three months' additional pay to enlisted men reenlisting within the period of three months from date of discharge from first enlistment, $200,000.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. ESCH. I notice that about this same sum was carried in the last appropriation bill. In the appropriation bill for 1911 the amount was $247,000. I wish to inquire whether that indicates a less number of reenlistments, notwithstanding this inducement of three months' extra pay.

Mr. HAY. I suppose it does. This is the sum asked for by the War Department.

Mr. ESCH. The hearings give no explanation of the item?

Mr. HAY. No. We did not inquire whether more men were reenlisting than had been doing so before.

Mr. ESCH. The department considers it a wise policy to continue this bonus for reenlistment?

Mr. HAY. I think so. It is part of the law that increased the pay of enlisted men—the act of May, 1908—and it has to be provided for.

Mr. ESCH. I understand the law makes it compulsory?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. ESCH. I was wondering as to the general effect of the law.

Mr. HAY. I understand from the officers that they regard it as important as serving to induce men to reenlist.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For six months' additional pay to beneficiaries of officers and enlisted men who die while in active service from wounds or disease not the result of their own misconduct, $60,000.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee in charge of this bill what class of relatives are next of kin; in other words, to whom is this paid—to the wives and mothers and fathers, or does it go down the line to brothers and sisters?

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman that the law provides that the officer or soldier shall designate to whom this shall be paid.

Mr. COX. When he enlists?

Mr. HAY. Yes; when he enlists, and it is paid accordingly. I take it that it is paid either to the wife, mother, father, sister, or brother.

Mr. COX. To no one any further removed than those degrees of kindship?

Mr. HAY. I think not. The soldier is allowed to designate the person.

Mr. COX. What is the law to which the gentleman refers? I had an inquiry from one of my constituents about that recently.

Mr. HAY. It was passed on an appropriation bill several years ago.

Mr. COX. It is permanent law, is it?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If the gentleman will look in the compilation of military laws, which he can get in three minutes, he can find it by reference to the index.

Mr. COX. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry, composed of two battalions of four companies each:
Pay of officers, $65,100.
For additional pay for length of service, $9,860.05.
Pay of enlisted men, $134,052.
Additional pay for length of service, $30,220.12.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to make a suggestion in regard to this item which covers the appropriation for the Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry, and to mention some legislation which, while it should not be considered at this time, will soon be necessary for this regiment, and something of the kind may soon be recommended to us by the War Department.

I recently had the pleasure of spending two weeks in the island of Porto Rico, and one of the things that struck me most favorably was the fact that we have down there a regiment of native Porto Ricans, organized into the military service of the United States, which is equal in point of appearance and evident soldierly qualities to any Infantry regiment I have ever seen in the United States service.

The work of bringing this regiment to its present state of efficiency has been done by American officers who were sent down there shortly after the Spanish War with the rank of captain. They have done their work faithfully and well, but these officers are unfortunately situated. Under the present law they can never hope to secure further advancement or promotion in the United States Army, although they are doing work similar to that which the other officers of similar rank and of no greater ability in the other regiments of the Army are doing.

The remedy that I propose is that the Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry shall be known as the Thirty-first Regiment of United States Infantry; that its regular complement of officers shall be placed upon the lineal list of the officers of the United States Army, the same as other officers of the Army; and that they shall have the same advantages of promotion and advancement. It would be only the fair and just thing to do, or at least the officers of the Porto Rico Regiment should have the opportunity of promotion to be field officers of their regiment instead of detailing field officers from other regiments, as is now the case.

When this regiment was organized we thought it was to be a temporary affair. We thought we were going to use it for a few years only, but Porto Rico is American territory. It will always be a part of the United States, and therefore the Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry should be known no longer as the Porto Rico Regiment, but as the Thirty-first Regiment of Infantry of the United States Army. The regiment should not be considered as local militia, but should in every respect be incorporated in our regular military establishment.

Mr. MANN. Why is the appropriation for this regiment less than the current law? What is the occasion for reducing it?

Mr. ANTHONY. I did not notice that there was any reduction.

Mr. MANN. There is a slight reduction in the pay of officers and a reduction of nearly $5,000 in the pay of enlisted men.

Mr. HAY. I will state to the gentleman that the reduction in the pay of officers is only $600, and the committee appropriated what was estimated for by the department.

Mr. MANN. I am not criticizing the committee in any way. I am just asking for information.

Mr. HAY. I understand that.

Mr. MANN. The pay of officers is reduced $600, and the appropriation for enlisted men is reduced $4,908.

Mr. HAY. I can only state that it was computed upon the number of officers, with their rank, and the number of enlisted men whom they expect to have during the fiscal year 1914.

Mr. MANN. I apprehended that was true, and I wondered whether there was any reduction in the rank of the officers, or any proposed reduction in the number of men, in view of the statements of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY].

Mr. HAY. To be frank with the gentleman, I do not know why the department made the estimate.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's explanation is entirely satisfactory under the circumstances.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say one word.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to say one word more in regard to the native officers of this regiment. They are a particularly fine body of men. There are 16 or 17 of them, I think. Every one of them is a graduate either of a college in the United States or a college in Spain or South America.

They are an unusually well-equipped lot of men, and there is every reason why we should admit them into the United States Army fully and let them take their places in the lineal list of officers. They will rank up fully with American officers of a similar rank in the Army, and I hope at no distant day the legislation I suggest will be adopted.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Are these officers now Porto Rico men?

Mr. ANTHONY. The captains of the eight companies are American officers sent there in 1899. The lieutenants are native Porto Ricans. The field officers, lieutenant colonels, and two majors are from our regular service detailed there.

Mr. MANN. Do these lieutenants have any opportunity of promotion?

Mr. ANTHONY. Absolutely none, except to be first lieutenants. They have no chance to become captains even.

Mr. MANN. If they were covered into the regular service they would have no chance of appointment.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; then this regiment would become fully a part of the Regular Army.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, it happens that within the last two or three days I have received a letter which is now lying on my desk from a former Commissioner of Porto Rico, Tulio Larrinaga, in which he protests against this suggestion of my friend from Kansas, for whose judgment in military matters I have a profound respect. It shows that a different opinion exists in the islands among the Porto Ricans themselves. Since I have been on my feet I learn that the gentleman does not propose to submit an amendment, but I suggest to the gentleman that legislation of this kind should be deferred until the other side of the question can be heard. The Porto Ricans, according to former Commissioner Larrinaga, want to maintain the regiment as it is, preserve its identity as a Porto Rican regiment.

Mr. ANTHONY. To give them the opportunity for promotion is only doing an act of simple justice to these eight captains who went down there 12 years ago and who have been in the same rank ever since.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Are they commissioned officers of the Regular Army?

Mr. ANTHONY. They were mostly appointed from the Volunteer Army during the War with Spain.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It would be increasing the number of officers in the Army?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; the Porto Rican regiment is now really a part of the Army.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

PHILIPPINE SCOUTS.

For pay of officers: For 52 captains, $124,800.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not want to trespass on the House with an academic discussion even for five minutes, but I just want to make an observation. The standing Army of the United States in 1872, a few years after the close of the Civil War, was about 25,000, including officers and enlisted men. So recently as Cleveland's last administration, in 1894, the standing Army was less than 25,000 men. I believe the chairman of the committee stated a few days ago that the standing Army at the present time is about 90,000. I know, Mr. Chairman, of no reason either in the history of the world or the history of this country that our standing Army should have increased, unless it was the acquisition of the Philippine Islands.

It has been the policy and the genius of this Republic from the age of its foundation to maintain a very small standing Army. The only excuse for a standing Army in the first periods of the Republic was to afford a guard for the frontiers against Indian marauders. But for the ownership of the Philippine Islands there is practically no excuse at this hour why this Government should maintain a large standing Army.

On the north we are bounded by Canada, a peaceful people similar to ours and much weaker in strength than we. On the other side, to the south, we are bounded by Mexico, a helpless Republic, that never could jeopardize the liberty of this country. On the east we are bounded by the Atlantic and on the west by the Pacific.

So that this people, if God ever gave a country to a race of any kind of people to protect their liberty without a standing Army, and without the burden of great taxes to maintain them, this is the spot and these are the people to enjoy that great blessing.

Of course, it is idle to say that we maintain an Army against European invasion. I see, Mr. Chairman, the philosophy of a large standing German army, I see the philosophy of a great standing army in France, where a day's journey can bring them at each other's throats. But in this Republic, separated by high seas, separated by those natural and impassable barriers that make us immune against encroachment of foreign lands, there is absolutely no excuse for 100,000 soldiers in this Republic to be supported by the taxes of the people.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] the other day said he was proud of our Army. So am I. Wherever an American army, whether in foreign war or in civil contest, has been marshaled upon a field of battle it has given a glorious account of American manhood and American valor. But I do not want an army for which we have no use at all. Armies are either for defensive purposes or offensive purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIES. Certainly, Mr. Chairman, there can be no excuse for a standing army for defensive purposes. Surely this magnificent Republic, with all its wealth, with all of its patriotic millions of people, is safe against encroachment from foreign lands where armies must be assembled by passage over the seas. Then, unless it is sought to build up a standing army for offensive purposes, these hundreds of millions of the people's money might as well be left in the people's pockets. Every great writer who has discussed the probability of the success of this Republic, whether it has been the first writers along that line or more recent ones, has based a prophecy that this Republic, based upon the theory of the consent of the governed, should exist and succeed because of its isolated location. The fall of the republics of ancient times is traceable to the fact that their situation required great armies and armaments, and that the Man on Horseback came, as a result, to destroy the liberties of the people.

God has placed us upon this great, rich continent, separate and secure from the broils and wars of Europe. Mr. Chairman, with all due respect and reverence to and for that great Admiral who secured the victory of Manila Bay, I think he did the saddest day's work ever done for this Republic when he gave us possession of a territory which our public men say we can not turn loose. [Applause.] We have all the land that we need. We have this beautiful spot segregated from the world, and under the providence of God and the Constitution of this Republic we might work out our destiny, based upon the theory of the consent of the governed; but instead of that, short-sighted politics, short-sighted statesmen, men who either do not know or do not care about the lessons of history, are constantly embroiling this Nation in an attempted acquisition and acquisition of territory that is not contiguous to this Republic. It means a standing Army. The Army of practically 100,000 to-day will grow. In a few years it has grown from 25,000 to 90,000. In a few years more it will be 125,000 or 150,000, to be supported by the people who need no offensive operations and whose geographical situation makes them secure and makes it unnecessary for defensive operations.

Mr. Chairman, I wish that the old genius of this Republic would return. I wish that its spirit would hover over the destiny of this Nation, that we might return to the old simple days of a Republic for the people and that we might get rid of this modern appendage of democracy, namely, colonial possessions. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move the pro forma amendment. Under present conditions I apprehend the pending Army appropriation bill has been well made, and I do not rise for the purpose of criticizing it. I am not in harmony with the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], who has just taken his seat, although I have a very sincere respect for him personally. I am not in harmony with the position taken by the Democratic Party in its platform and in speeches made in the House touching a proper policy for the great Republic. I am not in harmony with the outgivings of the President elect touching the Philippine Islands. I am not in harmony with the outgivings of your great leader, William Jennings Bryan, who is more responsible for the Philippines and our ownership of them than any man, living or dead, because it was the "peerless leader" who came to Washington and by his influence furnished the Democratic votes in the Senate that ratified the treaty of Paris by which we obtained the Philippines.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. One moment. I can not yield during a five-minute speech. If I had a little more time, if desired, I would very cheerfully yield to a question.

Then we had the issue of imperialism when Mr. Bryan was a candidate in 1900. Mr. Chairman, we have the Philippines, and the position of the Democratic Party, including Mr. Bryan, and of the President elect, in my judgment will lead to the loss of tens of thousands of men belonging to the Army and Navy, and to hundreds of millions of treasure.

Oh, gentlemen, we have got the Philippines, and the American people, when they come to consider the question, are not going to forsake their duty to the Philippines. As I said once before, you can no more get rid of them, in my opinion, than Hercules could get rid of the shirt of Nessus, and you will find that public sentiment will not let you forsake them. However much in the future it will cost the country in treasure and blood to perform our duty toward those islands, in the fullness of time I think our possession of the Philippines will be worth all they may cost, although we may all be dead before the problem is solved. You may ask, Are we going to keep the Philippines and oppress them? No; but whenever the people of that great archipelago, with different languages and different religions and no religion, become competent for self-government, by that time they will not want to sever their relations with this great Republic. We have now a Regular Army of 80,000, or possibly a little more, and, with the great expenditure for fortifications, with the Monroe doctrine to maintain, with the Panama Canal to protect and defend, with almost 100,000,000 people, I would not have an Army less in number than it is now, and I would increase the Army from time to time as necessity and prudence may require.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. I am quite in harmony with those who advocate a liberal policy touching the expenditures in connection with the militia, and I stand ready to vote, when given an opportunity, for larger appropriations that we may have young men of this and the oncoming generations enlisted in the service of the United States—in the meantime remaining in civil life—ready as trained soldiers to enter the active service when the national defense might require.

Mr. Chairman, if we had had at the time of the War with Spain 100,000 well-trained men in the Regular Army, it would not have been necessary for us to have called upon the citizen soldiery, which volunteered in great numbers, for that contest. It takes a volunteer citizen soldier on the average at least six months to become well trained for efficient service. In the meantime disease and death incapacitate and destroy greater numbers than six months of active service in actual warfare after they are trained. If there had been 100,000 young men in the United States ready for active service, already organized, subject to call, the loss of life and expense would have been very small in comparison with the actual expense and loss, saying nothing of the expense to result in the coming 50 years.

Mr. Chairman, we have our responsibility down on the borderland on the south, with Mexico and the South American Republics. God knows we do not want them to enlarge our boundary in that direction. My friend from Texas [Mr. DIES] does not want Mexico. Nay, nay, but, gentleman, we have got to abandon the Monroe doctrine; we have got to play a happy-go-lucky game and take all things for granted or we have got to realize the obligation that the present and future brings to us. Therefore I am entirely in sympathy with the effort to provide an adequate Navy. I have voted for battleships, and I stand ready to vote for the men and munitions to supply the Navy, and I stand ready——

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. In a moment. I stand ready to vote for more supplies, powder, and mobile artillery, because we may have ever so many men ready and willing to serve the Republic, but unless we are prepared with material as well as men we are powerless and liable to be knocked out before we can get a good start. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman is soon to leave this Chamber, and I believe it is well known that a certain element of the people of this country have great respect for his views, and I would like for him to take the time to define his version of the Monroe doctrine at this time that it may go into the RECORD. There are various opinions as to what the Monroe doctrine means, and I would like to know what the gentleman's version is.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. The Monroe doctrine is pretty well defined. Under that doctrine it is our duty to see that no Old World nations shall establish governments, as I understand, upon this continent. We had a fair illustration of it when in the great stress of the Civil War a combination was made in Europe to place Maximilian upon the throne of Mexico. A protest was made against that action, but our hands were full with that great internecine contest. When it ceased, however, the Confederate soldier and Union soldier stood ready, backed by the sentiment of all parts of this country, to throw Maximilian into the sea. [Applause.] A portion of our troops went down toward the border; but the old leader, Juarez, was able to do that job himself without any soldier of the United States placing foot upon the soil of Mexico.

Our domestic relations have kept me so busy in my almost 40 years of service in this House that it is difficult for me to be accurate in an offhand talk of five minutes in matters affecting our foreign relations. Questions affecting the Monroe doctrine will be worked out from the standpoint of self-protection in the performance of our duty upon this continent, in South America and North America, and in the islands of the Caribbean, but not for conquest or the acquirement of territory.

Now, the gentleman has said that I am soon to retire from this House. That is true, and there is no personal regret in my heart at going. True, I did not ask for the leave of absence [laughter], but I feel a little different about it now than I did 22 years ago, when I was granted a leave of absence for two years for which I did not ask. I have gotten to be a pretty old man, but I feel as well as I ever did in my life. [Loud applause.] I am going home to Danville and remain with the people who have honored me with 19 indorsements, covering a period of almost 40 years, and if perchance I should never appear in public life again during the remainder of my life, I am going to perform as one man, as one voter, my duties as one of the sovereigns of the United States [applause] in advocating those policies that I believe will tend to secure the well-being of our country. The great citizenship of the Republic, both Democrats and Republicans, at heart believe in a representative democracy under the Constitution of the United States, and will maintain the same, and these are the only reliable party organizations in the country. [Applause.]

I do not fear for the perpetuity of the Republic. In the past we have made mistakes that involved great penalties, but we have paid the penalty; and in the future we will make mistakes and will pay the penalty.

I am a partisan Republican because I believe in the economic policies of that party; but I trust I am also a patriotic American citizen, as I grant that you all are.

By a constitutional majority you have been clothed with and will soon assume complete power, and that involves full responsibility. You have been successful as critics, but you must now take up the burden of construction and maintenance. If under your policies and administration the country prospers, then you will deserve to continue in power. I desire that you shall succeed, but I can not hope that you will, for hope consists of a combination of desire and expectation. If your policies fail to enable the people to maintain their present condition, then at the next opportunity they will repudiate you. The proof of the pudding is the eating of it, and I, in common with all the people, await results.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

All the money hereinbefore appropriated for pay of the Army and miscellaneous, except the appropriation for mileage of officers, dental surgeons, contract surgeons, veterinarians, pay clerks, and expert accountant Inspector General's Department, when authorized by law, shall be disbursed and accounted for by officers of the Quartermaster Corps as pay of the Army, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund: Provided, That hereafter section 3620, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of Congress approved February 27, 1877, shall not be construed as precluding Army paymasters from drawing checks in favor of the person or institution designated by indorsement made on his monthly pay account by any officer of the Army if the pay account has been deposited for payment on maturity in conformity with such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe: Provided further, That payment by the United States of a check on the indorsement of the indorsee specified on the pay account shall be a full acquittance for the amount due on the pay account.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] reserves a point of order.

Mr. HAY. The paragraph is subject to a point of order if the gentleman desires to make it.

Mr. COX. I want to reserve the point of order only on a portion of the paragraph, Mr. Chairman, and if I can get some information, possibly not on that. That part of the paragraph beginning on line 2, 'except the appropriation for mileage of officers, dental surgeons, contract surgeons, veterinarians, pay clerks, and expert accountant Inspector General's Department, when authorized by law." That is the proposition that I reserve a point of order on.

Mr. HAY. I do not think that part of it is subject to a point of order. What is the information that the gentleman desires?

Mr. COX. Why is that language put in this bill?

Mr. HAY. It is put in the bill because they do not want the appropriation for mileage to be included as one fund together with the other funds appropriated for the payment of the Army.

Mr. COX. How has that been disbursed heretofore?

Mr. HAY. As one fund.

Mr. COX. Has it not been disbursed on vouchers heretofore?

Mr. HAY. Oh, yes.

Mr. COX. Does this language prevent the disbursement of this fund by vouchers?

Mr. HAY. No, sir. I will say to the gentleman that this language has been in the bill for a long time.

Mr. COX. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It was not in the bill last year.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; it was in the last bill. The words used were Pay Department, and that is now consolidated with the Quartermaster's Corps.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman will find, on reference to that paragraph, that the provision reads:

All the money hereinbefore appropriated for pay of the Army and miscellaneous, except the appropriation for mileage of officers, dental surgeons, contract surgeons, veterinarians, pay clerks, and expert accountant Inspector General's Department, when authorized by law, shall be disbursed and accounted for by officers of the Quartermaster Corps as pay of the Army, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

Mr. COX. I find, Mr. Chairman, that the language was in the preceding bill. I did not read page 10. I am not versed as to whether that changes existing legislation or not. Does it?

Mr. HAY. No; it does not.

Mr. COX. It changes no existing legislation?

Mr. HAY. No; it does not change any law whatever.

Mr. COX. None whatever?

Mr. HAY. None whatever.

Mr. COX. How long has that been carried in the appropriation?

Mr. HAY. To my certain knowledge it has been carried for 16 years. I do not know whether it was carried before I became a Member of this House, but since I have been a Member that has been carried in the law.

Mr. MANN. I will ask the gentleman from Virginia, Is not this really a matter of bookkeeping?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Without this a separate account would have to be kept of all these different items in the bill?

Mr. HAY. Undoubtedly.

Mr. COX. Are they required now to keep the mileage separate?

Mr. MANN. It is kept separate by this provision.

Mr. COX. And without this provision in the bill the mileage would not be kept separate from the other items?

Mr. MANN. Without this provision in the bill all these matters would have to be kept under separate accounts.

Mr. COX. I am not making a point of order against any paragraph except that portion of it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will notice that that excepts mileage.

Mr. COX. That attracted my attention to it. Why is that?

Mr. HAY. In order to give Congress the opportunity of knowing how much is disbursed for mileage, and to whom it is disbursed, so that we can keep tab on it and, if possible, reduce it.

Mr. COX. With all due deference to the gentleman's committee, it has not reduced it very much. It was $500,000 last year and it is $550,000 this year. But that is neither here nor there. Without this language in the bill would Congress be in possession of any data showing how that mileage was disbursed?

Mr. HAY. Oh, yes; because they disburse every item that is disbursed upon a voucher; not only the mileage, but every other item.

Mr. COX. But why is this exception made?

Mr. MANN. This particular item does not include mileage.

Mr. HAY. The exception is made so that no more than $550,000 can be disbursed for mileage.

Mr. COX. Then if it were not for this exception here, would it be in the power of the War Department to disburse more than $550,000 for mileage?

Mr. HAY. Yes. That is the reason why it is put in there, so that they shall not exceed that amount for mileage.

Mr. COX. In other words, the language to which I have called attention amounts to a limitation upon the appropriation. No more than $550,000 can be allowed for mileage.

Mr. HAY. That is true.

Mr. COX. I withdraw my point of order on that particular part of the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the point of order, may I ask the chairman, as long as he desires to make permanent law of the provision about the payment of checks, where I suppose the officers direct payment to be made to their beneficiaries, just what is that practice?

Mr. HAY. The practice has been for these officers to designate their wives, or people dependent upon them, as the beneficiaries of their checks, and to allow them to deposit those checks in the bank.

Mr. MANN. Without this provision in the law would the check have to be made payable to the officer?

Mr. HAY. Yes; the comptroller has so ruled, and has put a stop to the practice which has been in vogue, and it works a very great hardship, especially on officers in the Philippines.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HAY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 3, after the word "surgeons," insert the words "acting dental surgeons."

Mr. MANN. Why not insert "acting" before the words "dental surgeons"?

Mr. HAY. That will do. I ask that the amendment be so changed as to insert the word "acting," in line 3, before the word "dental."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as now proposed by the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 3, before the word "dental," insert the word "acting."

So that it will read:

Acting dental surgeons.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice in this paragraph of the bill that dental surgeons, contract surgeons, and veterinarians are excepted.

Mr. HAY. May I ask what the gentleman means by their being excepted?

Mr. HELM. The language in the bill is:

That all money heretofore appropriated for pay of the Army and miscellaneous, except appropriations for mileage, dental surgeons, contract surgeons, and veterinarians.

Mr. HAY. It does not except those particular people. It excepts the appropriation for mileage.

Mr. HELM. Mileage for them, or pay of officers.

Mr. HAY. It excepts the appropriation for mileage for the officers, and all people in the Army who get mileage.

Mr. HELM. Let us see if I understand the gentleman. Does this exception apply to the compensation of these dental surgeons and contract surgeons and veterinarians, or to the mileage?

Mr. HAY. Not at all. They get their mileage, but the exception is that the fund which is appropriated for mileage must be disbursed as one fund, and not included with the other funds which are provided for the pay of the Army.

Mr. HELM. The mileage of these contract surgeons and veterinarians.

Mr. HAY. It is paid to them just as it is paid to officers.

Mr. HELM. The exception applies to the mileage of these men, and not to their compensation.

Mr. HAY. That is correct. Now, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] seemed to be under the impression the other day that the pay of the officers of the Army is larger than the pay of the enlisted men. I have had the items computed, and I find that the pay of the officers is $17,569,345 and the pay of the enlisted men is $28,148,466. Then there are other items in the bill, such as pay clerks, superintendent of the Nurse Corps, nurses, and so forth, which amount to $1,185,910, making the pay of the Army in all $46,903,721.

Mr. HELM. If I understand the gentleman, he now states that the compensation is something over $17,000,000?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. HELM. That includes what class of officers?

Mr. HAY. That includes commissioned officers.

Mr. HELM. What is the compensation of the commissioned and noncommissioned officers, of all ranks, grades, and classes?

Mr. HAY. The noncommissioned officer is an enlisted man, and it would be impossible for me to get the information which the gentleman wants without having the War Department file a statement showing how much each noncommissioned officer receives. The noncommissioned officers are first sergeants, quartermaster sergeants, sergeants, and corporals. There are so many to each company and so many to each regiment.

Mr. HELM. The gentleman understands the statement I have made in response to him was that the compensation of all the officers, including both commissioned and noncommissioned, in the last year's bill, which it is stated this bill follows, was substantially about $40,000,000. Is the gentleman in a position to say that the compensation of the commissioned and noncommissioned officers as carried in this bill does not amount to approximately $40,000,000?

Mr. HAY. I am.

Mr. HELM. What is the approximate amount?

Mr. HAY. I am prepared to say, from what I know of the number of enlisted men other than noncommissioned officers, that their pay would be in the neighborhood of $10,000,000. I mean the privates.

Mr. HELM. And you have a total of $46,000,000?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. HELM. If the privates get $10,000,000 of the $46,000,000, then $36,000,000 goes to the class of men I have referred to.

Mr. HAY. You take off $1,185,000 for the pay clerks, and so forth.

Mr. HELM. Is the gentleman including in his estimate the length of service?

Mr. HAY. Every item in these pay items of the bill.

Mr. HELM. The gentleman's statement is that about $35,000,000 of this appropriation carried in this bill goes to the commissioned and noncommissioned officers?

Mr. HAY. I think it might be approximately that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think it is not possible from the bill to tell what the pay of the noncommissioned officers is, because the noncommissioned officers and privates are all carried in the same item, which is only two lines of the bill, outside of the longevity pay in the Regular Army.

Mr. HAY. The Engineer Corps, Signal Corps, and the Ordnance Corps are separate.

Mr. MANN. Those are carried separately. The total pay carried is a little less than $17,000,000 for regular pay and a little over $2,000,000 for longevity pay.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HELM. Do I understand the gentleman to state that that $17,000,000 includes compensation for the privates and noncommissioned officers?

Mr. MANN. That is what I understand; there is no other place in the bill for them.

Mr. HELM. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HAY. No; the gentleman from Illinois is correct, but there are a good many enlisted men in the Signal Corps and in——

Mr. MANN. There are special departments of the Army where you make provision for enlisted men separate from the noncommissioned officers.

Mr. HELM. The point I am trying to get at is the $17,000,000 does not include the entire compensation of the enlisted men, the privates and noncommissioned officers?

Mr. MANN. It includes the pay of the men in the regiments, including the noncommissioned officers, in the Infantry, Cavalry, and Artillery. That is the Army as I call it. It does not include the Engineer Corps, the Signal Corps, the Quartermaster Corps, or the subsidiary branches.

Mr. HELM. That does not conflict with my statement at all.

Mr. MANN. I am not seeking to make conflicting statements. I say there is no way of telling from the appropriation bill or the law the amount of the noncommissioned officers' pay.

Mr. KENDALL. Does not the $17,000,000 include much more than the pay of enlisted men and the noncommissioned officers?

Mr. MANN. I do not know of anything else it could include.

Mr. HAY. That is the flat pay; it does not include clothing or subsistence.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in that connection it is interesting, possibly, to state the amount that is paid by the foreign governments on account of officers and men, which I do not intend to do very completely. Great Britain has commissioned officers in the regular army to the number of nearly 10,000; in the territorial army something over 9,000; in the Indian army something over 3,000; to which are paid a little over $25,000,000, including all allowances, commutations, and so forth, and to the retired officers something over $9,000,000. I do not understand whether the gentleman from Virginia, in stating the amount of the pay of commissioned officers, included in that the allowances for commutation.

Mr. HAY. I did not include anything but commutation of quarters.

Mr. MANN. The German Army has over 25,000 commissioned officers, to whom are paid a little over $18,000,000. The Austrian Army has nearly 23,000 commissioned officers, to whom are paid $18,000,000. The French has twenty-eight thousand and some odd commissioned officers. The infantry officers receive $9,300,000, the cavalry officers $2,600,000, and the artillery officers $3,000,000. I do not think it is necessary or instructive, possibly, to detain the committee with a lot of other information which I have been endeavoring to secure upon this subject.

Mr. COX. I would suggest that the gentleman put it in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. No. I may have other uses for it, where it will be more convenient to get at than if it were in the RECORD.

Mr. HELM. The English Army has a total of how many officers all told?

Mr. MANN. A little over 22,000.

Mr. HELM. Commissioned officers?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HELM. What compensation do they receive?

Mr. MANN. The regular pay, including allowances, is $25,000,000.

Mr. HELM. How many officers are there in the United States Army?

Mr. MANN. I could not answer.

Mr. HELM. Are there not about 5,000?

Mr. MANN. I think in that neighborhood.

Mr. HELM. They receive about 75 per cent as much as the entire British officers receive. Is not that true?

Mr. MANN. I am not under cross-examination. The gentleman can give figures as well as I.

Mr. HELM. I was trying to let the gentleman do the figuring. He has the figures in his hand.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. I have not.

Mr. HELM. The gentleman has a statement from which he was reading.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I have some information about other matters, but not about the matter to which the gentleman just alluded. The gentleman extracted that information or received it from the gentleman from Virginia, and not from me.

Mr. HELM. I do not think the gentleman from Virginia had anything to say about the British Army.

Mr. MANN. No; but I have given the gentleman information in reference to the British Army.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, a second lieutenant in the continental European armies gets about $30 a month. A second lieutenant in the United States Army gets $150 a month. Is it the purpose of the gentleman from Kentucky to intimate that a second lieutenant in the United States Army ought to receive less money than he now gets, or what is the purpose of these comparisons? Does the gentleman feel that the American Army officer is overpaid?

Mr. HELM. Here is the whole purpose of it: It is to let the country understand how much an unorganized, inefficient Army of about 80,000 men is costing the people of the United States. That is my purpose.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman does not propose to reduce the pay of the commissioned officer of the Army to $30 a month, the same rate of pay received by the same grade in the European armies?

Mr. HELM. No. If I did make any such proposition as that of course it would not go through this body or the other body, and if it did go through, it would be vetoed. But I do believe something can be accomplished by calling attention to the fact that we are paying about $100,000,000 annually for something that is not an army.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will pardon me one word more in that connection, I will say that some time ago it occurred to me that it might be instructive and possibly beneficial if we could obtain information showing the cost of the American Army for maintenance, including the cost for officers and men, and the cost of armies in foreign countries. I find it is not a very easy matter to obtain that information, although one would think it might easily be obtained. I have received some data from the Secretary of War in response to a request which I submitted to him, and some data from the Secretary of the Navy in response to a request which I submitted to him. I have also received some information from Mr. Griffin, in the Library, who is supposed to be able to find out anything in the world that is known and published in books. I have not secured all the information yet, and do not know that I ever shall be able to, but I think it would be beneficial to us all to know what the cost of our military operations is and what is the cost of the military operations of foreign countries, so far at least as maintenance is concerned.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will permit me for a moment, I will state that the cost for subsistence in this country is probably much larger than it is in any other country in the world. During the Boxer troubles in China, when troops were brought in from all the nations, the officers of the armies of Continental Europe purchased from the commissaries of the American Army supplies that we were giving to our private soldiers.

That is, they purchased for themselves some supplies that we were giving to our private soldiers; so that it would seem to me the officers in the armies of Europe do not receive from their respective Governments the quality of supplies or the quantity of supplies that we issue to our private soldiers in this country.

Mr. MANN. I doubt whether the proof of what was purchased in the Boxer trouble is proof of what might take place under ordinary conditions, and I see no reason why the supplies furnished to our Regular Army should cost a great deal more here than in foreign countries, considering the fact we ship those same supplies from America to the foreign countries to a considerable extent—not quite so much now as we used to do—and we produce them here at home, whereas very few foreign countries do produce them at home.

Mr. KAHN. I spoke of the quality and variety of the ration more than the cost.

Mr. MANN. I apprehend, after all, the American in the Army does not eat any more than the Frenchman or the German or the Englishman; he may possibly get a little better provender, but I doubt that.

Mr. KAHN. He probably gets more meat than in other armies.

Mr. MANN. And, I expect, more meat than is good for him.

Mr. KAHN. And he gets more articles of subsistence than they do.

Mr. MANN. Well, I am not criticizing the maintenance of the American Army—far from it—but I wanted to get the figures.

Mr. KAHN. The figures I had were 23.8 cents per man; I think that is the ration for the private soldier.

Mr. MANN. Which does not seem excessive.

Mr. KAHN. It has been increased from 21 cents to 23 cents by reason of the increased cost of some of the various articles that enter into the ration. That has brought about the deficiency in the item of subsistence for the Army; the cost of the ration has increased.

Mr. HOBSON. In the Navy the ration runs, I think, to 30 cents, or possibly more.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in—did the gentleman from Wyoming want to say anything?

Mr. MONDELL. I should like to have five minutes.

Mr. HAY. In five minutes.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should like to say a word.

Mr. HAY. In 10 minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, quite recently I read a very interesting article, I regret now I did not read it with more care, on this Army pay and supply question, comparing the American Army pay and supplies with the pay and supplies of foreign armies. In a way it was very startling, and I regret I do not recall the exact figures, but it made clear the fact that the enlisted man—the drafted man, for they are such—of continental armies receives a mere pittance, a very few cents per day, and that the officers, compared with the officers of our Army, are paid a very insignificant sum. I saw a little squib the other day relating to the pay of the men who have been so gallantly carrying the Turkish fortifications in the Balkans recently, giving the very extraordinary titles and the small pay that those men receive. My recollection is that a colonel in the Bulgarian Army receives about what a first lieutenant receives in our Army. Now, in the matter of supplies and rations, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] are both to a certain extent correct. Our ration costs more per man, because we do give the men more. We give the men more pounds per day food and we give them a much greater variety and a much better quality of food than the enlisted men of continental armies receive. The amount of meat which the American soldier has allotted to him, as I recollect, is more than twice the amount allotted to any soldier of any European army per day, but we all understand, those who have some knowledge of military affairs, and I do not claim to have much, that our Army ration is such that by carefully husbanding it the men are able to purchase many articles outside of the regular ration, and they do enjoy constantly, at least when not in the field, a very much wider range of ration and a very much greater variety of food than the ration itself produces, and that is secured by a saving on the ration and the commutation of the saving in other articles.

The enlisted man of the United States Army is as well fed as any man in the world need be, and fed on the best of food and furnished entirely sufficient quantities of it. It is true, as the gentleman from Illinois says, that, per pound of the articles furnished, the cost is often actually less in the United States than the same articles cost European armies.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an observation in reference to the statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM], in which he declared there was room for large economy in the maintenance of our Army. Now, I agree with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM]. There is room for economy in Army expenditures, but the place for it is not in a reduction of the ration of the soldier or in the pay of the soldier or of the officer, but the place for it is to pursue a policy of stationing our mobile Army in places where the men can be subsisted at the most economical cost to the Government, where the animals of the Cavalry and Artillery can be fed with grain and forage where it can be obtained at the very least cost to the Government. And I make the statement here now, that the way our Army is scatterd over this country, that at fully two-thirds of the posts in this country the cost of a ration is substantially higher than in other parts of the country; that we have Cavalry in parts of the country where forage costs twice as much as in other parts of the country. I believe several millions of dollars could be saved in distributing our Army properly over this country.

Mr. HOBSON. If the gentleman will yield, could not the restationing also be arranged so as to increase the efficiency as well as to reduce the cost? That is, let there be more concentration, and therefore efficiency in larger degree.

Mr. ANTHONY. Concentration in larger degree, but where subsistence, grain, and forage can be had at less cost.

Mr. MONDELL. Will that be in Kansas?

Mr. ANTHONY. That will be in the great Middle West, ranging from the Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico and from the valley of the Mississippi west to the Rocky Mountains.

Mr. HELM. I understood you to say that the Army ought to be concentrated where it could be subsisted the cheapest?

Mr. ANTHONY. That is correct.

Mr. HELM. I want to take issue in part with the gentleman and say that the Army ought to be stationed where it can be brought into action in concert with the Navy and with the Coast Artillery.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman will permit, I will make a statement along those lines.

Mr. HELM. Our Army ought to be located along our ocean coasts and our frontiers of Canada and Mexico.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not agree with the gentleman at all. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have a high opinion personally of our Secretary of War, but I have a very poor opinion of the ideas he has lately advanced, that our Army ought to be stationed in this country purely along "tactical" and "strategic" lines, as he calls it. I think that is all bosh, if I can use that expression when used in connection with the manner in which the mobile army should be garrisoned in the United States in times of peace.

That idea might have been all right a hundred years ago when there was a necessity, for instance, of maintaining an army on the Canadian or Atlantic border in order to resist invasion, but I say the policy we should pursue now to secure the best results is to station our Army and subsist it where it can be done the cheapest as well as concentrated for tactical and maneuver purposes. To-day our troops can be taken in 24 to 48 hours from one part of this country to another—from its geographical center to any coast or border in two or three days at most. The Army ought to be permanently stationed where it will cost the taxpayers of the country the least amount of money.

Another proposition that the War Department has advanced, and which I think is going to cost the people of this country an unnecessarily large abount of money, is their evident intention to take 12,000 of our troops and place them in garrison in Hawaii and to send 9,000 troops to Panama. It is going to cost one-third more to take care of those soldiers in those countries than it is in the United States, and as regards the real military necessity of stationing 9,000 troops on the Panama Canal I believe there is none. We could place 9,000 troops there one month ahead of any enemy that could possibly menace the canal, and a permanent police force is all that is really needed. I want to see Congress sit down on these tremendous contemplated expenditures for these unnecessary foreign garrisons.

Mr. HOBSON. Before our Naval Committee, Col. Goethals stated this morning that 25,000 men was the minimum that would be required to hold the Panama Canal and protect the locks of the canal against an enemy that had control of the sea. I wonder if that has military backing in his opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired on the paragraph.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask for unanimous consent for sufficient time to answer the gentleman's question.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman's request will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to say that I agree that Col. Goethals is undoubtedly correct; that 25,000 men would be needed in time of war to protect the canal, but only in time of war. But I insist that we could send 25,000 men to Panama three weeks in advance of the time any public enemy could send a force there. There is no military necessity, in my opinion, of stationing them there now in permanent garrison. In these days of rapid transportation troops can be sent from our southern coast to Panama in less than three days.

Mr. HOBSON. I want the gentleman to understand the colonel's statement. The colonel's statement was that it would require behind the line of our fortifications 25,000 men to protect the locks; and he said, furthermore, that he did not expect and could not expect to receive any reenforcement after a war came.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does the gentleman mean that the American Navy would be of no avail to protect our line of communication with the Canal Zone?

Mr. HOBSON. In order to receive reenforcements you must be in control of the sea, and you can not be in control of it under those circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Encampment and maneuvers, Organized Militia: For paying the expenses of the Organized Militia of any State, Territory, or of the District of Columbia which may be authorized by the Secretary of War to participate in such encampments as may be established for the field instruction of the troops of the Regular Army, as provided by sections 15 and 21 of the act of January 21, 1903, entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes," to be immediately available and to remain available until the end of the fiscal year 1915, $350,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to strike out the last word. I desire to trespass on the patience of the House for a moment, only to continue the discussion of the provision before referred to.

It is very difficult to be sure that you are getting accurate figures about these costs, either at home or abroad, as I have often discovered. I certainly have no desire to express anything but thankfulness to the officials who have furnished me with the information that I have received, and I hope that none of them will consider that I am criticizing them in any way. This may be correct. I find by a statement from the War Department that in France the infantry officers receive $9,300,000, that the men receive $2,800,000; that the officers in the cavalry service of France receive $2,600,000, and the men receive $544,000; that in the artillery service the officers receive $3,000,000, and the men receive $1,000,000.

That may be correct; I do not know. If so, they have a very different system of providing for the men from what we have, and certainly they do not pay the men very much.

From the same statement I find that they compute the German Army at 587,000 men and the French Army at 564,000, which is practically the same. They compute subsistence and clothing for the German Army at $45,000,000, and subsistence and clothing for the French Army at $18,000,000, counting subsistence alone in the French Army at $8,000,000, which of course seems very small for an army of 564,000 men. But I find further, upon comparing the figures furnished to me by the War Department concerning the German Army with the figures furnished by the Library of Congress concerning the same army in the same time, that the subsistence and clothing in the German Army cost approximately $45,000,000, according to the statement of the War Department, and $35,000,000, according to the statement of the librarian.

Now, of course, $10,000,000 is not very much, although it happens to be more than they report the entire cost of the subsistence of the French Army to amount to. I suppose it may be very difficult to obtain these figures, but certainly you need to get them from several different quarters before you are sure you are right.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HELM. Have you any statement there showing the cost per enlisted man for the German and French Armies?

Mr. MANN. I do not have it figured out that way at all.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman the figures there, showing the total cost of the French Army and the German Army? If he has, I wish he would put them in.

Mr. MANN. The total cost of the German Army here, in the statement—I do not know how much it includes—is about $200,000,000.

Mr. HELM. How many men?

Mr. MANN. Five hundred and eighty-seven thousand, and the total cost of the French Army, numbering 565,000, is given, approximately, at $165,000,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MURRAY). The gentleman from Wyoming moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the statement made a moment ago by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON], to the effect that Col. Goethals had stated this morning before the committee of which he is a member that it would require 25,000 men properly to protect the Panama Canal if it is to be fortified. I am glad to have such high military authority for an estimate so far in excess of what was claimed to be the excessive estimate I made in the House last year in a speech opposing the fortification of the Panama Canal. At that time it was stated that approximately 12,000 men would be sufficient to protect the canal against an ordinary expeditionary force, though, of course, neither 12,000 nor 25,000 men could protect the canal against a long-continued movement by a great power having command of the sea.

This is a startling statement. Twenty-five thousand men in the Tropics on the canal will cost at least $35,000,000. So, if we are to fortify the Panama Canal we must look forward to increasing this bill by at least $35,000,000, in addition to increases in other bills. For what? In the attempt to do what in case the matter is ever brought to the touch we can not accomplish.

All of this military expenditure is opposed to what we anticipated when we began the building of the canal. In the first years of its construction we carried on the building of the canal without a thought in the mind of anyone other than that it should be a great highway of commerce devoted to the welfare of mankind, to intercommunication, and forever dedicated to peace. We have a treaty proposing that. All the world stands ready to join with us in dedicating this great waterway to peace. Its fortification can serve no useful purpose. It is not in any sense an outer line of defense. If fortified it is the heel of Achilles, where any foreign foe would first strike and smite us.

Only a policy of nonfortification, of the maintenance of neutrality by international agreement, can make the canal useful to us in time of war as well as in time of peace; for it matters not how many men maintain or how many guns we mount, the moment war is declared with any great power the canal is sealed effectually to our Navy, our commerce, and the commerce of the world.

Gentlemen have been talking about the great cost of the Army and have been suggesting that it is too large and unnecessarily expensive. Such gentlemen, and all who desire that our influence shall be an influence for peace and not for war, for development and not for conquest, will within a short time have a chance to cast their votes on the question whether we are going on with the work just recently started, of building fortifications at Panama which will eventually cost us $50,000,000 to $100,000,000 and $30,000,000 to $35,000,000 annually to maintain, or whether we shall dedicate that great waterway to our continual use without cost for defense and to perpetual peace. [Applause.]

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I think it would be just as wise to leave the Panama Canal unfortified and expect to retain possession and control of it as it would be to put a coop of chickens in a negro settlement over night without lock on the coop and expect to find chickens in that coop the next morning. [Applause.]

My object in rising is to answer a statement of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY]. He made the statement that the Army should be housed in the places where it could be most cheaply done. I take issue, in part, with the gentleman, and say, as I have said before, that the purpose of an Army is for fighting, and it is to be effective when needed. In my humble opinion the Army should be quartered where it can be the most effectively used if its use becomes necessary.

We have three forces for defense—the Navy, the Coast Artillery, and the mobile Army. In my humble opinion the mobile Army should be quartered along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and adjacent to the Canadian and Mexican borders, so that, if the occasion ever arises, these three forces can sustain each other in any attack that is made or any effort to land an alien army on our coast. For instance, Atlanta might be selected as a suitable place in which to quarter a large portion of our Army. It is suitable in that it is close to the Atlantic coast and also close to the Gulf of Mexico, and is located in a section of country where supplies of all kinds are to be obtained with reasonable cheapness. It occurs to me that instead of placing the mobile Army in the central portion of the Mississippi Valley it would be better to place it where it can be used effectively in conjunction with the Navy and the Coast Artillery. Further, if the time comes when you want to have maneuvers, when the mobile Army, the Coast Artillery, and the Navy can be maneuvered in concert, the cost of assembling these forces will be minimized. I hope this plan will be adopted. I have tried, to the best of my ability, to show the importance of concentrating the troops in larger numbers in fewer quarters. If it can ever be effected it appears to me that the War Department would do well not to consider altogether the cheapness of the proposition, but the effectiveness of it, and I believe that when this is done those who are familiar with military propositions will take the view I have stated.

The Clerk read as follows:

To meet the expenses incident to holding an International Rifle Shooting Competition at Camp Perry, Ohio, in cooperation with the Perry Victory Centennial Celebration to be held in September, 1913. In connection therewith, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to loan to the management of the tournament such new United States magazine rifles, caliber .30, model 1903, as may be necessary to carry out the regulations of the International Union, and to detail officers and men to conduct the tournament, such detailed officers not to be affected by the Army appropriation act approved August 24, 1912, $25,000: Provided, That the rifles and equipment of the visiting riflemen be admitted under bond and that the ammunition and personal effects of such riflemen be admitted to the United States without the imposition of duty.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. HAY. It is subject to a point of order, of course. Does the gentleman make it?

Mr. COX. I make it.

Mr. HAY. I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order. I will state to the gentleman that we have heretofore ourselves accepted invitations of other countries to these international shooting matches. They have extended to us their courtesy and their entertainment, and I think it would be very poor policy on our part to refuse to do the same thing. It is particularly important to cultivate cordial relations with South American Republics. We went to the Argentine last year; we sent a team there composed partly of the Regular Army and the Marine Corps, and I hope the gentleman, under the circumstances, will not insist on his point of order.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COX. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Of course, this international rifle-shoot competition will not be held unless this appropriation goes in?

Mr. HAY. I do not think it will.

Mr. MANN. There will be no authority for inviting anybody here?

Mr. HAY. I will say that the State Department has already issued invitations.

Mr. MANN. Upon what authority?

Mr. HAY. I do not know; but I understand that the State Department had issued invitations to these countries to come and compete in this match. I do not know that they had any authority to do it.

Mr. MANN. We passed some legislation in reference to a centennial celebration, and it may be included in that; but I do not recollect of any such authority.

Mr. HAY. I do not know upon what authority it was issued, but as a matter of fact we have accepted similar invitations from other countries and have been entertained, our expenses paid while there, and it seems to me that this country is large enough and ought to have enough courtesy to return what we have received from other people.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection as far as I am concerned to holding the international rifle shooting competition. I would like to ask whether they have been held as a side show to the main tent?

Mr. HAY. I do not quite understand what the gentleman means.

Mr. MANN. There is to be celebration of a one hundredth anniversary, and I believe that the United States and Canada and other countries are to fall upon each other's necks and say how pleased they are that we have had 100 years of peace. That is the main tent. Now, this is the side show in connection with it. All I ask is whether we are to have this rifle competition as a side show to some other main celebration.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. HAY. But, Mr. Chairman, there is no question about the paragraph being subject to a point of order if the gentleman from Indiana insists on his point of order. If he does, there is no use in discussing it further.

Mr. COX. I want to get some information.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I think the characterization that the gentleman from Illinois has placed on this proposition is hardly fair. It is not intended as "a side show to the main tent" or anything of the kind. As a matter of fact, probably the finest target range in the United States is located at Camp Perry, Ohio.

Mr. COX. Is that in the gentleman's district?

Mr. WILLIS. No; it is not; but that does not make any difference; it is in the State of Ohio and is a national affair. The fact is that the target range at Camp Perry has been used for a number of years for these meetings. Riflemen come from all over the country to that range, and the fact that there is an appropriation here does not indicate that it is intended to boost the centennial celebration, about which I know very little. This is carrying out the usual policy that has obtained. Anyone interested in the work of the riflemen knows that.

Mr. COX. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the range has been maintained for a great many years?

Mr. WILLIS. I do not know how many years, but I should say 8 or 10 years.

Mr. COX. Has it been maintained by Federal aid or is it a State range?

Mr. WILLIS. I do not know what part the Federal Government has had in it, but I do know that the State of Ohio has expended a vast sum of money on the range. Gentlemen may be familiar with the geography of that country. It is quite flat and an ideal place for a target range, and without doubt the target range at Camp Perry is one of the finest in the world. It seems to me that the gentleman ought not to insist on his point of order, because it would absolutely break up and interfere with our relations with other countries in this matter of target practice, as the chairman of the committee has stated. We have been entertained by these other nations. I know that personally, and it now is our turn to entertain.

Mr. COX. How many times have we been entertained in the last 10 years?

Mr. WILLIS. I do not know how many times, but a number of times. The chairman of the committee said that last year our team went somewhere in South America.

Mr. COX. Can the gentleman tell us anything about that trip to Buenos Aires in South America last year?

Mr. WILLIS. I know nothing about that, except that we had a team that went there and was entertained and made a good record. That has occurred at least a half dozen times and it is our turn now. It seems to me it will be extremely discourteous and undesirable for this Nation to say, now that we have been entertained, that it is our turn but that we will not appropriate anything for a similar purpose.

Mr. COX. Is this the first time that the United States has ever tendered an invitation of this kind to come here?

Mr. WILLIS. I am not able to answer that. Probably some member of the committee can do so.

Mr. HAY. It is the first time.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman, with his permission, that the statement was made to me by those in authority that our people were very hospitably entertained, and an appropriation of twice as much as we now propose was made by some one of the countries—which one I have forgotten—for the purpose of entertaining foreign visitors at the international rifle contest.

Mr. HAY. In France.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The chairman suggests that it was France. I do not know, but twice as much money was appropriated by that Government which did entertain us as we are asking now. Also, the statement was made to me by one of the officers that in Sweden our people were very hospitably entertained and taken care of. There is no doubt that the item must go out if the gentleman makes the point of order. It is only a question of whether as a matter of policy we ought to reciprocate the courtesy that we have received.

Mr. COX. Can the gentleman point out any benefit at all that this Government would now or in the future receive if this item remains in the bill except the mere matter of courtesy?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Well, from acts of courtesy sometimes flow very practical advantages in the way of administering government and maintaining peaceful relations. Our commerce can only go on with satisfaction during periods of peace, and all of those things contribute to the good of the country in that way. You can not trace the effect of this policy as you can some characters of work in which men engage. If you go out to fell a tree, you can see with each blow of the axe something accomplished. On the other hand, spiritual movements, matters of sentiment, and the development of cordial relations between nations may be fostered and developed by a line of courtesy and work that is impossible to trace in that way. I believe, personally, it is a good thing to do, besides the advantages to come from the contest itself.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman explain what is meant by "management of the tournament." What does that mean?

Mr. HAY. The tournament will be managed by the officers of the Regular Army.

Mr. SLAYDEN. We have our own riflemen engaged every year in contests of this nature.

Mr. COX. What additional cost will there be to the Government of the United States if this tournament is held, besides the $25,000 intended to be appropriated?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I think the men and officers who go there and engage in the shoot, I mean the militiamen, get the pay of officers and men in the Army while they are actually in camp and engaged in the contest.

Mr. HAY. I would state to the gentleman that that comes out of a permanent annual appropriation.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But the gentleman is asking how much it was.

Mr. HAY. That would not be affected by this. Whether you made this appropriation or not, they would still go there just the same.

Mr. COX. Would it cost the Government anything to hold this tournament in addition to this $25,000?

Mr. HAY. It would cost the Government the transportation of the officers and men. I do not think there are very many of them.

Mr. COX. How many?

Mr. SLAYDEN. There are a few from the State of Texas.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman is talking about officers and men of the Regular Army. I do not know what the size of a team is.

Mr. COX. Would it be safe to estimate that it would cost the Government an additional $25,000?

Mr. HAY. I think it might; yes.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. I will.

Mr. HELM. I notice the first appropriation in this bill says:

Contingencies in the Army: For all contingencies in the Army not otherwise provided for, and embracing all branches of the military service, including the office of the Chief of Staff, to be expended under the immediate orders of the Secretary of War, $25,000.

What is that $25,000 to be used for unless it is to be used for just such a purpose as this?

Mr. HAY. Well, I will state to the gentleman it is used as follows, if the gentleman would like to have the items of this particular item.

Mr. HELM. I did not catch the gentleman's statement.

Mr. HAY. I will state to the gentleman it is not used for any such purpose as this. It is used for laundering towels, for one dozen typewriter ribbons, for one stamp and three typewriter ribbons, and for various things of that sort. It is not used for any military purpose.

Mr. MANN. They make an annual report.

Mr. HAY. They make an annual report, which I hold in my hand for the last fiscal year.

Mr. HELM. What I was trying to get at is, would not a portion of this fund be available for this purpose?

Mr. HAY. It is for contingencies of the War Department, and they buy, for instance, photographic supplies, transportation of one person from Charleston, W. Va., to Washington, and so forth; law books, and so forth. It is not used for any purpose of this sort, and never has been and could not be.

Mr. HELM. This further question: Is there any fund available in the State Department which can be used for this purpose?

Mr. HAY. Not that I know of.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to insist upon the point of order.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman is going to make the point of order——

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS). The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HAY. I do not make it.

Mr. COX. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

SUBSISTENCE OF THE ARMY.

Purchase of subsistence supplies: For issue, as rations to troops, civil employees when entitled thereto, hospital matrons, nurses, applicants for enlistment while held under observation, general prisoners of war (including Indians held by the Army as prisoners, but for whose subsistence appropriation is not otherwise made), Indians employed with the Army, as guides and scouts, and military convicts at posts; for the subsistence of the masters, officers, crews, and employees of the vessels of the Army transport service; hot coffee for troops traveling when supplied with cooked or travel rations; meals for recruiting parties, and applicants for enlistment while under observation; for sales to officers and enlisted men of the Army: Provided, That the sum of $12,000 is authorized to be expended for supplying meals or furnishing commutation of rations to enlisted men of the Regular Army and the Organized Militia who may be competitors in the national rifle match: And provided further, That no competitor shall be entitled to commutation of rations in excess of $1.50 per day, and when meals are furnished no greater expense than that sum per man per day for the period the contest is in progress shall be incurred. For payments: Of commutation of rations to the cadets at the United States Military Academy in lieu of the regular established ration, at the rate of 30 cents per ration; of the regular allowances of commutation in lieu of rations to enlisted men on furlough, enlisted men, and male and female nurses when stationed at places where rations in kind can not be economically issued, and when traveling on detached duty where it is impracticable to carry rations of any kind, enlisted men selected to contest for places or prizes in departments and Army rifle competitions while traveling to and from places of contest, male and female nurses on leaves of absence, applicants for enlistment, and military convicts while traveling under orders; of commutation of rations in lieu of the regular established ration for members of the Nurse Corps (female) while on duty in hospital, at 40 cents per ration, and for enlisted men, applicants for enlistment while held under observation, and military convicts sick therein, at the rate of 30 cents per ration (except that at the general hospital at Fort Bayard, N. Mex., 50 cents per ration, and at other general hospitals 40 cents per ration are authorized for enlisted patients therein) to be paid to the surgeon in charge; advertising; for providing prizes to be established by the Secretary of War for enlisted men of the Army who graduate from the Army schools for bakers and cooks, the total amount of such prizes at the various schools not to exceed $900 per annum; for other necessary expenses incident to the purchase, testing, care, preservation, issue, sale, and accounting for subsistence supplies for the Army; for extraordinary expense of subsistence of West Point cadets while attending inaugural ceremony, to be immediately available; in all $9,098,517.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this item.

Mr. HAY. To what part of the paragraph?

Mr. FOSTER. To that portion of the paragraph providing for extraordinary expense of subsistence of West Point cadets while attending the inauguration.

Mr. HAY. Well, if the gentleman wants to make that point of order, I have no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. I make the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HAY. I do not care to be heard on it, Mr. Chairman, except to say it has been the custom for many years in an inaugural year to provide for the subsistence of these cadets who take part in the inauguration ceremonies. I will say that the Corps of Cadets at West Point could not come here unless this is included.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe for the necessary inaugural ceremonies to be held in the city of Washington the 4th day of next March that it is necessary to put the expense in this bill for the purpose of bringing cadets from West Point to Washington. We have in the last two or three days had some words from the man who is to be inaugurated on the 4th day of March that he desires some return to Democratic simplicity in the inaugural ceremonies to be held at that time, and I do not believe that it is the desire of Gov. Wilson that his inauguration should be held in such a manner as to cause great expense to the people of this country or an unnecessary military display, and, so far as this provision of the bill is concerned, I do not believe that it is of any value to the American people. I do not believe that it adds anything more to the success of the incoming administration that we should have a great display in the city of Washington at that particular time.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is the gentleman against the ball?

Mr. FOSTER. I am against the ball, and I believe Mr. Wilson very wisely acted in saying he did not desire it. [Applause.] I believe that this aping of royal flunkyism in the city of Washington should stop, and we should go ahead and have a simple inaugural and then go about doing the work that our party believes should be done.

Mr. GILLETT. Is not the ball the only self-supporting feature of the whole inauguration?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I judge that the ball is held for the purpose of giving some people an opportunity of displaying the clothes that they may wear, and another reason is that it helps the city of Washington that desires at this particular time to make what money the citizens can out of the people who come here.

Mr. MANN. Is the ball for the purpose of selling tickets to innocents from abroad?

Mr. FOSTER. To skin those who come here to attend the inauguration, and to that end the people of Washington advertise it very largely, because they make money and it is a profit that they rake in to themselves.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am afraid the gentleman's dancing days are over.

Mr. FOSTER. That is true. But I understand there is not much dancing at an inauguration, but that it is principally an opportunity to show themselves and walk around in a parade—a sort of a "peacock alley" place.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, this has nothing to do with the inaugural ball. It is an entirely different proposition. I want to say to my friend from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] I am as much in favor of simplicity in the inauguration as anybody else, but the gentleman must remember that the inauguration of a President is not only for the President who is inaugurated. Thousands of people come here from all parts of this country for the purpose of seeing the inauguration. It is the only time when they have an opportunity of seeing the cadets from West Point and from the Naval Academy in a parade and to see how they perform, and if any troops—and a large number of them are to be in this parade—it seems to me that it is most proper that the cadets from these two institutions, West Point and Annapolis, should come here, not only that the people of the country may see how they are learning their duties as soldiers and sailors, but to impress upon the cadets themselves the importance of the event in which they are taking part and to in part teach them the duties of patriotism. And I hope my friend from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] will not break all precedents by insisting on this point of order. I think it probably is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Does not this item properly belong in the Military Academy bill if it goes in any bill?

Mr. HAY. I do not think it would be any more in order on the Military Academy bill than on this bill.

Mr. MANN. It probably would not be more in order, but would it not be more beneficial if so enacted? This bill will not become the law until about five minutes before the ceremony begins.

Mr. HAY. I hope the gentleman's prophecy is not correct.

Mr. MANN. And the Military Academy bill will.

Mr. HAY. I do not see anything that will cause this bill to be delayed until such time.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing yet, but there will be before it passes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], I understand, makes a point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to reserve it for a moment.

Mr. CARLIN. I think the gentleman's criticism of the people of Washington is not only unjust but unfair. It is not a fact that the inaugural ceremonies are a matter of profit to the people of this city. On the contrary, it is a great burden and expense in the requirement of extension of hospitality to almost every citizen of the city and the vicinity. They have always been glad to do it, but it never has been a source of profit, but always one of expense.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I might go ahead and say to the gentleman, and I think I could, that living here only close to the city of Washington he has not come up against the hotel prices.

Mr. CARLIN. The hotel prices are a very small feature of the cost.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say that the city of Washington is glad to have the display, and I do not think it is adding anything to the patriotism of the country to have this additional expense at that particular time, and I therefore make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

Mr. HAY. I understand the point of order, Mr. Chairman, goes to these words:

For extraordinary expense of subsistence of West Point cadets while attending inaugural ceremony, to be immediately available?

The CHAIRMAN. That is so understood. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. There is one particular matter I want to call the attention of the chairman to, that is different than last year, and that is the pay for Indians.

Mr. HAY. Does the gentleman mean the words "without pay"?

Mr. FOSTER. The words "without pay" are left out this year.

Mr. HAY. The chief of the Quartermaster Corps informed the committee they had not any Indians employed who were without pay. As a matter of fact, we do pay them.

Mr. FOSTER. So we are not starting on a new way of doing this?

Mr. HAY. No.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. A few minutes ago an inquiry was made in regard to the cost of the ration of the American soldier. The chief of the Quartermaster Corps appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs and presented a statement of items that go to make up the ration of the soldiers of our country. There are some 25 items included in that ration.

The cost per man is 23.8 cents per day, and I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a full statement on the item of cost of the ration for the American soldier.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the statement indicated will be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to my colleague that he also state that while these rations are good and sufficient, the Government in addition furnishes excellent soldier cooks to put them into shape.

Mr. KAHN. I am glad the gentleman from Illinois has made that suggestion. A few years ago the War Department organized a school for cooking. It was found that frequently the rations furnished to the soldiers were spoiled in their preparation. Upon the request of the War Department an item was inserted in the Army appropriation bill to enable the department to establish cookery schools. I believe there are two or three of these schools in existence at present, and the officers of the department have testified that this departure has added materially to the welfare of the soldier.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. How many cooks do they have to a company who are paid outside of the enlisted men?

Mr. HAY. The cooks are enlisted men.

Mr. KAHN. None; they are all enlisted men.

Mr. MANN. So that the Government does not furnish cooks apart from the men who are doing their own cooking?

Mr. KAHN. No; it does not.

Mr. MANN. One might have gotten that impression from the statement of my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE].

Mr. KAHN. Enlisted men detailed to do the cooking are furnished from the cookery schools.

Mr. MANN. The men are not furnished cooks outside of the Army?

Mr. KAHN. No. The cookery schools are recruited from the ranks, and the schools have proved to be of material advantage to the soldier.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to state that the Chief Quartermaster in the hearings stated that the price that that is based on is 24.9 cents per ration.

Mr. KAHN. He also gave to the committee, on page 90 of the hearings, a statement showing just exactly what each ration costs.

Mr. KENDALL. A ration is an allowance of food for one day, is it not?

Mr. KAHN. It is.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has asked unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD the matter indicated by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Regular supplies, Quartermaster Corps: Regular supplies of the Quartermaster Corps, including their care and protection, consisting of stoves and heating apparatus required for heating offices, hospitals, barracks and quarters, and recruiting stations, and United States military prison; also ranges, stoves, coffee roasters, and appliances for cooking and serving food at posts, in the field, and when traveling, and repair and maintenance of such heating and cooking appliances; authorized issues of candles and matches; for furnishing heat and light for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers and enlisted men, for contract surgeons and contract dental surgeons when stationed at and occupying public quarters at military posts, for officers of the National Guard attending service and garrison schools, and for recruits, guards, hospitals, storehouses, offices, the buildings erected at private cost in the operation of the act approved May 31, 1902; for sale to officers, and including also fuel and engine supplies required in the operation of modern batteries at established posts; for post bakeries, including bake ovens and apparatus pertaining thereto, and the repair thereof; for ice machines and their maintenance where required for the health and comfort of the troops and for cold storage; ice for issue to organizations of enlisted men and offices at such places as the Secretary of War may determine, and for preservation of stores; for the construction, operation, and maintenance of laundries at military posts in the United States and its island possessions; for the authorized issues of laundry materials for use of general prisoners confined at military posts without pay or allowances, and for applicants for enlistment while held under observation; authorized issues of soap; for hire of employees; for the necessary furniture, textbooks, paper, and equipment for the post schools and libraries; commercial newspapers, market reports, etc.; for the tableware and mess furniture for kitchens and mess halls, each and all for the enlisted men, including recruits; of forage, salt and vinegar for the horses, mules, oxen, and other draft and riding animals of the Quartermaster Corps at the several posts and stations and with the armies in the field, and for the horses of the several regiments of Cavalry, the batteries of Artillery, and such companies of Infantry and Scouts as may be mounted; for remounts and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; for seeds and implements required for the raising of forage at remount depots, and for labor and expenses incident thereto; for straw for soldiers' bedding, stationery, typewriters and exchange of same, including blank books and blank forms for the Quartermaster Corps, certificates for discharged soldiers, and for printing department orders and reports, and for printing and binding: Provided, That no part of the appropriations for the Quartermaster Corps shall be expended on printing unless the same shall be done at the Government Printing Office, or by contract after due notice and competition, except in such cases as the emergency will not admit of the giving notice of competition, and in cases where it is impracticable to have the necessary printing done by contract the same may be done, with the approval of the Secretary of War, by the purchase of material and hire of the necessary labor for the purpose. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, whenever the ice machines, steam laundries, and electric plants shall not come in competition with private enterprise for sale to the public, and in the opinion of the Secretary of War it becomes necessary to the economical use and administration of such ice machines, steam laundries, and electric plants as have been or may hereafter be established in pursuance of law, surplus ice may be disposed of, laundry work may be done for other branches of the Government, and surplus electric light and power may be sold on such terms and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the funds received from such sales and in payment for such laundry work shall be used to defray the cost of operation of said ice, laundry, and electric plants; and the sales and expenditures herein provided for shall be accounted for in accordance with the methods prescribed by law; and any sums remaining, after such cost of maintenance and operation have been defrayed, shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation from which the cost of operation of such plant is paid, $7,634,553.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WILLIS. I do that in order to get some information from members of the committee about an item that seems to me to be very unusual and peculiar. On page 22, line 25, there is an item that seems peculiar to me. It reads there—of forage, salt and vinegar for the horses, mules, oxen, and other draft and riding animals.

Now, I know something about horses and a little about mules, and a little, too, about oxen; but this is the first time it ever occurred to me that vinegar was a proper article of diet for them. And it can not be claimed that the vinegar referred to in this paragraph is to be used as medicine for the animals, because in line 10, page 26, distinct provision is made in a separate item for "purchase of medicines for horses and mules."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the vinegar, I find, is used for cleaning the troughs from which the horses eat, to keep them sweet and clean. The amount of vinegar required is exceedingly small. I believe that one-tenth of 1 gill per day is used for each animal in the service. The quantity of salt used for each animal per day is about eight-tenths of an ounce.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, on page 21, line 24, I move to strike out the word "contract" at the end of the line and insert the word "active."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 21, line 24, by striking out the word "contract" at the end of the line and inserting in lieu thereof the word "active."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Now, Mr. Chairman, on page 23, beginning on line 12, I move to strike out the words "and for printing and binding."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, lines 12 and 13, strike out the words "and for printing and binding."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I send forward an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 17, after the figures "$7,634,553," insert: "Provided, That no part of this or any other appropriation shall be expended in payment for heat and light for quarters of officers who receive commutation of quarters."

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I just want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the expenses of commutation of quarters is growing very rapidly. In 1906 the amount allowed was $303,000. This bill carries $500,000. I am making no objection to that provision, for it is law and can not be changed in this bill. The objection I have to this proposition, or, rather, to the ruling of the Treasury Department in regard to it, is that without warrant of law we are now paying $285,000 a year to something like 950 Army officers who are detached from troops, and Congress has never authorized that $285,000 payment as an allowance or commutation for heat and light.

The act of 1907 came as near allowing heat and light commutation as you can find in any of these statutes, and that was passed upon by the Auditor of the Tresury Department in these words:

The authorized allowance of quarters for officers and enlisted men is the allowance of quarters actually assigned to them in accordance with law and regulations. The light and heat to be paid for by the United States is strictly limited by law to that which is actually necessary for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers and enlisted men. Where there is no allowance of quarters, as authorized by law and regulations, there can be no payment for heat and light.

I am therefore of the opinion, and so decide, that there can be no legal payment by the United States for the heat and light actually necessary and actually used for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers and enlisted men unless the quarters have been assigned to them as provided by law and regulations, and that there can be no such payment for heat and light for quarters occupied by officers who have been paid or are entitled to be paid commutation of quarters for the same period.

I contend, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that the proper interpretation of the act of 1907 bears out that construction of the Auditor of the Treasury Department. But Mr. Comptroller Mitchell was called upon and, I imagine, importuned by officers who received this tremendous extra allowance for heat and light, he overruled the Auditor of the Treasury Department, and now it is for this House to say whether or not by law we shall allow these Army officers not only commutation for quarters but, in addition, $19 a month extra for heat and light for a captain, and not only allowing a colonel $12 a month for each room up to seven rooms, $84 a month, and in addition to that $36 for heat and light. I say Congress never intended it, and we ought not to do it.

Something was said as to what is the yearly pay of these captains and other officers. I imagine the House would be glad to know it. I have a tabulated statement, which I can make very plain, if Members desire to hear it.

I do not want the officers of the Army underpaid, and I do not think they ought to be overpaid; but if they are to be overpaid it ought to be done by the act of this body, and not by a ruling of the Treasury Department.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WEBB. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is familiar with the fact, I take it, that this appropriation has for years carried this provision:

For furnishing heat and light for the authorized allowance for quarters for officers.

Mr. WEBB. Yes; that is the point I made. The "authorized allowance" is for the allowance to officers who maintain their quarters in Government Army posts, where they have been assigned to duty. For instance, over here at Fort Myer they get their heat and light under the law as long as they stay there, but there is no allowance by law when these officers are detached from their troops and sent to Washington, San Francisco, and other places. There is no authorization by law except for quarters. It is not intended that they shall get heat and light in addition, and that gave rise to this opinion from which I have just read.

Mr. MANN. If that opinion is based on this paragraph, I should say clearly that the auditor was wrong.

Mr. WEBB. If you are going to authorize it, I think you ought to do it directly and not by indirection, and not allow the Comptroller of the Treasury Department to say what ought to be expended, when this Congress is the body that should determine.

Mr. MANN. Quarters means so much room or so much commutation.

Mr. WEBB. That is for quarters.

Mr. MANN. Yes. This provision, which has been carried for years in the appropriation bill, is for furnishing heat and light for the authorized allowance for quarters.

Mr. WEBB. Not for years, because 1907 was the first time this question arose, and it was turned down by the Auditor for the Treasury Department.

Mr. MANN. It has been carried for years.

Mr. WEBB. True; but it always applied to Government quarters where men were attached to their troops, not where they were detailed to duty away from their troops, as they are in Washington and other parts of the United States.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the part of the provision which reads as follows:

For quarters of officers when stationed at and occupying public quarters at military posts.

The point the gentleman from North Carolina, I take it, is trying to make is that, even if there is an authorization of law upon which you can base an appropriation, there is no language in the bill that will justify an expenditure of any part of the appropriation except for fuel and light where the quarters are at a military post.

Mr. WEBB. That is my understanding exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina may have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, a captain can come to Washington and rent one or two rooms and draw commutation of quarters and for heat and light for 4 rooms for the entire year; $219 for a captain for heat and light and $576 for rooms. I think Congress either ought to cut that out or put it into law in plain language.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I will.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman does not have an idea that an officer can get a room at the Army and Navy Club for $12?

Mr. WEBB. I suppose not, but the practice, I understand, is for two officers to occupy one suite of rooms. That is frequently done. There are 192 of them in this city, and they draw commutation for heat and light aggregating $60,000 per year in Washington. I do not think Congress ever intended they should have that.

Mr. TILSON. How many officers do that?

Mr. WEBB. I do not know, but I can give the gentleman many instances of it. You have an officer detailed from Fort Myer, for instance, to San Francisco. He is detailed to take quarters on the Logan. He takes up his quarters, which are provided for him by the Government, with heat and light, splendid quarters, but he has a nominal attachment in San Francisco and draws his commutation for quarters, heat, and light, although he may never have seen a light in a room in San Francisco. When that matter came before the War Department the auditor turned it down. In order to circumvent that ruling, an additional order was made by The Adjutant General to this effect:

In consequence of the adverse decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury on a claim for the allowances of heat and light in the case of an officer detailed as transport quartermaster on a particular transport with station at San Francisco, on the ground that his station and duty were on board the transport, where heat and light were furnished by the United States, it will be necessary hereafter, in ordering officers to similar duty, to detail them in the transport service and to direct them to report to the proper superintendent in that service at the home port, for duty accordingly, without specifying their duty or the vessel on which it is to be performed.

So now, to circumvent that ruling of the comptroller, they are sent to report for duty at San Francisco and immediately ordered on the transport, and draw commutation of quarters and heat and light besides. I submit that in all good conscience that ought not to be allowed to go all the year around, drawing commutation for something he never uses and never had any use for, when such quarters and light and heat are furnished him free on the transport.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I said a moment ago, I do not think an Army officer ought to be underpaid, neither do I think he ought to be overpaid. Let me give you an illustration of what a captain drawing commutation of quarters receives.

After serving 10 years in the Army, he gets $2,880 salary; four rooms, at $12 a month, $576; heat and light commutation, $213; total, $3,669.92. Besides, if he buys a horse the Government gives him $150 a year, and in addition to that, if he has two, they give him $200. In addition he gets forage, $140 a year. If he has two it is $280. His stabling, the Government pays for that—$170 for one horse or $340 for two horses, which he is entitled to.

A captain detailed for duty here in Washington—and I do not know what they have to do—draws $4,120.92, including stabling and forage.

A colonel gets $5,000 a year salary straight. Seven rooms, $12, $1,008; commutation heat and light—which the Government never intended he should have—$315.20; total, $6,323.20. He is paid $140 if he has bought a horse and $280 if he has two. One hundred and seventy dollars it cost for feeding him and $340 for stabling the two horses, a total of $6,843.20 which the Government pays for the services of a colonel.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Certainly.

Mr. HELM. Does the officer have to buy his own bridle and saddle?

Mr. WEBB. I can not tell. I found so much that was furnished free that I became weary in going over what they did get.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I am about through, and I want to say only one or two words more. I would like to have two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, for some reason or other I say this detail business is growing. It is fat pickings. We have 4,704 officers in the United States, and nearly one-fourth of them are on detail duty, where they get commutation of quarters and heat and light. In other words, we pay out on account of this heat and light in the United States for these detail officers about $285,000, and I am informed that it would shock the House to know what tremendous amounts for heat and light officers detached or attachés of the United States in foreign countries, and especially in Madrid, Spain, draw. I am trying now to get that information, and I shall give it to the House a little later if I can.

Mr. HELM. Does the gentleman know that these officers of the Army have their medical attention furnished free?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; they have a medical doctor and a horse doctor.

Mr. HELM. Do they also have a dentist?

Mr. WEBB. I see dental surgeons are provided for. I imagine they do. They also get all of the food they eat, if they want to, at Government prices, and therefore I think the officers are well paid, and that they ought not to have this extra commutation on account of heat and light.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, how do they get this compensation unless it is authorized by law?

Mr. WEBB. If the gentleman had been on the floor when I began, I think he would have understood.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has again expired.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I would state that Congress never intended that this heat and light commutation should be allowed to detached officers who draw commutations for quarters, but the Comptroller of the Treasury overruled the decision of the Auditor of the Treasury and held it was an incident to quarters commutation and therefore they are given both quarters and heat and light commutation.

Mr. HELM. Do these officers of the Army have a place to store their baggage?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; and if an officer moves the Government pays the freight on his goods and baggage. Not only does the Government pay the freight, but it pays for crating his household goods.

Mr. HELM. Do they get storage charges free?

Mr. WEBB. I imagine they would get such a little thing as that free. They get so much else.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the committee will not adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina. I want to point out why these officers on detached service receive this commutation for heat and light. Every officer of the Army when he is stationed at a military post where quarters are furnished him also receives from the Government heat and light. He receives also forage for his horses and medical attention. He receives everything that the Government has an implied contract with him to furnish when he goes into the Army. When the officer is ordered away from the military post, where he is furnished all of these things free of charge, and is ordered to take station in a city where the Government has no quarters for him, it has been the custom to give him a commutation of quarters, about which the gentleman does not complain, as I understand.

Mr. WEBB. I want to say that I do not complain, because it is useless to complain. I could not change that in an appropriation bill by amendment, because such amendment would be subject to a point of order. It might be too high or too low, but I am not taking issue with the chairman on that.

Mr. HAY. That is what I say. It is regarded as just that these officers who are brought here upon orders should receive commutation for heat and light. They do not come here because they want to come, but they are ordered here. They have to come whether they want to come or not. They come here from a post where all of these things are furnished them, and because they are ordered here and have to obey orders is that a reason why there should be taken from them what they are already receiving, and that they should be compelled to pay out of their own pockets for expenses which they must incur by obeying orders? That is the philosophy of this allowance for heat and light and for commutation of quarters.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. To take away from the officer detached from his post that which he has at the post would be to penalize him for performing his duty away from the post.

Mr. HAY. Of course. And I may say to the gentleman from North Carolina that every custom is more or less abused, but I do want to say this: That these Army officers as a class are as clean and honest a set of men as I have ever been brought in contact with. [Applause.]

If some of them have abused this privilege it is no reason why all of them should be punished. Now, if there is a colonel or a captain who is living in Washington in one room and drawing commutation of quarters for four rooms or six rooms, that is no reason why another captain who has to bring his family here and who may be living in five or six rooms should be punished because this other man is abusing the privilege which is given him.

Mr. WEBB. My understanding is that Congress when it authorized $12 per room per month, four rooms to a captain, seven rooms to a colonel, and eight to a brigadier general and so on up, intended that that amount of commutation should be for quarters and heat and light. The gentleman probably knows that you can rent apartments in most any apartment house in this city for $12 a month per room where they furnish the heat and a great many of them the light.

Mr. HAY. No; I do not know any apartment house where you can rent for $12——

Mr. WEBB. I meant per room, with heat and sometimes light furnished.

Mr. HAY. I do not know where you can get rooms in an apartment house for $12.

Mr. WEBB. I can tell the gentleman a great many.

Mr. HAY. Of course there are some places where rooms can be rented for $12 a month, but neither the gentleman nor I would probably care to live there.

Mr. WEBB. Oh, yes; in good apartment houses.

Mr. HAY. Well, I do not know where they are. I say the philosophy and the reason for this allowance of heat and light is based upon the fact that when they are stationed at military posts they receive it and when they are ordered away and detached away from their posts there is no reason why they should be penalized and made to pay what they would not have to pay if they stayed at the military post, and a great majority of them would prefer to do it. When they are ordered to a large city like this on detached service they are put to a great deal of expense which they do not have to incur when stationed at the military post, and there is no justice in my opinion in taking away from them this allowance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. HAY. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAY. And the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina that when this commutation was allowed that that included heat and light I think is erroneous. My recollection is that the officer was allowed $3 for a cord of wood; that is the way this heat proposition first began; he was allowed so much wood, at $3 a cord, to heat his quarters, and from that grew the present arrangement by which his heat is allowed. I agree with the gentleman from North Carolina that this practice of the transport officers being allowed heat and light, when they do not get them, is altogether wrong and ought to be taken away, and I will be very glad to unite with the gentleman in trying to do it, and if he will put an amendment to this bill or offer an amendment to the bill providing that no part of this appropriation shall be paid to that class of officers I shall as cheerfully advocate it and be in favor of it, but I do not think——

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. ANTHONY. Can not the allowance of commutation of quarters of heat and light to that officer detached for transport duty be justified? Now, it occurs to me that that is temporary duty to which that officer is assigned, for instance, as the quartermaster of a transport. He has a family and he is assigned to duty on that transport, and if you compel him to pay for rent and quarters for his wife and family while he is doing special duty for the Government, I think he is entitled to quarters for his family as much as if he stays with his regiment.

Mr. HAY. Well, I had not looked at it in that light.

Mr. ANTHONY. That just occurred to me and I believe that will be found to be the case and you will be imposing a hardship on such an officer.

Mr. HAY. I was thinking about the officer who did not have a family and who was living on the transport.

Mr. WEBB. I call the gentleman's attention that the act of 1907 was, "provided hereafter the heat and light actually necessary for authorized allowance of officers, and so forth."

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman will put those words in his amendment I will agree to it.

Mr. WEBB. That is the law now so far as it affects officers assigned to quarters with their troops.

Mr. HAY. As I understand it the commutation has been upon the number of rooms, heat and light, that is allowed to each officer according to his rank, and I think they have endeavored not to give the officer more than he is entitled to or give him some emolument that he ought not to have, and they have endeavored in a proper and just way to ascertain just what that allowance ought to be and what is actually necessary for them to have in order to have it. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina will not prevail.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee [Mr. HAY]. As I followed the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB], I take it that he is not criticizing so much that this money is expended—while I do not think it meets with his best judgment—but he questions that it is being expended for purposes which Congress did not intend. And I want to say that there is no committee of this House in whose judgment I have greater confidence or that I am willing to follow more readily and willingly, than the Committee on Military Affairs, and that I am not criticizing in any way the work of the committee. But I do want to call their attention to what I believe is language in this bill that is limited and yet expenditures are being made under it that are not authorized by the bill. I would call the gentleman's attention to the bottom of page 13, where he provides for commutation of quarters to commissioned officers. Then, I would call his attention to page 21, after the semicolon on line 22, where it says:

> For furnishing heat and light for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers and enlisted men, for contract surgeons, and contract dental surgeons when stationed at and occupying public quarters at military posts.

I say to the gentleman that if he were a disbursing officer of the Government he would not undertake to expend a dollar for the commutation of fuel and light in the face of the limitation that is placed upon this appropriation. And, as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] stated, the Treasury Department turned down an account for commutation of fuel and light because it was not authorized, and I think that when the Auditor for the War Department made that decision he placed upon the law the interpretation that it not only bears, but that Congress intended, and that the comptroller was wrong in his decision holding otherwise.

I want to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], the chairman of the committee, a question. I want to ask the gentleman from Virginia that, assuming that it is authorized by law that there may be commutation of allowances for fuel and light, if he believes that this language would permit of the expenditure of any part of the appropriation for commutation of fuel and light?

Mr. HAY. No; I do not think so. I understand that it is disbursed under the act of 1907.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There may be an act of 1907 which justifies an appropriation being made, but I do not think there is; but unless we directly authorize the appropriation, no disbursing officer would be safe in expending any part of it. This appropriation says that it is for furnishing heat and light where officers are stationed at and occupy public quarters at military posts; that does not authorize expending any part of it for commutation of fuel and light.

Mr. HAY. I will state to the gentleman that this money which is disbursed to officials for heat and light when they are stationed away from military posts is not disbursed under the language to which he has just called attention.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman point out the language?

Mr. HAY. It is disbursed by virtue of the act of 1907, which has this provision in it:

> Provided, That hereafter the heat and light actually necessary for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers and enlisted men shall be furnished at the expense of the United States under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think that the interpretation of that act is that it only intends to pay the actual cost of the fuel and light at a military post.

Mr. HAY. No; not at all; because this is a permanent law. The words and language to which the gentleman has referred are carried in the bill every year.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly. I would like to ask the gentleman so that he can catch my point. If the gentleman wants to make this appropriation available for the commutation of fuel and light, why does he not say so in the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] has expired.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then I ask him why not include the words "and for commutation of fuel and light"? I am like the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB]; if this is going to be done, let us authorize it.

Mr. HAY. It is already authorized in existing law; and under the act of 1907, as I say, the Chief of the Quartermaster Corps now has the right, out of this appropriation for regular supplies, to furnish the heat and light actually necessary under the authorized allowance of quarters for officers and enlisted men.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman if he believes it is good administration to make appropriations to be expended in accordance with the regulations of the head of a department?

Mr. HAY. I do not think so as a general proposition, but in a matter of this sort it was impossible for Congress to say exactly how it should be fixed.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Well, I will say to the gentleman that Congress did fix it, so far as commutation of quarters were concerned, by designating the number of rooms according to the rank of the officer, and it would be just as easy for Congress to say the same thing in regard to the commutation of fuel and light.

Mr. HAY. I think not, because light, for instance, costs more in one city than it does in another, and fuel costs more in one city than in another, and it is impossible to do it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Is not that true of rent also?

Mr. HAY. That is also true of rent, but the rent is fixed in amount to $12 a room.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The rent is higher in one part of the country than in another.

Mr. HAY. That is true; but we figure it at $12 per room.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. You do not have to go outside of the city of Washington to find that out. Unless the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] will consent to an amendment, I shall vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a little contribution on this subject. I had this matter called to my attention through the activities of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, or Members of Congress in their behalf, seeking to obtain an increase in the pay and commutation for quarters and allowance for heat and light. Last year one of the ablest committees of this House——

Mr. MADDEN. Which one?

Mr. MANN. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce—unanimously reported a certain bill into the House, which has passed recently, I believe, unanimously, in relation to the Public Health Service, and included this language concerning the officers of the Public Health Service:

> And shall receive commutation for necessary fuel and light for the same—
> That is, the room—
> at rates to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The same proposition had been presented before the committee when I was the chairman of it, and I had declined to favor any proposition which provided a commutation for heat and light for officers in the Public Health Service. The bill that was passed last year was passed leaving that out. The officers of the Public Health Service insisted—no; I will not say "insisted," because they were very gentlemanly and courteous about it—they thought, at least, that they were entitled to the same allowances which were made for the Army and Navy and the Revenue-Cutter Service.

As an original proposition I would not be in favor of giving light and heat to Army officers, but the naval officers receive it, and at the present time the revenue-cutter officers receive it. Possibly they would lose it if this amendment went in, because my recollection is that they receive the same allowances as are made to officers of the same importance in the Army and in the Navy. I think they have it so worded in the Revenue-Cutter Service law that the revenue-cutter officers get the benefit of any increases or allowances that are made either to the Army or to the Navy. That is in accordance with a bill that passed this House. Many gentleman voted for it at the time, I did not.

Now, these officers receive this light and heat. It is a part of their compensation. Possibly there was originally no good reason for granting it. They were given light and heat in kind when they were given quarters in kind. If they occupied actual quarters the Government furnished the light and heat. It seemed perfectly reasonable in the first place that if an officer was to be given quarters in a Government building free, and could not obtain those quarters, then he ought to receive some compensation in lieu thereof. Possibly the same would be true with respect to light and heat.

The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] suggested to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] that Congress ought to fix it. My distinguished friend from Virginia replied, "Oh, but light and heat differ in price and cost in different cities." And yet it makes no difference whether they do or not, they all get the same. Light may cost more in San Francisco than it does in Washington, although I doubt it. If there is anything that has practically the same cost, light and heat and rent of rooms vary widely. But we fixed that by act of Congress. Light and heat, which we could easily fix, we do not fix by act of Congress, but leave it to regulation. The regulation is not excessive, probably. The amount is in the neighborhood of $3 a month for all of this service.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 17, after the figures "$7,634,553," insert: "Provided, That no part of this or any other appropriation shall be expended in payment for heat and light for quarters of officers who receive commutation of quarters."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HAY. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 24, noes 16.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 24, line 17, by striking out the figures "$7,634,553" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$7,647,353," and add the following: "Provided, That of the sum herein appropriated $12,800 may be used to provide necessary heating apparatus in any buildings which may be constructed in connection with Fort Bliss, Tex."

Mr. HAY. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, when the paragraph in this bill is reached relating to barracks and quarters, I intend to offer another amendment providing for the construction of additional barracks and quarters at Fort Bliss, Tex., and this amendment providing for heating apparatus for buildings at that place is intended to provide heating apparatus for the buildings which will be provided in that amendment. So the question of constructing additional barracks and quarters at Fort Bliss, Tex., is involved in this amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. May I interrupt the gentleman? I should like to inquire if Fort Bliss is one of the forts that it is proposed to abandon when the consolidation is made, or whether it is proposed to keep it up?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. It is a post that is proposed to be made permanent and kept up.

For the information of the House I send to the Clerk's desk two letters from the War Department bearing upon this question and ask that they be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 6, 1913.

Hon. JAMES HAY,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I return herewith bill H. R. 21281, authorizing the Secretary of War to enlarge Fort Bliss, Tex., into a regimental post, referred to this department for information and remark by your indorsement, and received on the 3d instant.

The accommodations now at Fort Bliss are for a battalion of Infantry, but other troops are stationed there, for the time at least, and a comparatively small sum of money is now being expended in the erection of temporary shelter for a part of these additional troops. In the plans of the War Department, in which considerable progress has been made, although a final conclusion with reference to the whole country has not been reached, it is contemplated that a regiment of Cavalry shall be stationed at Fort Bliss, as being a railroad center and probable future center of population for the region along the Mexican border between San Antonio and the Pacific coast. The plan, therefore, calls for the enlargement of the post to the extent contemplated in the bill, and since the necessary garrison is now without permanent shelter, there is no project of construction in the United States proper which is now more pressing than this one.

The principal present concern of this department, however, as regards the construction of additional accommodations for troops is for the housing of the necessary garrisons for our foreign possessions, including the Panama Canal Zone, which are now without the number of troops which prudent forethought requires. The department has therefore not included an estimate for the enlargement of Fort Bliss among those which it has sent to Congress of the appropriations for the coming fiscal year, but it has been the intention to submit such an estimate after the appropriations shall have been secured, as contemplated, for the foreign possessions.

Very respectfully,
HENRY L. STIMSON,
Secretary of War.

(Supplemental estimates for construction work at Fort Bliss, Tex.)

JANUARY 15, 1913.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

SIR: 1. Herewith is forwarded for transmission to Congress supplemental estimates under appropriations—

Barracks and quarters, in the sum of	$306,180
Regular supplies	25,600
Water and sewers, military posts	20,620
Total	352,400

required by the War Department for the fiscal year 1914 for the construction of the necessary barracks, officers' quarters, and other buildings, including heating, lighting, and water and sewers, required at Fort Bliss, Tex., for the accommodation of one regiment of Cavalry.

2. The submission of these estimates at the present time is made necessary in order to provide for two additional squadrons of Cavalry now in camp and temporary shelter at that post.

3. The conditions existing at Fort Bliss in the matter of quarters and necessary shelter is fully set forth in the accompanying memorandum of the Chief of the Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, which is made a part of this estimate.

4. The estimates were not included in the regular estimates for the fiscal year 1914, for the reason that the establishment of a regimental post at Fort Bliss had not at that time been definitely determined upon by the department.

Respectfully,
H. L. STIMSON,
Secretary of War.

This recommendation is not intended to supplant or modify the stress laid upon the paramount importance of completing the posts in Hawaii and Panama.

H. L. STIMSON.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have a more detailed statement of the estimates by the War Department, which I will insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The statement is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT.
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF THE QUARTERMASTER CORPS,
Washington, January 15, 1913.

1. In view of the fact that it has been decided to station a regiment of Cavalry at Fort Bliss, Tex., the following supplemental estimates are submitted for the construction of the necessary shelter for the troops at that post.

2. The following statement, relative to the status of barracks and quarters and the necessary buildings at Fort Bliss, is submitted in connection therewith:

The following buildings are now at this post:

(A) PERMANENT STRUCTURES.

4 barracks, 78 men each.
6 double noncommissioned officers quarters.
14 single officers' quarters, line.
1 commanding officer's quarters.
1 quartermaster stable, 50 animals.
1 six-set bachelor officers' quarters.
1 fire-apparatus house.
1 guardhouse.
1 powder magazine.
1 hospital.
1 mess hall, 425 men.
1 post exchange and gymnasium.
1 bowling-alley building.
1 power house and heating plant.
1 hospital steward's quarters.
2 blacksmith and wheelwright shops.
1 coal shed.

1 forage shed.
1 hay storehouse.
1 ordnance storehouse.
1 quartermaster storehouse.
1 subsistence storehouse.
1 wagon shed.
1 ice plant.

(B) TEMPORARY STRUCTURES BUILT FROM FUNDS OF FISCAL YEAR 1913.

9 temporary stables	$12,138.20
8 temporary troop barracks	15,200.00
Temporary shelter for wagon masters, teamsters, etc	476.00
Addition to veterinary hospital	4,000.00
Temporary shelter for animals, First Battalion, Eighteenth Infantry	256.48
Bathhouses and closets for Second Squadron, Second Cavalry	1,100.00
Plumbing in same	1,934.00
Walling up houses and kitchens and constructing temporary kitchens and dining rooms, flooring of tents, etc	4,315.00
Sewer in rear of officers' quarters (permanent)	8,300.00
Total	47,719.68

The annual apportionment from fiscal year 1913, for barracks and quarters, was $5,000. The total apportionment was $6,865.

(C) TEMPORARY STRUCTURES BUILT FROM FUNDS OF FISCAL YEAR 1912.

4 Cavalry stables.
1 veterinary hospital.

RECAPITULATION.

12 barracks.
13 Cavalry stables.
15 sets officers' quarters, single.
1 six-officer set.
1 mess hall.
1 quartermaster stable.
And the miscellaneous buildings mentioned above.

All of the permanent structures are in good condition and are satisfactory for their purposes. This office has no information as to what the temporary structures are.

There is an amount of $48,000, "Barracks and quarters," for this post in the 1914 estimate. This will provide 8 sets of officers' quarters, making accommodations for 29 officers.

It will be seen that, with the exception of officers' quarters, a regiment of Cavalry can be cared for at Fort Bliss, but that many of the structures are temporary. In order to provide permanent buildings the following will be necessary, assuming that the mess hall will accommodate the regiment in two shifts:

8 troops barracks, with lavatories	$101,260
1 band barracks, with mess and lavatory	6,640
13 stables	63,500
4 double stable, guard, and shop buildings	14,800
1 guardhouse	20,000
2 hay sheds	9,000
1 ordnance storehouse	3,000
15 single officers' quarters	74,700
4 double noncommissioned officers' quarters	13,280
"Water and sewers" for water and sewer systems	20,620
"Regular supplies" for heating and lighting	25,600

This estimate contemplates the use of wood frames and metal laths and cement plaster by the cement gun process for all except the guardhouse and ordnance storehouse, which will be of concrete, and the hay sheds, which will be of galvanized iron.

In addition to the above buildings, provided the construction work referred to is carried out, it will be necessary to construct at a later date an addition to the hospital at that post. This is not included in the supplemental estimates submitted in view of the fact that such construction work will have to be done from the appropriation "Construction and repair of hospitals," and the addition is not absolutely necessary at the present time.

(Signed) J. B. ALESHIRE,
Chief, Quartermaster Corps.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that these estimates were not sent in for the consideration of the committee before the bill was reported to the House, because I am convinced that from the facts that could have been laid before the committee they would not have hesitated a moment to provide for this work. I do not understand the reason of the War Department, as stated in one of the letters which I have had read to the committee, for withholding these estimates until appropriations have been secured for the construction of barracks and quarters in our foreign possessions. It does seem to me that the proper and fair way to have presented this matter would have been to submit all of the estimates and lay all the facts before the committee, and have had the committee decide which of these projects was of the most pressing necessity.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Is Fort Bliss, Tex., one of the points of concentration, or in the vicinity of one of the points of proposed concentration, of which we have heard so much of late?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I am not posted in regard to that. This post is some six or seven hundred miles from Fort Sam Houston, and the War Department states that it is necessary to maintain a regiment of Cavalry there for an indefinite length of time in the future. I want to state to the gentleman that there is a large body of Cavalry now there which has been there, I believe, for almost two years, patrolling the border. The War Department has decided that it is necessary to keep them there indefinitely.

Fort Bliss is a small post with accommodations for a battalion of Infantry. A large part of the troops stationed there now are living in tents, practically outdoors. I was there a few weeks ago and saw them. During the severe weather that we have had recently, when the thermometer there was 4 below zero, our officers and men down there were living practically outdoors, and that condition will continue to exist unless an appropriation is made and these barracks and quarters are constructed.

Mr. MANN. Are not these troops there temporarily on account of conditions in Mexico?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. They are there on account of conditions in Mexico. The War Department has determined that it will be necessary to keep them there in the future.

Mr. MANN. The War Department can not determine as to the future. Now, is it the gentleman's contention that where the Army is used in field operations for emergency purposes the Government should construct permanent barracks in every place of that kind?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. No, I do not contend that; and I am as far from advocating an appropriation for a post of that kind as any man in the House. This is a post that they have decided to make permanent in the future and keep a full regiment of Cavalry there. I believe myself it is going to be necessary to do it for years to come and maybe always.

Mr. MANN. Suppose Congress should do what the House attempted to do last year, throw the Cavalry on the waste heap; then it could not be kept there. We may determine that we have too many regiments of Cavalry.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I say that as long as we keep these troops down there we ought to give them shelter. I believe in sheltering our Army wherever it is, and especially situated as these troops are, in the most active service of the Government, and has been for some time past and will be for some time in the future. We can not expect officers and men to live out of doors on the border. I submit that this amendment ought to be adopted, and barracks and quarters ought to be provided for.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I sympathize with my friend from Texas in his desire to have this appropriaton made, and if it were only this small increase of appropriation for this item, I do not know that I would object to it or raise a point of order. But other amendments are to follow, as he states himself, which would make the entire amount to be appropriated in this bill $185,000. The Committee on Military Affairs has had no opportunity to investigate the matter. It is brought up here without our having had that opportunity, and under these circumsances I feel compelled to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment proposes to give authority which we have not at present. It does not effect a reduction, and the point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Incidental expenses, Quartermaster Corps: Postage; cost of telegrams on official business received and sent by officers of the Army; extra pay to soldiers employed on extra duty, under the direction of the Quartermaster Corps, in the erection of barracks, quarters, and storehouses, in the construction of roads and other constant labor for periods of not less than 10 days, and as clerks for post quartermasters at military post, and for prison overseers at posts designated by the War Department for the confinement of general prisoners, and for the United States military prison guard; of extra-duty pay at rates to be fixed by the Secretary of War for mess stewards and cooks at recruit depots, who are to be graduates of the schools for bakers and cooks, and instructor cooks at the schools for bakers and cooks; for expenses of expresses to and from frontier posts and armies in the field, of escorts to officers or agents and to trains where military escorts can not be furnished; authorized office furniture; authorized issues of towels; hire of laborers in the Quartermaster Corps, including the care of officers' mounts when the same are furnished by the Government, and the hire of interpreters, spies, or guides for the Army; compensation of clerks and other employees to the officers of the Quartermaster Corps, and clerks, foremen, watchmen, and organist for the United States military prison, and incidental expenses of recruiting; for the apprehension, securing, and delivering of deserters, including escaped military prisoners, and the expenses incident to their pursuit, and no greater sum than $50 for each deserter or escaped military prisoner shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be paid to any civil officer or citizen for such services and expenses; for a donation of $5 to each dishonorably discharged prisoner upon his release from confinement, under court-martial sentence, involving dishonorable discharges; for the following expenditures required for the several regiments of Cavalry, the batteries of Field Artillery, and such companies of Infantry and Scouts as may be mounted, the authorized number of officers' horses and for the trains, to wit: Hire of veterinary surgeons, purchase of medicines for horses and mules, picket ropes, blacksmith's tools and materials, horseshoes and blacksmith's tools for the Cavalry service, and for the shoeing of horses and mules; chests and issue outfits; and such additional expenditures as are necessary and authorized by law in the movements and operations of the Army, and at military posts, and not expressly assigned to any other department, $1,960,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I would like to ask the gentleman as to page 25, line 8, what is the extra-duty pay for mess stewards and cooks and instructor cooks?

Mr. HAY. Really, I can not tell the gentleman. I do not know what the extra-duty pay is that has been fixed. The usual extra-duty pay for enlisted men is sometimes 50 cents and sometimes 35 cents a day. I think the cooks are paid more than that for extra duty.

Mr. MANN. Why is it necessary to insert the authority to the Secretary of War to fix this extra-duty pay?

Mr. HAY. I think that provision of the law was in the former bill under the head of "Subsistence in the Army."

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the gentleman, I believe I can give the information asked for by the gentleman from Illinois as to the extra-duty pay of cooks. On page 185 of the hearings it is given in general order 142, as follows:

General Orders, No. 142.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, October 21, 1911.

Paragraph 333, Army Regulations, is amended to read as follows:

"In case the mess stewards and cooks at recruit depots are graduates of the schools for bakers and cooks, extra-duty pay will be paid them by the Subsistence Department at the following rates, approved by the Secretary of War: To mess stewards, $1 a day, and to cooks, 50 cents a day, and they will receive no further extra compensation."

Mr. MANN. I see that it was carried last year under the head of "Subsistence." Now, may I ask the gentleman, referring to lines 12 and 13, for the payment of escorts to officers or agents: Heretofore that provision has been carried as to the payment of escorts to paymasters and other disbursing officers, where I can readily see there was a reason for having an escort to protect him. What object is there in allowing this authority to the department when some gentleman gets in the Army sometimes as an officer who is very fond of his regimentals, and orders out a lot of people to escort him to some place? Why should we pay for that?

Now, I will not say that it will occur, but we just had demonstrated that under a provision of the law which probably no one contemplated at the time the provision was inserted they allowed commutation of light and heat. If you put this provision in the law allowing for the payment of an escort for any officer of the Army, and that officer has the power to order out an escort to take him to any place, I do not know whether any of us would be able to resist the temptation.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will allow me, the chief of the Quartermaster Corps, when he appeared before the committee, explained that there was no allowance made for this particular item from the last bill. The item was carried in the appropriation, but the department did not set aside any funds for that purpose. This is simply asked for to be carried in case the need should arise for it.

Mr. MANN. What need can arise for the payment of an escort for an officer of the Army who is not in any manner a disbursing officer?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I notice in the last bill that this language was used:

Of escorts to paymasters and other disbursing officers, and to trains where military escorts can not be furnished.

I am willing to amend the language in this bill by making it read:

Of escorts to officers and agents of the Quartermaster Corps.

The pay officers are now in that corps.

Mr. MANN. Very well. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 25, line 13, by inserting after the word "agents" the words "of the Quartermaster Corps."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 25, line 13, after the word "agents," by inserting "of the Quartermaster Corps."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Horses for Cavalry, Artillery, Engineers, etc.: For the purchase of horses of ages, sex, and size as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, for remounts, for officers entitled to public mounts, for the Cavalry, Artillery, Signal Corps, and Engineers, the United States Military Academy, service schools, and staff colleges, and for the Indian scouts, and for such Infantry and members of the Hospital Corps in field campaigns as may be required to be mounted, and the expenses incident thereto, and for the hire of employees: Provided, That the number of horses purchased under this appropriation, added to the number now on hand, shall be limited to the actual needs of the mounted service, including reasonable provisions for remounts, and, unless otherwise ordered by the Secretary of War, no part of this appropriation shall be paid out for horses not purchased by contract after competition duly invited by the Quartermaster Corps and an inspection under the direction and authority of the Secretary of War. When practicable, horses shall be purchased in open market at all military posts or stations, when needed, at a maximum price to be fixed by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of any horses below the standard set by Army Regulations for Cavalry and Artillery horses, except when purchased as remounts or for instruction of cadets at the United States Military Academy, $325,240.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question in regard to the purchase of horses. Two years ago, as I remember it, when the military bill was under consideration, there was a clause inserted that the Army should undertake to raise horses for its use.

Mr. HAY. There never was any such clause as that. The gentleman does not mean to breed horses?

Mr. CULLOP. As I understood it at that time they were to make the experiment. Was that experiment made?

Mr. HAY. No. There never has been any provision in the Army bill for breeding horses by the Government.

Mr. CULLOP. Was there not a provision for buying young horses?

Mr. HAY. Yes. There was a provision some time back for remount stations, where young horses are broken and trained for the use of the Army.

Mr. CULLOP. As I remember it, there was quite a debate in the House on that question at the time the Army appropriation bill was under consideration.

Mr. HAY. Yes; and that has proved to be a very excellent experiment, and a larger proportion of horses are now bought when young and broken at these remount stations, of which there are three in the country, and then furnished to the Army.

Mr. CULLOP. What I want to inquire is, are they kept in reserve while they are breaking them and raising them?

Mr. HAY. They do not raise them. They are kept at the remount stations until broken and made ready for use.

Mr. CULLOP. At what age do they purchase them?

Mr. HAY. From 2 to 3 years old.

Mr. CULLOP. How long after purchase before they can be used by the service?

Mr. HAY. If a horse is 3 years old, he can be used in about a year.

Mr. CULLOP. So that plan has been adopted and is working out well?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the chairman of the committee a question?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the Government buys the young horses at the age of 2 or 3 years and later on sells them to the officers.

Mr. HAY. No; I do not think they do. I think the officer has to buy his own horses.

Mr. WEBB. But he buys them from the remount stations.

Mr. HAY. I think not.

Mr. WEBB. My information is that the Government buys these young horses and keeps them until they are developed into good horses, and then the officer buys them; that the Army regulation provides that he shall pay for them the average price, so that a horse that is worth $240 on the market is sold to the officer for $146.

Mr. HAY. I do not so understand. I understand that these horses from the remount stations are furnished to the Army for the Cavalry and Field Artillery, and they are not sold to the officer or to anybody else. They are Government property used by the Government.

Mr. WEBB. I think the chairman of the committee will find that the Army officers have the privilege of buying these horses which were once ponies.

Mr. HAY. They never were ponies. They were young horses.

Mr. WEBB. Not ponies, but young horses, but they are permitted by the War Department to buy them at the average price, and consequently a horse that would sell for $250 on the market is bought for $146. My idea is that the officer ought to pay the Government the price of the horse and the cost of maintaining him for two or three years, at least.

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman that I will ascertain whether that practice is in vogue, and if that is true I agree with the gentleman that the officer ought to pay as much as anybody else.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee another question with reference to the purchase of horses. Is that done after advertising, or is it done by going out to auction sales.

Mr. HAY. I think horses are purchased in the open market, and an officer is sent out to buy them.

Mr. CULLOP. Advertisements are made and circulated in the locality that at a certain time horses will be purchased there for the use of the Government?

Mr. HAY. Yes; and the officer buys the horses.

Mr. CULLOP. And they are put in competition with other horses owned by persons who have them for sale.

Mr. HAY. Anybody who has a horse to sell can take his horse and have it examined.

Mr. KAHN. The language of the section shows the horses are purchased in the open market.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from North Carolina concluded?

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, the first provision in the beginning of this section is for the purchase of horses of the ages, sex, and size, and so forth, United States Military Academy. Do I understand that is to buy polo ponies for use at the Military Academy?

Mr. HAY. The polo ponies are found in the last part of the section, where it is provided:

That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of any horses below the standard set by Army regulations for Cavalry and Artillery horses, except when purchased as remounts or for instruction of cadets at the United States Military Academy.

Mr. WEBB. The gentleman understands by that language that you can only purchase polo ponies for the Military Academy?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. WEBB. I understand if they purchase them for the Military Academy those polo ponies can be ordered down to Washington to participate in polo games here.

Mr. HAY. Undoubtedly the President or the Secretary of War could order everything at the Military Academy down here if they wanted to—cadets, horses, and all.

Mr. WEBB. Would the chairman object to a provision that the ponies should be——

Mr. HAY. Confined to the Military Academy?

Mr. WEBB. Confined to West Point.

Mr. HAY. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WEBB. I will offer that sort of an amendment. Now, I want to call attention to another thing. I have just read line 15, page 27, where it says that no horses below the standard set by Army regulations shall be purchased, and so forth. Now, there are no Army regulations with respect to the purchase of these horses except in 1901. There have been other regulations, but not on this point, and I will suggest to the chairman that if he wants to bring this down to give force to the law he ought to refer to the regulations of 1901, because those are the last.

Mr. HAY. I would not like to do it now without having time to examine it. I have no objection to the gentleman's amendment in regard to the use of polo ponies at West Point.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 18, page 27, add the following proviso:
"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for polo ponies except for West Point Military Academy, and such ponies shall not be used at any other place."

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I understand the chairman of the committee accepts that?

Mr. HAY. I do; yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. The amendment is not a limitation only. The amendment specifically provides legislation as to the use of polo ponies purchased for West Point. The amendment provides that those ponies shall not be used at any other place. That is legislation and not a limitation.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this is an express limitation on an appropriation which provides if they are used at any other place that no part of this appropriation is to be paid for that use. Now, I understand that if they purchase these polo ponies for West Point they can be ordered down to Washington or any other point in the United States. I understand if proper orders are issued by the War Department men can be detailed, express on the horses paid, provender provided, and so forth.

Now, I want to limit the use of these ponies to West Point. Within the Holman rule this amendment would come, because it does reduce the expense to the Government.

Mr. MANN. This is not an amendment under the Holman rule. This purports to be a limitation on the appropriation.

Mr. WEBB. That is exactly what I thought it was, Mr. Chairman, and I wanted to make it a limitation on the appropriation. My idea is that no part of this appropriation shall be spent for ponies to be used anywhere except at West Point if bought for West Point, and that they shall be used there. That is a limitation on the appropriation.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. HELM. Is this polo a game?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. HELM. And the United States Government is furnishing ponies to these boys?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. HELM. Are they furnishing football outfits to them?

Mr. WEBB. I know they charge you to see the games.

Mr. HELM. Does the United States Government furnish baseball outfits for the baseball team?

Mr. WEBB. That is taken care of, I understand, by the athletic association.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS). The Chair just came in and would like to know who has the floor.

Mr. MANN. I have the floor. I make the point of order. Now, the amendment purports to be a limitation on the appropriation, and is to a certain extent, that provides that no portion of the money shall be expended, as I understand it, for the purchase of polo ponies except for West Point, and then provides that those ponies shall not be used anywhere else. That part of the amendment is not limitation. It is legislation. We have the right to provide that no portion of the money shall be used for a certain purpose, but we have not the right to provide that no portion of the money shall be used except for something which shall be used in a specific manner, because that is legislation.

Mr. WEBB. I think it is a limitation on this appropriation, because it means that this money shall be expended only for polo ponies to be used only at West Point, and if they are used anywhere else this appropriation does not pay for them. It is a limitation on the appropriation, and I think is proper and germane. I want to state to the present occupant of the chair that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs agreed to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask in respect to the law: Is there present authority for the purchase of polo ponies?

Mr. HAY. Well, there is present authority for the purchase of polo ponies for use at the Military Academy at West Point.

The CHAIRMAN. At the Military Academy?

Mr. HAY. Yes, sir; and they are used there and have been used there for some time.

The CHAIRMAN. And there is no authority for using them elsewhere?

Mr. HAY. No. The bill especially provides they shall not be bought at all for use elsewhere.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me see that.

Mr. HAY. I will read the Chair the proviso.

Mr. MANN. It is already in the bill.

Mr. HAY. It says:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of any horses below the standard set by Army regulations for Cavalry and Artillery horses, except when purchased as remounts or for instruction of cadets at the United States Military Academy.

And under that they have been purchasing polo ponies, which they have used at West Point for the instruction of cadets.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not see the exact difference between the effect of the amendment and the bill itself.

Mr. WEBB. The amendment confines the use of the ponies to West Point and prohibits the War Department or any other department from ordering a dozen or half a dozen polo ponies down to Washington to take part in these games.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any authority under the law for them to be ordered elsewhere than at West Point?

Mr. WEBB. Only under the all-embracing power of the War Department, so far as I know. It has been done, I understand. They are ordered here from Georgia, and all parts of the United States, with a detail of men to take charge of them. If we are going to authorize the use of polo ponies being transported from one part of the United States to another for these games, we ought to confine their use to what Congress intends—the training of boys at West Point.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the decision of the comptroller on this particular question of paying the expenses in connection with the polo games. It was held by the comptroller:

The War Department is intrusted with the control of the Army and what in its judgment will promote efficiency.

It was held by the comptroller, overruling the Treasury Department, that the War Department is intrusted with the control of the Army and what in its judgment will promote its efficiency, and therefore the comptroller sustained the expenditure of money that clearly, I think, was contrary to the intention of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The effect of this amendment very clearly would be to reduce the expenditure of the amount covered by the operation of the present law.

Mr. WEBB. That is the point I made, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not very much of a sport [laughter]——

Mr. SHERLEY. But a good deal of a sportsman.

Mr. MANN. I have never played polo, and I dare say most of the gentlemen who are opposed to this provision would be afraid to play polo, as I would be. But I know of no sport and no practice which so well fits a man in the cavalry service of an army to be free from what would be called muscular fear as playing polo, and there is nothing in the world so valuable to a man in the Army or in the Navy in time of battle as to be free from muscular fear.

Nearly every man, as everyone knows, when he first gets under fire is scared for fear he will run away, if he has strength enough in his legs to run at all. The playing of polo gives to these men that practice and precision which make the brain and the muscles work correspondingly with perfect accord, and at the same time frees them from the fear of personal injury which everyone naturally has. You throw a ball or a brickbat at any man in this Chamber, although it may not start to come within 5 feet of him, and he will dodge. What is that? That is muscular fear. A man may know that he will not be struck, and yet he dodges. Let any Member of this House anywhere walk under a low doorway and he will bow his head as he goes under, although if he watches he would know that he could pass under without striking his head. That is muscular fear.

If there be any one thing which will render a man capable in battle, it is to free himself from muscular fear. These men who play polo—I confess I have watched them at times with great interest—learn to lose that fear, because no man can play polo for any length of time with success against others playing it who does not lose the fear of being hurt. A man can not ride his pony just as fast as the pony can run right into another pony without losing the sense of fear.

Playing "shinny" among boys was very much the same thing. No boy who ever played shinny in his day did not profit by it. I would have every boy in the land play shinny. If I had my way I would let the Army officers play polo. The cost is very little; the profit is great, indeed. [Applause.]

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with much interest to this dissertation on "muscular fear" from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. I did not know before just what it was that made a man dodge or duck when he went under a low door. [Laughter.] If there is any way to enable a man to go into battle without dodging I would be glad to support such a method. But for the life of me I can not see and understand what a polo game has to do with going into battle and dodging bullets. I suppose the gentleman from Illinois has seen that game played from time to time. I have no objection to playing it, but my objection is against the Government of the United States transporting a detachment of men from West Point with a certain number of ponies and paying the freight to Washington and having a polo game and charging a dollar a head admission to see the game.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the objection of the gentleman extend to the charging of a dollar or to the playing of the game? [Laughter.]

Mr. WEBB. My objection is to the entire proposition. I do not think the gentleman from Illinois will contend that the Government of the United States ought to send about 12 officers to Washington from Fort Oglethorpe in Georgia with a lot of horses to play a polo game. They can learn lessons against muscular fear in Georgia just as well as they can on the Mall in Washington.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether the gentleman was present when we passed the appropriation for defraying the expenses of rifle contests, but does the gentleman see any more reason for transporting a number of men to Fort Oglethorpe in Georgia for the purpose of engaging in a rifle contest, when those men can shoot just as far and just as straight at Fort Oglethorpe as they can at any other place in the country?

Mr. WEBB. I do not think there is any parallel between the two, because they do not play polo in battle, and they do shoot.

Mr. MANN. They run horses in battle.

Mr. WEBB. But they do not have polo sticks in their hands.

Mr. MANN. They do the same thing with a sword that they do with a polo stick.

Mr. WEBB. Polo is nothing but a game, and they spend an immense amount of money simply to gratify their desire for pleasure. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs thinks this amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. HAY. No; I did not say that. I said I would accept the amendment.

Mr. WEBB. Then I misunderstood the gentleman. I supposed that meant the same thing.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman know how much money has been expended for this purpose.

Mr. WEBB. No.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then why state that it is an immense sum of money?

Mr. WEBB. I can give the gentleman an idea by reading to him the history of one shipment:

The following-named officers and enlisted men were ordered to proceed to Washington, D. C., so as to arrive not later than July 10, 1912, to enable them to participate in a polo tournament, beginning about July 10, 1912:

Capt. George T. Langhorne, Eleventh Cavalry.
First Lieut. Eben Swift, Jr., Eleventh Cavalry.
Second Lieut. Clark P. Chandler, Eleventh Cavalry.
Second Lieut. Richard H. Kimball, Eleventh Cavalry.
Second Lieut. Chester P. Mills, Eleventh Cavalry.
Pvt. Brevard L. Culp, Troop C, Eleventh Cavalry.
Pvt. Attilio Concloni, Troop K, Eleventh Cavalry.
Pvt. William Parker, Troop I, Eleventh Cavalry.
Pvt. Russell Monaghan, Troop K, Eleventh Cavalry.

The authorized horses were ordered to be shipped from this station to Washington, D. C.

Second Lieut. Richard H. Kimball was placed in charge of the enlisted attendants.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is the gentleman reading from the order?

Mr. WEBB. Such an order was issued. Now, what I want to do is to stop the shipping of polo ponies from West Point to Washington with which to play polo. I think the House ought to agree to it. The boys can play polo up there. They can play it at every post, but there is no use in sending them from all parts of the United States to play on the Mall in Washington. [Applause.]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer at the proper place in the bill, limiting the payment of any expenses in connection with polo tournaments, horse-race events, and other similar exhibitions; I had not expected that the matter would be debated at this time upon the amendment which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] has offered, which simply limits the purchase of polo ponies for use at any particular place except the Military Academy at West Point.

This matter was first brought to my attention last summer when there was a polo tournament here in this city. Everyone who was here, I think, will recall that that exhibition continued for a number of days in Potomac Park, and whoever was conducting it was assuming the right to charge $1 at a certain place in the park to anyone who desired to stop in the road and look at the game. I believe one person was arrested because he refused to pay a dollar, and the matter in that way got into the newspapers. It was stated that the charge was to get money to pay the expenses of the tournament, and that put me upon inquiry, and I made some investigation of the matter and found that the expenses, or at least some part of the expenses, were being paid out of the Treasury of the United States. I have not yet been able to ascertain how much was collected by this charge of $1, or how it was expended. I certainly know that it did not go into the Treasury, and was not expended as Government funds ordinarily are.

Mr. Chairman, when one of the deficiency bills was pending in the last session I inquired of gentlemen on the Military Committee, and they stated that there was no appropriation available for the paying of the expenses of polo tournaments, race-track events, and so forth, because they had attempted, as I understood it, and I think very wisely, to limit appropriations so that the money could not be so expended.

Upon looking the matter up I find that back in 1910, when the military appropriation bill was pending in the House, this very question was discussed. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] took part in it, as well as some other gentlemen, and it certainly was expressly understood that no money could be expended for the purchase of polo ponies, polo tournaments, rack-track events, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is hardly correct about that. I took part in that discussion and insisted that they had the right.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have here the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, containing the verbatim report of what transpired at that time. My understanding is, if I can read the English language, that this had reference to the same item as the one now under discussion.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the last proviso for the purpose of getting an explanation.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not believe it is subject to a point of order, but I am glad to give the gentleman the reasons for the committee putting it in. There has been a proposition in the last few years to supply polo ponies for the different camps. The proposition was to cut down the regular standard horses, five to a troop of Cavalry, and have five polo ponies. The committee did not believe that the Congress of the United States should give a sum to buy polo ponies from unless it was a direct appropriation, so that they would know what they were doing.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it the idea of the officers to buy polo ponies at the expense of the Federal Treasury in order that they may have the instrumentalities to play the game?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We were afraid they might get at it, and so we have fixed it so they can not.

Mr. MADDEN. And have they been doing that?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think they bought a few undersized horses.

Then the gentleman from Illinois withdrew his pro forma amendment. On this floor I asked some gentleman on the Military Affairs Committee if there was money being expended for the purpose of paying expenses of the polo tournaments and horse-track events and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], I remember distinctly, said that the understanding was that there was no money being expended for that purpose that was appropriated for in the military appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I then wrote a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury in which I asked specifically to be informed whether or not there was any money being expended for this purpose, and in passing I want to call attention to a circumstance that, notwithstanding my letter was written on July 29, I did not receive a reply until I wrote the second letter, on the 13th of August, and then I did not get any reply until August 23. I am unable to state why such a length of time was required to furnish this information. I suspect that my letter was probably transmitted to the War Department to get some information there as to whether or not the letter should be answered; but that, however, is only a suspicion. I know it took a month to get the answer.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 23, 1912.

Hon. CHARLES H. BURKE, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Your letter of the 13th instant has been received, making reference to your letter of July 29, 1912, in which you request certain information relative to expenses in the War Department in connection with the purchase of polo ponies and moneys expended for polo contests.

In reply you are informed that there are on file in the office of the Auditor for the War Department vouchers paid by disbursing officers of the Army on account of expenses in connection with the attendance of officers, enlisted men, and civilians upon polo tournaments, race-track events, and horse shows, and which were paid from the appropriations "Regular supplies, Quartermaster's Department"; "Incidental expenses, Quartermaster's Department"; "Transportation of the Army and its supplies"; "Barracks and quarters"; "Subsistence of the Army"; and "Mileage to officers."

By direction of the Secretary.

Respectfully,

R. O. BAILEY,
Assistant Secretary.

I say, Mr. Chairman, it is not a question, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, as to the merits of the proposition. I say that Congress has intended and endeavored to so limit the appropriation that the money could not be expended for this purpose, and I maintain that if Congress desires to change its policy it ought to provide specifically for the payment for such exhibition.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Has the gentleman any information to show whether the payment was for any purpose other than the bringing of horses and men here—anything to show a payment in connection with the expenses of the tournament itself?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have not looked the matter up sufficiently to answer the gentleman's question. I do know that money has been expended for transporting horses and men from one part of the country to Washington and other places, and that the horses as a rule are transported by express at considerable expense.

Mr. SHERLEY. That seems to be understood. I was trying to find out, inasmuch as the gentleman went into the matter, whether he had any detailed information as to what the expense was, either the amount or for what purpose.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Of course, the gentleman from Kentucky knows, and he would not favor the expenditure of any sum of money by any department of the Government being collected from the people who might be attracted by the particular show or exhibition and then let them expend the money without any accounting.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course not; and I suspect that nothing of the kind happened. I suspect this is what happened: That whatever money was collected for witnessing the game—and the wisdom of collecting it I am not now discussing—was used simply in the payment of expenses in connection with the tournament, which was a volunteer affair, and the gentleman will find that probably the only money that the Government has expended has been in bringing the men and horses here.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say that I do know that there were park policemen and men in the uniform of United States soldiers who were patrolling the roadway in front of where the game was being played and holding up people and requesting and requiring them to either move on or to pay $1 to remain.

Mr. MADDEN. And not only requesting them to move on, but they arrested a man.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman state that of his own knowledge?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes; and one man was arrested.

Mr. MADDEN. I can testify to the fact that they did insist upon people moving along the driveway, and I saw officers making people move on or pay the price that was to be charged. In one case, I recollect, when I went there myself they said that unless a certain charge was paid people could not witness the polo games from the point of vantage that was designated by the officers as being the best place from which to view it.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from South Dakota if he will not publish in the RECORD the communication that he received from the Treasury Department.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that I referred to it while we were discussing the bill in general debate, and with the consent of the House I shall incorporate in my remarks the letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, on debate of August 23, 1912.

Mr. HAY. That will show what was spent.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And I will say to the gentleman, furthermore, that at the proper point in the bill I will submit an amendment, for the consideration of the committee, which limits the expenditures.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, whether the law authorized the purchase of polo ponies heretofore I will not undertake to argue at this time. Last year the Army appropriation bill contained a provision subject to a point of order which anyone in the House could have made, directing the removal or suspension of regulations for the purchase of horses under size. I think that was after the polo games had been played here. Possibly gentlemen in the House were not here.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I will state that that applied to the case of Maj. Carson, who was quartermaster.

Mr. MANN. It would also apply to the purchase of polo ponies which were under size.

Mr. HAY. That was the only instance where they were bought.

Mr. MANN. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. HAY. That was what was stated, that Maj. Carson at West Point had bought these polo ponies.

Mr. MANN. That is neither here nor there. Mr. Chairman, I had never seen a game of polo until last year. I had read many times about the polo games of the British Army, and long ago had concluded that the playing of polo by the British officers was one of the reasons they had so much courage in time of battle. Last year when the polo tournament was here I went every afternoon, I think, to see the polo games. I found that in a small portion of the road in front of where the polo games were played they had set aside a section for people who might wish to remain there during the afternoon with their carriages or automobiles, and that for the privilege of remaining there they charged $1. I paid that, being in an automobile which I borrowed for part of the time, and I found that so far as seeing the polo games was concerned one could see them just as well from this side of the park area where the polo games were played where there was no charge, where anyone could and many people did go, as from the other side, on a portion of which they made a charge.

Mr. MADDEN. They made a charge on both sides.

Mr. MANN. I say they did not make a charge on both sides.

Mr. MADDEN. To which side does the gentleman refer? To the river side?

Mr. MANN. I said the other side.

Mr. MADDEN. Is that the river side?

Mr. MANN. Everybody knows where the polo game was played.

Mr. MADDEN. I know they charged on the side away from the river.

Mr. MANN. I was at the other side away from the river several afternoons with an automobile, and there was no charge.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman might have had more influence than those who had charges made against them.

Mr. MANN. No one else was being charged there. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I went down there on one occasion and stopped on the side away from the river, and a demand was made for a charge upon that side, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I am sorry the gentleman did not pay it. Every afternoon I went to those polo games after the adjournment of the House. It seemed to me a fascinating sport. I believe it is the best training that ever was given to men on horseback, and I did not pay the charge when I did not desire to go to the particular place. You could see the games just as well without paying the charge as you could by paying the charge. I suppose people were not expected to remain all afternoon, blocking up the roadway, except in a particular place. The officers of the Army were not attending to the matter. It was not an officer of the Army who collected the dollar from me.

Mr. MADDEN. Was it a soldier?

Mr. MANN. It was not a soldier who collected it from me.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. I will for a question.

Mr. COOPER. Who took the money, and who kept the money that was collected down there?

Mr. MANN. I do not know. I was told by a very courteous gentleman the first day I went there, in reference to the place for which they desired to make a charge, that the money was used to pay the expense of handling the tournaments, fixing the ground, and things of that sort. It seems to me perfectly proper, so far as that was concerned. No sightseer was prevented from seeing those grounds. I do not believe any gentleman would object if he was asked to pay a dollar for putting his automobile in a particular place to stay the afternoon to the exclusion of other people who might go when, if he did not desire that particular place, there were plenty of places where he could go where he could see the play.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman if he would be in favor of permitting the Marine Band to make a charge of 25 cents or a dollar for the privilege of standing on the east steps of the Capitol when that band was playing?

Mr. MANN. I would not; the gentleman need not finish the question.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then I would like to ask the gentleman if they went down in Potomac Park and some person stopped in an automobile——

Mr. MANN. I would not. I have questioned even having the Army going to Chicago and holding a military drill there on the lake front, for which the people were charged admission and which all of those people from Chicago have been advocating.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment, paragraph, and amendments thereto, be now closed.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have about five minutes.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have about five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. And I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. HAY. We must get through and gentlemen are talking here to-day on subjects generally that do not pertain to the bill. I must insist on my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto shall cease.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Upon a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 30, noes 24.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count—obviously the point of order is well taken.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Chair count.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sufficiently counted.

Mr. HAY. Other gentlemen have come into the Chamber.

Mr. MANN. Well, I withdraw the point of order as long as the Chair is still counting. We will have a separate vote on it in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. On this amendment the ayes are 30 and the noes are 24.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk began the reading.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I did not understand that debate was closed on the pargaraph—only on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. On the paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. GARNER. Debate has been closed on the paragraph and all amendments thereto and the Clerk had started the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk is now reading another paragraph.

Mr. MONDELL. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Military post exchange: For continuing the construction, equipment, and maintenance of suitable buildings at military posts and stations for the conduct of the post exchange, school, library, reading, lunch, amusement rooms, and gymnasium, including repairs to buildings erected at private cost in the operation of the act approved May 31, 1902, to be expended in the discretion and under the direction of the Secretary of War, $40,000.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, after the "$40,000," in line 6, page 29, the following: "Provided, That not to exceed $13,000 of this sum, to be immediately available, may be used for the payment of existing indebtedness on the chapel building at Fort Sam Houston, Tex., which was incurred subsequent to March 3, 1911, for putting this chapel in condition for temporary use for recreation purposes by enlisted men of the maneuver division then encamped at Fort Sam Houston, Tex."

Mr. FOSTER and Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I will say that when the maneuver camp was ordered at Fort Sam Houston in March, 1911, the building that embraced the chapel, the library, and, I believe, the post exchange work also was not completed.

That chapel had been erected very largely at the expense of the people of San Antonio, who had undertaken to give $25,000 toward its construction and, indeed, had expected to complete it for that sum of money, but the chaplain, who was better known for enthusiasm than for business acumen, developed the design and spent so much money on it that they actually contributed about $40,000 in cash and material. It was not quite completed, and debts of about $5,000 were created. Congress appropriated $5,000 to pay these debts, and that sum did pay all the debts that had been incurred prior to March 4, 1911, except about $50, and in order to get the matter cleared up the people to whom that money was due surrendered that much of their claim, but the money appropriated was only applicable to debts incurred prior to March 4, 1911. Subsequent to that time a further debt was created by order of the governmental authorities to put the building in condition for the enlisted men who use it, and the man who furnished the material and did the work has never been paid a cent. The Government owes him $1,230. There is no increase of appropriation asked. The Secretary of War and the Quartermaster General recommend that the amendment go into the bill.

Mr. MANN. Has the claim been audited, or do they claim they had no authority?

Mr. SLAYDEN. They have no authority.

Mr. MANN. Was it presented for audit?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What did the auditor say about it?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not know whether it was presented here. I only know it has not been paid; that the quartermaster at Fort Sam Houston and the chaplain, who now has charge of the chapel and post exchange, have repeatedly written to me requesting that authority be secured to pay the debt.

Mr. MANN. When a man has a contract for Government work he presents his bill.

Mr. SLAYDEN. This man was authorized and directed to do this work; he did the work, furnished the material, and presented his bill, but payment was not made.

Mr. MANN. And who turned him down?

Mr. SLAYDEN. The military authorities here.

Mr. MANN. The bills go to the auditor for decision.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I know, Mr. Chairman, that they asked for authority to pay it.

Mr. MANN. Well, what I wanted to get at was the reason that they declined to pay it, because there was lack of authority, or some other reason?

Mr. SLAYDEN. For lack of appropriation and authority.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not know why because he does not know who determined against it?

Mr. SLAYDEN. The Quartermaster General. The quartermaster at Fort Sam Houston declined to pay it, and the Quartermaster General here approved his declination to pay it, and the man who furnished the material and did the work has never been given a penny.

Now, here is a report giving all the facts leading up to the incurring of this debt, and gives all the transaction, and the language that the Quartermaster General recommends and which is approved by the Secretary of War has been incorporated in the amendment I offer, namely, that that sum, not more than $1,300, shall be used for the payment of this debt. My recollection is the debt is precisely $1,230.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it wise to include a claim bill in an appropriation bill?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this is properly a claim. This man in San Antonio was called on by military authorities to furnish the material and do the work. I think the gentleman from Connecticut, who was stationed down there during that maneuver camp for awhile, may have some familiarity with the facts.

Mr. MANN. He was called upon by whom? By an Army officer? Who decides the work should not be paid for?

Mr. SLAYDEN. It was decided in the War Department, in the Quartermaster General's office.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me we ought to have information in regard to that. The gentleman does not seem to have it. Here is a man ordered to do some work by contract, and otherwise, by an Army officer. If the Army officer is decided not to have authority to do this, we ought to know why.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I thought for a long time the creditor had been paid. It was called to my attention after Congress adjourned.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has had plenty of time to find out.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It was not again brought to my attention until I received the letter from the chaplain, who has charge of it, saying he had never been paid for the material or the work done, and asked me to have authority inserted in this bill for the payment. I took it up with Gen. Aleshire, who recommended that it be done in this way, but, unfortunately, it was not incorporated in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman that from information I have here, after paying what was due for this work performed by Mr. Dielman, who seems to be the man who performed the work, there was left an indebtedness of $1,231.20, which was done between the dates of March 11 and April 7, 1911, or during the fiscal year 1911.

In accordance with the opinion of the Judge Advocate General of the Army, dated December 19, 1911, the additional $5,000 appropriated by Congress could not be expended for the purpose of paying the indebtedness of $1,231.20 unless the total amount—$5,000—would also defray the necessary expenses for completing the chapel. It seems the source of the trouble was the fact that the work was done in a different fiscal year from the year that the matter was appropriated for.

Mr. MANN. Was not the trouble the fact that Congress provided $5,000, and thereupon, in order to have things look a little bit more beautiful down there, they expended something over $6,000?

Mr. SLAYDEN. No, Mr. Chairman; the gentleman is wrong about that.

Mr. MANN. I am asking the question.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Five thousand dollars was appropriated for the specific purpose of paying a debt previously incurred.

Mr. MANN. The exposition given by the chairman of the committee, which I understand is the official statement, is different.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have not read that document, but Mr. Dielman was paid for work that he did prior to March 4, 1911.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not usually such a soft mark, but in this case I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to congratulate the gentleman on the fact that he is not bursting with generosity even now. It is simply the payment of an honest debt.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] withdrew his point of order, Mr. Chairman. I do not know how many other gentlemen made the point of order, but I want to renew the point of order. This is either a deficiency or a claim, and unless there has been some proof adduced or some hearings had on the matter——

Mr. SLAYDEN. What does the gentleman say about the hearings?

Mr. SISSON. I say, Mr. Chairman, that unless there is some evidence about the propriety of the claim——

Mr. SLAYDEN. If the gentleman will permit me, there is exact evidence of the propriety of this item. It was for material furnished and work done which met with the O. K. of the quartermaster at the time. It was not paid because of the confusion growing out of the fact that there had been debt incurred prior to March 3, and because of this debt created subsequent to that date which should have been paid as incident to the completion of the chapel which was provided for.

Mr. SISSON. That may be true; but what right has an Army officer to incur debt without authority of Congress?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not know what right he has, but I do know that this citizen was requested to do this work, and he did it.

Mr. SISSON. By whom and by what authority was it done?

Mr. SLAYDEN. By military authority. Between fifteen and sixteen thousand troops had been assembled at Fort Sam Houston. They needed this building. It had not been completed.

Mr. SISSON. I am not questioning that, but I want to know whether those people who incurred that obligation were authorized to do it by a law or act of Congress.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Their position, Mr. Chairman, is that they had not authority to pay it out of any appropriation that they had, and we want to give them the authority now to pay it.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, because if this is a claim it ought to go to the Committee on Claims, and if it is a deficiency it ought to go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, in an emergency like this was supposed to be, when the Army of the United States is assembled at a particular place to meet possible foreign danger, and a citizen is called upon to furnish materials and supplies for the Army by the high military authorities having charge of the camp, it is particularly hard to compel that citizen to do without pay for material furnished and the work done for an indefinite period because the general or other officer who directed it had no specific authority to issue the order and to put him in the attitude of pressing a claim against this Government, which the gentleman knows may result either in a denial of payment or in a delay of such a nature as to work a great hardship on the man. This is no claim in the ordinary sense of the word as it is used when you speak of claims made against the Government. This is a bill for work done and material furnished on specific direction of certain military officers, and so recently done that the correctness of it is not disputed by anybody, and these military authorities have urged its payment.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I may state, in reply to that, that there is a method by which all these matters that are unpaid may be properly provided for under the rules of the House, and all deficiencies should be taken care of there.

Mr. HAY. I would like to call the attention of my friend to the fact that under the Army appropriation act of 1911, $10,000 was appropriated for the completion of the chapel building at Fort Sam Houston, Tex. Subsequently in a deficiency act approved July 21, 1911, Congress provided that the amount authorized to be expended for the completion of the chapel, by the act making appropriations for the support of the Army, was made available upon the payment of any existing indebtedness on said building not in excess of $5,000.

It seems that this work, for which this amendment provides, was done out of the $10,000, but the Judge Advocate General of the Army held that an additional $5,000 appropriation by Congress could not be expended for the purpose of paying the indebtedness, because the expenditure was made between March 11 and April 7, 1911. As a matter of fact, the money was provided, but because of the time when it was expended, under a decision of the Judge Advocate General, although it was appropriated, it could not be paid over.

Mr. SISSON. I presume the chairman of the committee will admit that this claim can be paid legally if it is now a deficiency.

Mr. HAY. No; I do not admit that at all.

Mr. SISSON. If it is not a deficiency, then it is a claim.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman from Virginia permit me to make this explanation of the decision? The chapel building has not been completed. It was estimated in February, 1911, that the debts were about $5,000. It was also estimated by the quartermaster general in charge of the department at Fort Sam Houston that it would take about $10,000 to complete the chapel building and pay the debt, $5,000 of that sum to be used in the payment of debts incurred prior to March 4, 1911. This would have been a part of the cost of the completion of the chapel building, but according to estimates submitted by builders and contractors with whom the authorities conferred, it was found that after the payment of the $5,000 debt the remaining $5,000, which would have gone to the payment of this claim, a part of the work of completion and to the completion of the chapel, was inadequate, and therefore they let it lapse and go back into the Treasury.

Mr. SISSON. I understand from the statement that that is true, but if the estimates had been made properly, this party expending this money could not have exceeded the amount appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. SLAYDEN. He did not exceed it.

Mr. SISSON. But it seems that the people of the city who were interested in the proposition very laudably raised——

Mr. SLAYDEN. Let me correct the gentleman. He did not exceed it. He took an order to do certain work, and did it, and his bill was $1,230, a reasonable and proper sum.

Mr. SISSON. Originally this was a proposition which was undertaken not by the Government, but by the people of your city.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes; and they had given $45,000.

Mr. SISSON. I understand that from the gentleman's statement.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman's statement is correct, permit me to say.

Mr. SISSON. I have no doubt of that, absolutely none in the world. I am not questioning it. I am taking it as being absolutely true; but all that the gentleman states about it does not prevent this either being a claim that ought to be proven against the Government or else a deficiency, and for that reason I make the point of order.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is proven to the satisfaction of the War Department.

Mr. SISSON. They have nothing to prove it by.

Mr. HAY. I understood the gentleman to make the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 29, line 6, strike out "$40,000" and in lieu thereof insert the following: "$35,000: Provided, That post commanders, in their discretion, may permit soft drinks, including beers and light native wines containing not to exceed 4 per cent of alcohol, to be sold at the post exchanges during the hours set apart for the recreation of the enlisted men, the sale to be conducted exclusively by civilian employees and under such further rules and regulations as the post commanders may prescribe."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I hope the gentleman will reserve it.

Mr. HAY. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I make the point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made to the amendment.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I should like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri will be recognized on the point of order.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman understands that the gentleman from Georgia made the point of order.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes; I understand that.

Mr. Chairman, in my judgment this amendment is not subject to a point of order, for the reason that it complies strictly with the Holman rule, or is within that rule. The reduction proposed is not a hypocritical one offered merely for the purpose of securing a change of existing law, but it is a real reduction within the Holman rule which says, in effect, that changes of law may be based upon reductions of the amounts of money covered by the bill.

Before the legislation of February 2, 1901, when by an amendment to the Army reorganization bill the privilege of our soldiers to drink a glass of beer at their club, commonly called the canteen, was taken away from them, there were no appropriations for the canteens at Army posts. I believe by the adoption of this amendment not only $5,000 can be saved to the Government, but the whole $40,000 which Congress is asked to appropriate for that purpose can be saved. In accordance with all arguments we have heard here during the last three or four days, especially on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] on the liquor advertisements, which arguments, as gentlemen will remember, were sustained by the Chair, this amendment is now in order. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it being an honest reduction, the point of order should be overruled by the Chair.

It was a sad day, Mr. Chairman, for the American Army when by the legislation enacted in February——

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Missouri must confine his remarks to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken, and the gentleman must confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will not do that.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman from Missouri is not speaking to the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Very well, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty-seven Members present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having under consideration the Army appropriation bill had found itself without a quorum; that he had directed the roll to be called and 208 Members had answered to their names, and he presented herewith a list of the absentees.

The SPEAKER. A quorum being present, the committee will resume its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized on the point of order.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will indulge me still further, I will confine myself to the point of order, and should like to read from an argument made by the present occupant of the chair on the Murdock amendment, as follows:

It has been said in argument, in connection with the pending parliamentary proposition, that the Holman rule must be construed strictly. I deny that absolutely. It has been ruled that this rule is one of beneficence, and on that account should be liberally construed, in order that its essential purpose may be carried out and retrenchments effected.

Then the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] went on to argue that the Murdock amendment was in order. This seems to be a case on all fours with the Murdock amendment. In that case it was a plain change of existing law, only with this difference, that in the Murdock amendment the reduction of expenditures was merely guesswork, while with regard to my amendment the reduction of expenditures is a necessary incident and a sequence to the legislation. As will be well remembered by all those present, the Murdock amendment was ruled in order by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], the then Chairman of the Committee, and ruled out of order by the Speaker of the House only on a technicality, not because it changed existing law but for the reason that two amendments were proposed at one and the same time. That technicality has been avoided in my case, and I think my amendment is strictly in order from that point of view. I submit that the point of order does not lie.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri proposes to change existing law, which law is contained in the Army organization act of February 2, 1901, and which law prohibits the use of any alcoholic beverage or beer in any Army post or reservation. In order to change that law he proposes to cut down the appropriation to $35,000, and he hangs his proposed change of law upon that. Of course his motion to cut down the appropriation $5,000 is divisible from his motion to change the existing law, and his motion to cut down the appropriation is in order without regard to the Holman rule. The Holman rule never was intended to be used for the purpose of changing existing law by offering an amendment to cut down an appropriation and hanging onto it something which in itself does not cut down the appropriation. The gentleman says that if his amendment is adopted this change of law will save something. He has not indicated how it would save, and nobody can see how it would save. I know I am very well assured it would save nothing. Therefore, in accordance with the ruling which was made by the Chair a few days ago when two other amendments of similar character were offered, I have no doubt that the Chair will rule that this amendment is out of order.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes; for a question.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I think it could well be shown, if we have the time to do so, that this legislation, besides having some other purposes in view, is merely intended to save expenditures, for this reason: That before the legislation of 1901——

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I yielded to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I thought the gentleman had finished his remarks. I would like to ask the floor in my own behalf when he is through.

Mr. HAY. I am through now.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be indulged for a moment longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I stated that before the legislation of 1901, to which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] has referred, there was no appropriation for Army post exchanges at all, as I remember, and appropriations became necessary only because the canteen was abolished. If you adopt my amendment it will save money to the Government. It is offered for the purpose of going back to the old system, which did not require an appropriation from Congress for the maintenance of these post exchanges, and consequently the reduction proposed in my amendment and the legislation attached to it belong together. They are not divisible. I would not think of proposing one and not proposing the other. It is offered in good faith, for the purpose of retrenchment and of saving expense to the Government, outside of the other purposes suggested in the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The gentleman from Missouri quoted an extract from an argument made by the present occupant of the chair a few days since, in connection with the Murdock amendment. It is the opinion of the present occupant of the chair as stated in that argument that the Holman rule should be construed liberally, but if the gentleman will go a little further into the argument that I made on that occasion, he will find that in supporting the Murdock amendment the gentleman from Virginia submitted this contention to the Chair, that the legislation attached to the reduction in the appropriation, effected the reduction. The gentleman from Missouri will also find in two or three later rulings made by the present occupant of the chair that he maintained the proposition that you can not make a reduction in a total, and convert that reduction into a peg on which to hang unrelated legislation. The legislation must efficiently cause a reduction in order to be in order. Now take this amendment upon which a ruling is sought. First there is a reduction in the total, and then follows legislation to the following effect:

Provided, That post commanders, in their discretion, may permit soft drinks, including beers and light native wines containing not to exceed 4 per cent alcohol, to be sold at the post exchanges during hours set apart for the recreation of the enlisted men, the sale to be conducted exclusively by civilian employees and under such further rules and regulations as the post commanders may prescribe.

It is difficult for the Chair to see how this legislation will necessarily effect any reduction in the total appropriation. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] stated that he offered the amendment in all sincerity. The Chair does not question this for a moment, but the moral or beneficent effect of the legislation proposed, whatever it may be, is not a question for the Chair to decide. On the point of order the Chair is concerned to determine the economic operation of the legislation proposed. Looking to this legislation, the Chair is not satisfied that it will effect a reduction of expenditures. On this ruling the Chair is in strict conformity with the principles which he has undertaken to lay down in several expositions of the Holman rule. Following these rulings the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 29, line 6, strike out "$40,000" and in lieu thereof insert the following: "$39,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall cause an investigation to be made into the effect of the prohibition of the sale of beers and light wines at the post exchanges, such investigation to be conducted by a commission consisting of the Chief of Staff, the chief of the Quartermaster Corps, and the Surgeon General of the United States Army; the commission to report its findings and recomendations to the Secretary of War and by him transmitted to Congress on or before December 10, 1913."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold his point of order for a few moments?

Mr. HAY. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is renewed.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to discuss the point of order beyond saying that I believe this to be in order. This does not change existing law. It merely provides for an investigation and reduces expenditures, and it will be for the purpose of causing a further retrenchment in the expenses for post exchanges, and for these reasons I think the amendment is in order.

Mr. HAY. It does not change existing law, but creates a commission and makes law.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment furnishes authority not now afforded by law and does not reduce expenditures. This being so, and in conformity with principles already announced, the point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Transportation of the Army and its supplies: For transportation of the Army and its supplies, including transportation of the troops when moving either by land or water and of their baggage, including the cost of packing and crating; for transportation of recruits and recruiting parties; of applicants for enlistment between recruiting stations and recruiting depots; for travel allowance to enlisted men on discharge; of persons on their discharge from the United States military prison to their homes (or elsewhere, as they may elect), provided the cost in each case shall not be greater than to the place of last enlistment; of supplies furnished to the militia for the permanent equipment thereof; of the necessary agents and other employees; of clothing and equipage and other quartermaster stores from Army depots or places of purchase or delivery to the several posts and Army depots and from those depots to the troops in the field; of horse equipment; of ordnance and ordnance stores, and small arms from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and Army depots; for payment of wharfage tolls and ferriage; for transportation of funds of the Army; for the hire of employees; for the payment of Army transportation lawfully due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds (to be adjusted in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court in cases decided under such land-grant acts), but in no case shall more than 50 per cent of full amount of service be paid: Provided, That such compensation shall be computed upon the basis of the tariff or lower special rates for like transportation performed for the public at large and shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service: Provided further, That in expending the money appropriated by this act a railroad company which has not received aid in bonds of the United States, and which obtained a grant of public land to aid in the construction of its railroad on condition that such railroad should be a post route and military road, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, naval, and other Government services, and also subject to such regulations as Congress may impose restricting the charge for such Government transportation, having claims against the United States for transportation of troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property over such aided railroads, shall be paid out of the moneys appropriated by the foregoing provision only on the basis of such rate for the transportation of such troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property as the Secretary of War shall deem just and reasonable under the foregoing provision, such rate not to exceed 50 per cent of the compensation for such Government transportation as shall at that time be charged to and paid by private parties to any such company for like and similar transportation; and the amount so fixed to be paid shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service; for the purchase and hire of draft and pack animals in such numbers as are actually required for the service, including reasonable provision for replacing unserviceable animals; for the purchase, hire, operation, maintenance, and repair of such harness, wagons, carts, drays, and other vehicles as are required for the transportation of troops and supplies, and for official, military, and garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several depots; for the hire of teamsters and other employees; for the purchase and repair of ships, boats, and other vessels required for the transportation of troops and supplies and for official, military, and garrison purposes; for expenses of sailing public transports and other vessels on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, $10,555,555.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, lines 20 and 21, after the word "vessels," strike out the words "on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is subject to a point of order, but I am willing for the Chair to pass on that now.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman makes the point of order on that?

Mr. HAY. Of course I make the point of order on that, otherwise the appropriation would not mean anything.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order?

Mr. HAY. I will reserve the point of order; yes.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I introduced this amendment simply to call attention to what seems to me to be a peculiar statement of the law. I assume this is a provision in former appropriation bills, though I did not get an opportunity to look it up Here it says:

For expenses of sailing public transports and other vessels on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans.

Now, then, suppose it is desirable to sail transports on the Panama Canal. That is not a river; it is not the Gulf of Mexico; it is not the Atlantic Ocean or the Pacific Ocean. Or, say, the Suez Canal——

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Or the Indian Ocean or the Mediterranean Sea.

Mr. WILLIS. Or the Indian Ocean or the Mediterranean Sea or the Red Sea.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Or the Black Sea.

Mr. WILLIS. Or the Black Sea, or any of those suggested here. None of those comes under the head stated in this paragraph. Now, as a matter of fact, if this should be left in the appropriation bill as it stands here, might not the auditing officer, the Comptroller of the Treasury, or whoever it is, have the question raised there and lead to embarrassment and confusion?

Because obviously sailing a vessel on the Caribbean Sea or on the Indian Ocean, or any of these places, does not come within the provisions of the law, and what is the use of enumerating these navigable waters as the only places for sailing public transports and other vessels? The enumeration of certain navigable waters excludes others by implication. If this amendment is adopted it simply strikes out the language which is in the bill and which I have read.

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman this language has been in the bill, according to my recollection, ever since we have acquired the Philippine Islands and inaugurated the system of transportation. The transports ply on the Atlantic Ocean, on the Gulf of Mexico, and on the Pacific Ocean, and on various rivers in the Philippine Islands and elsewhere. I do not know of any other place where they could very well go.

Mr. WILLIS. What does the gentleman say now as to my suggestion of the Indian Ocean?

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman that as this language has been in the law, and has been the law for a long time, I think, unless the gentleman has a very good reason for it, we had better let it remain as it is. No harm has come from it.

Mr. WILLIS. That is the very point—harm may come from it. It is clearly within the provisions of the law.

Mr. HAY. I do not think so. I do not think any possible injury could come to the Government.

Mr. WILLIS. If that point should be made by the auditing officer, does the gentleman think the expenses of sailing a transport through the Mediterranean Sea or the Suez Canal or the Red Sea or the Indian Ocean would be covered by this language?

Mr. HAY. They do go through the Indian Ocean and through the Suez Canal.

Mr. WILLIS. But does the gentleman think the language here covers that, if the point would ever be raised?

Mr. HAY. They sail over the Indian Ocean to get to the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. MANN. It is a part of the Indian Ocean, or it was when I went to school.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman from Illinois studied a very ancient geography. What does he say about the Panama Canal? That is not a part of the Atlantic Ocean.

Mr. MANN. I could give the gentleman a very much better instance than he has cited, and that is the Caribbean Sea.

Mr. WILLIS. I cited that.

Mr. MANN. What is the gentleman seeking to accomplish? It is always fair to be perfectly frank.

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly. It occurred to me that the point might be raised by the comptroller. I have no interest in the form of language at all, aside from that.

Mr. HAY. I will ask the gentleman not to insist on the amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. All right. I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Page 31, after line 21, add the following:

"Provided, That no part of this or any other appropriation carried herein shall be used for the payment of expenses of holding, going to, attendance on, and returning from, polo tournaments, horse shows, Olympic games, or race track, by officers, enlisted men, horses, or equipments belonging to the United States, except at the United States Military Academy.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the matter was quite fully discussed when the amendment was offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] against the purchase of polo ponies. I do not wish to take up the time of this committee in discussing the matter unless the chairman of the committee resists the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. HAY. I understood the other amendment was adopted.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The other amendment was adopted, and I want to say, because that was mentioned——

Mr. HAY. I do not believe it is subject to a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman accept the amendment? I do not care to take up the time of the committee at this hour of the evening.

Mr. MANN. May I hear the amendment reported?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It is a limitation on the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. I ask to have the amendment reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that my friend from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] has not offered an amendment to provide that Army officers shall be kept on feather beds all the time and not be permitted to go out of their feather-bed buildings for fear they might be hurt. [Laughter.] I may be mistaken. I never have been in favor of a large Army, but I have always been in favor of making efficient the Army that we have.

Here is a proposition to prevent the drilling of Cavalry officers in the way they need to be drilled for service in time of battle. You might as well say they shall not have saber exercises. Why not provide that cavalrymen shall not ride horses? Why does the gentleman stop there? Why not provide that these Cavalry officers shall superintend their Cavalry regiments on foot, for fear they may be hurt?

Mr. ADAIR. Why not limit them to Army hobbyhorses?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman need not cite the Army hobbyhorses. They have them now. That is what they ride now. Because some man over here was asked, or disrespectfully asked, to contribute a dollar and was too mean to give it up, we have had an excitement about polo games ever since.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to debate the amendment, as it was discussed very fully when the former amendment was adopted.

The basis of my action in offering this amendment, as I fully explained when the other amendment was discussed, is that I found upon inquiry of the gentlemen composing the Committee on Military Affairs of this House—a number of the members of that committee, including the chairman—that they had undertaken to prohibit expenditures from the appropriations that were being made to pay the expenses of polo tournaments and other similar exhibitions, and supposed they had. It was only after I ascertained by a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury that has been read here, and which was incorporated in my remarks earlier in the afternoon, that I discovered that they were expending money to pay the expenses of such exhibitions out of these funds.

I have here a newspaper clipping from the Washington Herald of November 16, 1912, that I happened to read about the time I arrived in Washington at the beginning of this session, and I will send to the Clerk's desk to have it read. I may say that I believe that that is an item involving expenses which are paid from the appropriations made in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPART FOR HORSE SHOW—FORT MYER OFFICERS LEAVE FOR NEW YORK WITH THEIR MOUNTS.

Capt. L. R. Lindsey, with his famous horse Experiment, and Lieut. W. H. Shepherd, with Marshal Ney, left Fort Myer yesterday over the Pennsylvania Railroad for New York, where they will take part in the annual horse show which opens there Saturday.

Trumpeter James T. Purcell, of Battery D, and Pvt. Johnson, of Troop A, went along to look out for the horses. The Fort Myer men expect to win high honors with their mounts.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the only question is whether or not we are going to authorize expenditures for such purposes; and if we are I say we ought to say so in so many words. As I have already stated from the best information I could get from the men who are well informed on the subject it appears that we had limited the appropriation so that such expenses could not be paid from them, and since the department had found a way by which they can pay such expenses from these appropriations I am asking to put on the appropriation bill a limitation which will prohibit it in the future.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman know that the United States Government is also putting horses in races on different race tracks?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I just sent to the desk and had read a newspaper clipping concerning a horse show.

Mr. FOSTER. I mean regular races.

Mr. MADDEN. Are there any pools being made on them?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; that is a fact. Pools are being made on them.

Mr. KAHN. May I ask where United States horses are being entered in races?

Mr. FOSTER. In New York they were entered last year.

Mr. COX. Did they win any money?

Mr. FOSTER. I understand they did.

Mr. COX. Who kept it?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know.

Mr. MANN. Would it be improper to enter them at a county fair? Would it be improper?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know.

Mr. MANN. This would prohibit it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think it is proper to place a limitation upon the expenditure of money carried in this bill. There is not any reason on earth why the United States Treasury should be called upon to pay for the amusements of those who are occupying positions as officers of the Army. Polo games and horse shows and all that should be left to people who are willing to pay their own money for that sort of amusement.

Why should an Army officer be privileged to draw money out of the Federal Treasury for doing something that every other citizen of the United States is called upon to pay for himself? There is no necessity for taking the cavalrymen off the horses in order to prevent men who are in the Army from playing polo at the expense of the Government Treasury.

Polo has nothing whatever to do with soldiery. Cavalry service is quite another thing. It has been said that men are better qualified for service in the Army because of their activities in polo games. I doubt that. When they are in these polo games their minds are taken away from the work for which they are employed. They run from one end of this country to the other at the expense of the Government, and in addition to having all their expenses paid they insult the people who pay taxes, because forsooth those people drive along a public driveway, built at the expense of the public, and want to stop to look at the game, they compel them to pay a dollar, or whatever the price is, if they wish to stand at a particular place. It is no evidence of niggardliness because a man refuses to pay a charge which there is no authority to levy. I take it that if a man wants to go to a game of baseball or football or polo, performed by private individuals, he is willing to pay; but if the Government of the United States builds parks, surrounds the parks with beautiful shrubbery and trees, builds beautiful boulevards for the purpose of giving the people an opportunity to drive for pleasure, those parks and boulevards are not to be controlled by soldiers who are assigned to duty to prevent the citizens from enjoying the privileges of the boulevards. It is an outrage. It is an insult that the Army should be permitted, through any officer or private, to say to any citizen "You shall not stay on a public street in a public park, unless you pay whatever charge we see fit to impose." They charged a fee on both sides of the park, on the river side and on the side across from the river. They ought not to be permitted to charge on either side, and I hope this amendment will prevail, and that in the future no dollar of the public money will be expended for the purpose of transporting officers and polo ponies from one section of the Nation to another for the edification of the officers of the Army. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the gentleman who introduced this amendment has mistaken his remedy. What he ought to do is to offer an amendment providing that no charge of $1 or any other amount shall be levied upon any citizen for the privilege of looking upon a game of polo which is being conducted by officers or soldiers of the Army.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. I understand the gentleman is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. KAHN. I am.

Mr. CULLOP. Is it not an abuse of the appropriation to use any part of it for the transporting of horses or men to engage in a horse race at Baltimore?

Mr. KAHN. I never heard until this afternoon that money was being diverted for that purpose. I personally do not believe that it can be done under the law.

Mr. CULLOP. I understand from the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] that it was done last year.

Mr. KAHN. I understood so from the gentleman; but it is the first time I ever heard of it.

Mr. CULLOP. It ought not to require an amendment to purge that abuse, because no part of the appropriation was ever made for any such purpose as that, even if it has been diverted to that use.

Mr. KAHN. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman from Indiana on that. I believe that that money can not lawfully be diverted for that purpose.

Mr. CULLOP. And there is no authority of law for the use of the appropriation for such transportation.

Mr. KAHN. I know of no authority of law. I know that instruction in riding is given in the Army. Many of our constituents who come to Washington have heard of the wonderful riding exhibitions by the soldiers at Fort Myer on Fridays. It is a thrilling drill, and we are frequently importuned to secure tickets for our visiting constituents. They enthuse over the skill of the soldiers in horsemanship. The gentleman who offered this amendment would probably like to stop that riding drill at Fort Myer. To my mind, it aids enlistments. It creates an interest in the Army.

Then, too, the matter of procuring suitable horses for the service has been a serious question with Army officers. They have had a great deal of difficulty in getting proper mounts. In order to obviate that we established a remount station some two or three years ago. It is a good thing for those who raise horses throughout this country to see Army officers ride their animals; besides its educational effect there is no doubt but that the farmer or the citizen who witnesses a demonstration of that sort is frequently led to try to produce the kind of horses that are required by the Army. It is in the interest of the service that these men be permitted to perform at these various fairs.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. How many farmers attend the horse show at Madison Square Garden, New York?

Mr. KAHN. A great many farmers, I have no doubt. They are naturally interested in good stock.

Mr. MADDEN. How many farmers attend the polo game on the grounds down here?

Mr. KAHN. I dare say many farmers from Virginia and Maryland, who reside in the vicinity of Washington, come here and pay the dollar for the privilege of looking at the game.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, this discussion has taken a wide range. I want to direct the attention of Members to the part of the bill that has provoked it all and that suggested the amendment:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of any horses below the standard set by Army Regulations for Cavalry and Artillery horses, except when purchased as remounts or for instruction of cadets at the United States Military Academy.

Of course, this purchase of undersized horses—polo ponies—is made to train them in horsemanship.

Mr. KAHN. But the amendment that is proposed is entirely different from that.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I know of no authority in law, and I have been surprised here at hearing it stated that certain things have been done—I know of no authority in law for ordering officers and enlisted men, at the expense of the mileage appropriation, to leave Washington to engage in games. Whether it is proper for them to do that I am not undertaking to discuss.

Mr. KAHN. I know of no authority.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I was surprised to know that it had been done.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that in Chicago for several years they have held—I do not know what they call it—some kind of a show on the Lake front, at which they have had a portion of the Cavalry and a part of the Infantry of the Army. They charged an admission for reserved seats. I understood some years ago, although I never made application in reference to the matter, that they claimed to have authority to transport these troops—I suppose from Fort Sheridan, which is only a few miles from Chicago. Perhaps they do not pay the expenses of transportation, but whether they do or not would make no difference.

Mr. SLAYDEN. A mere order by an officer who had no authority of law would be sufficient for them.

Mr. MANN. I am not saying there is authority; I do not know who pays the expense. No one else has a right to contribute to the Government for the transportation of troops.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The officers and enlisted men might get leave for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. They do not get leave; they send the men there, and send men who do not want to go.

Mr. KAHN. They are probably detailed.

Mr. MANN. They are detailed by order of the Government, and I think it has been a good thing for the Army and probably has been a good thing for the hundreds and thousands of people who have seen them.

Mr. HAY. That is a different proposition from the one proposed by the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MANN. In what respect? They are ordered to a tournament where there is an admission charged.

Mr. HAY. The proposition of the gentleman from South Dakota is against the payment of the expenses for transportation of polo ponies. The proposition the gentleman is talking about, the exhibition on the shore front of the lake at Chicago, is where troops are ordered by competent authority to go to a certain place.

Mr. MANN. I did not understand the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota was confined to the transportation of polo ponies.

Mr. HAY. And horses taking part in races, Olympic events, and so forth. I do not know exactly what the gentleman means by "Olympic events."

Mr. MANN. That is what I was talking about; wherever there is Cavalry riding there is racing, and where they have drills they are Olympic events.

Mr. HAY. I have known cases where troops of Cavalry participated, where they have been sent to different fairs, and I have requested it to be done in my district, and it has been done.

Mr. MANN. I think it would be barred by this amendment.

Mr. HAY. If it was, I should be opposed to the amendment, because I believe it is a matter of education of the people to see the soldiers and see them ride.

Mr. KAHN. I think it is a matter of education.

Mr. HAY. It aids enlistments.

Mr. MANN. That is the reason I agree with the gentleman and the reason that I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman from Virginia went to the desk and examined the amendment, and I think he discovered that it does not go to the extent that the gentleman from Illinois has stated.

Mr. HAY. I do not so understand.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It is limited entirely to certain events that are enumerated. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] states that in his judgment there is no authority of law for paying these expenses, if they are paying them, and so has the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], and they are both members of the committee. Is not that sufficient ground to justify placing a limitation on the appropriation?

Mr. COX. If there is no authority in law for it, how do these items get past the Comptroller of the Treasury?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I can explain that in about two minutes' time, if I may be yielded that much.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, is there not another remedy for this illegal expenditure of money? If the Committee on Military Affairs would go into the question of the necessary amount and cut down the appropriation for this work sufficiently, so that they would not have money enough to go into polo games, would not that remedy the matter?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that every particle of this appropriation is itemized and allotted by the Chief of the Quartermaster Corps, and that there is no allotment of this appropriation for polo games or anything of that sort. The only thing that could be paid out of this item—transportation—would be for transporting the horses from one place to another; and then, of course, the Secretary of War has the power to order the horses to be transported, and I do not know any law which we could properly enact which would prevent him from transporting the horses of the Army.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from South Dakota to tell us how these claims get past the Comptroller of the Treasury?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certain expenses were incurred in connection with some races at Pimlico race track, Arlington, Md., and when the voucher reached the Treasury Department it was disallowed.

Mr. COX. By whom?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. By the Auditor for the War Department, who is an official of the Treasury Department. He decided it could not be paid, because it was not authorized by law, and I think when he did that he followed the intention of Congress when it made the appropriation. The matter went to the Comptroller of the Treasury.

Mr. COX. Was there an appeal taken from his decision?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes; and here is the substance of the comptroller's decision:

> The War Department is intrusted with the control of the Army and what, in its judgment, will promote its efficiency. The Secretary of War represents the President and exercises his power on the subjects confided to his department. If the War Department in the exercise of its jurisdiction and control of the Army is of the opinion that polo tournaments among the officers and enlisted men tend to promote the efficiency of the Army, and accordingly orders the officers and men to participate in such tournaments, which involve expenditures for transportation of officers and men and horses to attend such tournaments, I do not think the accounting officers can revise the judgment of the War Department in such matters or that they are authorized to disallow them the reasonable cost of such transportation.

So the decision of the comptroller is based entirely upon the authority that he says the Secretary of War possesses, and enables the expenditure of money that Congress did not intend to authorize.

Mr. MADDEN. Does he define what a game of polo is?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. My position is, and I am willing to accept the judgment of the Committee on Military Affairs on the matter, that if this is a proper subject for which to appropriate money, then appropriate for that purpose.

Mr. COX. As I gather from the reading of the decision of the comptroller, he really winds up by deciding a state of facts not stated in the first part of the decision. Did not that case arise on the proposition of certain horses being sent to a race track?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think so.

Mr. COX. And then finally he decides the question on a polo game.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No; the particular item in this case was a voucher for a race-track event, but he goes on very fully and discusses polo tournaments and gives the Century Dictionary definition of what polo is and of what hockey is, and so forth. It is quite interesting, I will say to the gentleman, and it shows clearly how the comptroller found a way to pay the expenses, but I do not think his decision is correct.

Mr. MANN. In accordance with the law.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I think this matter has been discussed sufficiently, and I hope to have a vote on the amendment now.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced the "noes" seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BURKE of South Dakota) there were—ayes 14, noes 23.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 27941, the Army appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 22010. An act to amend the license law, approved July 1, 1902, with respect to licenses of drivers of passenger vehicles for hire.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution and bill of the following titles:

S. J. Res. 150. Joint resolution appropriating $40,000 for expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate; and

S. 7637. An act to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge across the Illinois River near Havana, Ill.

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE FOR TO-MORROW.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. CLINE, to preside at the session of the House to-morrow.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Sunday, January 19, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a statement of expenses incurred from June 30 to December 1, 1912, by officers and employees of the Navy Department in attending conventions of societies or associations (H. Doc. No. 1284); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, January 19, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by Mr. CLINE as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal and everliving God, our heavenly Father, out of the deeps we cry unto Thee, "Our refuge and our strength, a very present help in trouble." We thank Thee for all the disclosures Thou has made of Thyself, which enables us to interpret the meaning of life and its far-reaching purposes; especially for that light which broke in splendor upon the world in the resurrection of the Christ, demonstrating the immortality of the soul and the unbroken continuity of life. We realize the fitness of this service in memory of one who served with distinction upon the floor of this House and left behind him an enviable record as a statesman, a Christian gentleman, a warm-hearted friend, a faithful husband, a loving father. Help us to cherish with his dear ones his memory, to copy his virtues, and leave behind us a record worthy of emulation; looking forward with bright anticipations to one of the Father's many mansions where all the longings, hopes, and aspirations of our souls shall find their full fruition, in Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Clerk began the reading of the Journal of Saturday, January 18, 1913.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with. If there be no objection that request will be granted, and the Journal will be considered as approved.

There was no objection.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE FOSTER, OF VERMONT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair lays before the House the order for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. PLUMLEY, by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That Sunday, January 19, 1913, at 12 o'clock m., be set apart for addresses upon the life, character, and public services of Hon. DAVID J. FOSTER, late a Representative from the State of Vermont.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Vermont offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 780.

Resolved, That in pursuance of the special order heretofore adopted, the House proceed to pay tribute to the memory of the Hon. DAVID JOHNSON FOSTER, late a Representative in Congress from the State of Vermont.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished career and his great service to his country as a Representative in Congress, the House, at the conclusion of the memorial proceedings of this day, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I need not suggest to you the peculiarly delicate situation of one who, now attempting to do justice to the splendid merits of his predecessor, is himself just beginning to learn to live up to the record in Congress that his predecessor left.

It is now nearly 13 years since the Hon. DAVID J. FOSTER was chosen by his district to represent Vermont in Congress. I knew him some time before this honor came to him. And I knew him with something of intimacy during all the years since. I felt it was my duty as a citizen and it was my pride as a friend to lend my voice and my vote to support his biennial return to this Chamber. And I was never disappointed in the return of public service that he made for citizens and friends alike.

While at home in Vermont I knew pretty closely the character of Mr. FOSTER; had been associated with him time and again in important affairs that tended to bring out the best there is in a man. Yet it remained for my brief experience here to emphasize to me even more directly the opinion that other men had of him, too. I myself have been welcomed here by scores of men that sit in this Chamber merely out of grateful and affectionate recollection of my predecessor. I have been told that I was welcome in his name, and I appreciate the depth of feeling that has stirred them to this saying. He was one of the men of rugged character that grow out of the New England hills. He made himself all that he was, and he was all that the best of his friends and admirers could expect.

It does not become me to say too much on this occasion, because if I were to undertake to tell what I believe the people of Vermont and his associates in this Chamber thought of Mr. FOSTER and the great and good work he had accomplished or helped to accomplish for the good of the people at large I should simply reiterate the eulogies that are to be heard to-day.

I desire simply to say, as the present Representative of Mr. FOSTER's district and as his personal friend, that Vermont was proud to feel that he was here to protect her interests and to help safeguard the interests of the Nation, and that his security in the confidence and affection of the people whose servant he was could not be broken.

There is so much that I might say of Mr. FOSTER, so much that I do so eagerly desire to say of him and his good works, that I am halted now, not by disinclination, but by the embarrassment of one that fears he may not under these peculiar circumstances be understood.

I may only hope that Vermont and that the country may always have here in this Congress men of such high purpose and splendid ability as DAVID J. FOSTER, and that the ideals we all are striving for may find supporters in the kind of men that my predecessor most nobly represented.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in the stress of legislative business it had not come to my notice until last evening that these memorial exercises were set down for to-day. Under ordinary circumstances I would let an occasion of this sort pass, perhaps, but I have not felt that I would be willing to allow the memorial exercises of DAVID J. FOSTER to pass in this House of Representatives without adding my heartfelt, although halting, tribute to his memory.

It is not in any sense underestimating the warm attachment that I have for my colleagues from many States to say that, partly from circumstances and partly from the strong and winning personality of Mr. FOSTER, I formed for him a friendship more intimate than for any other Member of this body.

We came into Congress at the same time, he from the far East and I from the West. We met first at the grave of the lamented William McKinley, during the funeral services at Canton, Ohio. I was then impressed with Mr. FOSTER's strong personality, his striking and attractive appearance, his warm and cordial greeting to his fellows. The new Republican membership of the Fifty-seventh Congress formed what I have not known to be formed at any other time in the history of the House, a club or association of new Members of that Congress, known as the Tantalus Club, for the purpose of more prompt acquaintance of new Members among themselves, and of making the beginning of the legislative life of the new Members of greater service and of more ready application to the great problems of the time. Mr. FOSTER, if not the originator, certainly was the mover and the controlling spirit of that organization. We lived for some years in the same apartment house and I had the opportunity of seeing him often in his home—that sanctuary and environment where a good man appears at his best and where the meanness and selfishness of the bad man is disclosed and known. There was nothing yellow in the life of DAVID J. FOSTER. He was the solicitous and helpful parent, the courteous and affectionate husband, and the superb and gentlemanly neighbor and host.

With great rapidity Mr. FOSTER rose from the position of a new Member to become the chairman of our Committee on Foreign Affairs, one of the most responsible, dignified, and important positions in the House and, indeed, in the legislative and administrative life of the country; a position on the wise and intelligent administration of which our peace and standing among the nations in considerable part depends.

Statecraft came naturally to Mr. FOSTER. Statesmanship was his inheritance, his constant study, and his ample accomplishment. He belonged to that long line of great New Englanders, who for now several generations have come down from the schoolhouse discipline of those rugged hills to take a prominent part in leadership in the industrial, legislative, and professional life of the Nation.

So long as the Republic shall rear men of the type of DAVID J. FOSTER to shape her legislation and to interpret and administer her laws, the future of our country will be in safe hands, and we may look forward with confidence to the fulfillment of her glorious destiny.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, the most important factor in modern life is the unearned increment that those who have preceded us on this stage of affairs have contributed to the general welfare and prosperity of the world, and which has added to the joys and happiness and comfort of those who shall succeed them for their advancement and upbuilding. In making an estimate of that distinguished man, Hon. DAVID J. FOSTER, of Vermont, whose memorial services claim our attention this afternoon, I wish to speak briefly on this point.

The material things—the building of great cities, the construction of vast systems of transportation, the conquest of the wilderness and the plain by those who have preceded us—have multiplied our comforts and our opportunities. The story of what the past has done for us of the present is a long story. There is hardly a century that has not contributed things which, if they were taken away from us, would be most sincerely missed and would be felt as a great loss to us as a people and as individuals. The political principles that we enjoy were not of this century, nor the past century, nor the century before that, but they have come down to us through tens of centuries. The educational advantages that have made the American people a great people were not altogether originated within the confines of our territory. The religious sentiments which we profess, which have strengthened our moral fiber and made us a great people, come down the ages from far across the seas, and especially from that place where, on the Galilean hills, walked the divine and immortal Nazarene.

But among all the things the past has given us its material contributions to our welfare are the least of the things we prize. If our cities were razed, our transportation systems destroyed, our farms returned to the wilderness, within a hundred years we would have replaced them all; but if there were taken from us the teaching of the centuries of earth's great and good men, the record of their lives, the sum total of their achievements, a thousand or many thousands of years would not suffice to replace that great loss.

The thing I am endeavoring to say is that the greatest contribution ever made by any country or by our own country, by any generation or by this generation, is the characters of the men and women who have lived for the good of mankind. Every strong man is a leader in his place and time. Every man who can think clearly and see clearly is a leader, and upon the sufficiency of his knowledge, the soundness of his judgment, and the purity of his intentions depends the quality and strength of his leadership.

There was a man down in the land of Egypt who was a stranger there, sold as a slave into that country, who, by reason of three things alone, rose to control the country, to its benefit and good; first, that his sense of personal honor was more to him than life; second, that he was untiring in his industry in the acquisition of information concerning the things in which he was concerned; and, third, that he had a judgment as sound and as perfect as that of any man who ever lived. That man was Joseph, a stranger in a strange land, but he controlled that country for that country's good, because he was worthy of its utmost confidence.

I could multiply such instances. It is to such a class of men that the man in whose honor we are assembled to-day belonged. He was a leader by reason of the adequacy of his knowledge concerning the things with which he dealt, by the soundness and clearness of his discernment and judgment, and because we had implicit confidence in him. Everything he spoke of, everything he touched, everything he said was illuminated with the light of that high personal honor that appeals to the hearts of men. What he said we believed. What he desired we thought for the good of the country. Those things he advocated we considered to be essential for the welfare of the people of the United States.

Mr. FOSTER was a distinguished Member of this body when I had the privilege of joining it. There were certain qualities about him that attracted me to him at the beginning, and I learned sincerely to love him, and with the rest of my associates to follow his lead in those matters in which he was our appointed leader. I do not regret one act I took under his advice, one vote I cast following his judgment, or one thing I ever heard him say on the floor of this House.

I remember when David J. Livingstone came back from Africa, worn with his long service to a benighted people. He was to receive from one of the greatest universities of England, in company with Alfred (Lord) Tennyson, a distinguished honor. When the university had been assembled and the authorities had taken these two men to the place of honor, and Alfred (Lord) Tennyson was called to the front of the stage to receive his distinction, he was met with somewhat of jeers by the assembled undergraduates, who made just a little sport of some of his pretensions, saying:

If you're waking, call me early, Alfred, dear.

When Livingstone was announced for the honor, a man whose whole life had been devoted to the service of mankind without hope of reward or expectation of remuneration or honor, but simply for the opportunity of doing his duty as a man, that entire university rose and with uncovered heads, an honor rarely given, stood in solemn and reverent silence while he received his distinction.

The greatest thing that mortal times afford is spotless reputation, and in these modern days, in the midst of the fierce light that beats around a distinguished place upon the floor of this House, it is gratifying to know that a man can close his labors among the universal plaudits of his fellows and can have it said country-wide and world-wide that his sense of personal honor was such that it gilded everything he touched. Such a life, Mr. Speaker, must have been well spent. DAVID J. FOSTER was one of the men who in the future will be looked back to as those who have preserved for us the purity of our public life, has left a glorious record of an efficient service, and one who has proved that a man's private life may so adorn his public station that all will join in granting him the honor dear to every true man's heart—of loving and universal recollection.

Mr. NYE. Mr. Speaker, slowly, but I believe surely, humanity is learning that goodness is not only compatible with greatness, but that goodness is greatness, and that there is no greatness without it. I have been deeply impressed with the beautiful train of thought so eloquently expressed by the last speaker, and I think it is a theme upon which we may properly comment on occasions of this character. We are the heirs of all the rich and wondrous past, and when I say "rich and wondrous past" I do not mean the riches which are temporal and which moth and rust corrupt, but I mean that enduring wealth of character to which we pay our respects to-day. Every martyr to truth, every hero, every philosopher, every poet, every artist, every musician of all the past ages comes to us to-day and lays his treasure of wealth at our feet.

If an intimate personal acquaintance with the deceased were essential to take part on this occasion, I should be almost wholly disqualified to speak; but there are people we meet in this world whom we feel we have always known. There is a soul fraternity which the outer world does not know. We catch the inspiration of the character and the atmosphere of the life intuitively. It is not scholastic or learned, but we read human character as we read a face. We feel, and no power can convince us to the contrary, that this man is genuine or the other man is largely spectacular and counterfeit. During four years as a colleague of this distinguished son of Vermont I always felt that I was in the presence of an upright, noble man, not only with the clear mind and the studious qualities which enabled him to understand his subject, but one whose life was animated and illumined by conscience and by enduring integrity. I believed in him intuitively. I knew that if he made a mistake it was a mistake of judgment and not of motive. In the eloquent invocation here to-day he was referred to as a Christian man.

I believe with Carlyle that men are essentially what they are religiously and nothing else—not their church, that may be an accident; not their profession, for we see good men and bad men in every church and profession; but that which men take to heart, that in which they are rooted in life, that attitude of heart toward God and their fellowmen—this determines the man, and without it he is a sham. And in this sense—and I know nothing about his history in that regard—he was in character, I know, profoundly and constitutionally religious, which simply means honesty, integrity, and reverence and love. I do not know that I can say more of him personally. I was not associated with him on committees. I saw him often here in the House. I had occasion during my four or five years' acquaintance with him to work with him in some of the measures in which he was personally and deeply interested, and I always felt a sense of confidence and reliance not alone upon his judgment but upon that which is greater, his integrity.

Mr. Speaker, it so chances that in a brief experience of six years in this Chamber this is the first time I have attempted to utter a word upon occasions of this character. I try only to speak in simple, unstudied words that spring from the heart in kindly memory of one I esteemed and loved.

I thought to-day, when I was coming up the hill to this Capitol, of the vast procession of illustrious men who for more than a century and a quarter have come and gone, men who for a day stood high in ability and character, but I could not help but reflect after all how transitory are all things human. The things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen—that is, by the physical senses—are the eternal. That character which this man expressed lives on to enrich the future as the worthy men of the past enrich to-day.

How fleeting and how unsubstantial is human fame! How wealth turns to ashes in our hands and how the prizes we struggle for are but the toys of an hour! All must pass away. Childishly ambitious to-day to write our names upon the shore of time's restless sea, to-morrow's waves will sweep away both writer and inscription. But that which is enduring, that which calls us here to-day to pay our tribute of love to this man, that which is born, I believe, of God and partakes of immortality, that which the Great Teacher of Galilee taught and demonstrated to humanity, that for which He toiled and suffered on earth can not and will not pass away.

These shall resist the empire of decay,
When time is o'er and worlds have passed away.
Cold in the dust the perished heart may lie,
But that which warmed it once can never die.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, New England is so limited in area and her interests in the several States are so similar that her Representatives have as close association in most cases as they would if they came from the same State. That condition at least marked my acquaintance with and friendship for Mr. FOSTER. He was one of those who in my first days in Congress took an interest in me and the things I was trying to do; advised and criticized and praised when the occasion offered, in short assumed the position of a real friend, and it is as such that I like to think of and shall always remember him. I soon learned that he was well equipped for the public service. He was a good lawyer, which, despite the frequent criticism that there are too many lawyers in legislative bodies, is a desirable qualification, which should always be considered and obtained, other conditions being equal; and this qualification was supplemented by a judicial temperament which enabled him to give suitable weight to the opinions of others and to incorporate them in his final conclusions. Added to these characteristics, he was industrious; no man can be entirely satisfactory to his constituents, whatever may be his other qualities, unless he has industry; and, finally, he was intensely interested in his work. Having all of these qualities, coupled with excellent native ability, it was but natural that his tenure of office should have seemed to be secure, especially as he came from a State which has been particularly loyal to faithful and deserving sons who have represented her in Congress. Indeed, there are few places in our public service more permanent than a Senatorship or Representative from Vermont. For two decades vacancies in the office of Senator from that State have only come as a result of death or resignation. It is not my purpose to speak in detail of Mr. FOSTER's public service, except a word about his last activities. One of his characteristics was that he did not seem to have malice or continued resentment in his makeup; this led him to speak of men only when he could speak well of them, and he had a gracious courtesy, both qualities which especially adapted him for the delicate work of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which he was long a member, and for one Congress its chairman. During this service he not only performed his work in Congress with great credit, but was also commissioned to represent our Government to two foreign countries—Mexico and Italy—as a member of commissions appointed for special purposes, and we may well believe that in this work he displayed those qualities "which transmutes aliens into trusting friends and gives its owner passport around the world."

Last March I went to Panama knowing that he was not well, but was assured that his trouble was only temporary, and expecting to find him entirely recovered on my return, and was correspondingly shocked to find that he had passed on to his reward.

I shall not forget DAVID J. FOSTER, the able legislator, the loyal Republican, the upright citizen, the true friend, and I greatly regret that these words so inadequately express my sincere sorrow at his untimely death and the deep sense of personal loss which I feel.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the mortality record of the present Congress has been exceptionally large. I believe 16 Members of this House have answered the final summons since the Sixty-second Congress was convened in extraordinary session. To-day we meet in solemn conclave to pay a tribute of respect to one of these, our late colleague the Hon. DAVID JOHNSON FOSTER, of Vermont. He had a large experience in public life. For many years honors were heaped upon him by his friends and neighbors in his native State. His rise from one public station to another was almost meteoric. No man who failed to possess the unqualified confidence of his constituency could have attained the honors that were bestowed upon him. Successively prosecuting attorney, State senator, commissioner of State taxes, chairman of the State board of railroad commissioners from 1886 to 1900; and in the latter year he was elected to the National House of Representatives. Here his splendid ability soon found recognition. His courteous manner, his knowledge of affairs, his industry, his absolute fairness at all times, and especially upon every momentous public question, gained for him the esteem and confidence of all his colleagues, regardless of political affiliation. As chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs he was called upon to take an active part in the settlement of grave questions of international relationship. He performed the duties that devolved upon him fearlessly, earnestly, honestly, patriotically.

And in the very prime of life, in the very vigor of manhood, he was suddenly stricken by the Grim Reaper. The news of his death was a severe shock to all those who had learned to know and esteem him. In his death they felt they had lost a sincere friend. They knew his State and the Nation had lost an able and faithful Representative, his family an affectionate and devoted husband and father. Peace to his ashes.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, DAVID JOHNSON FOSTER, son of Jacob Prentiss Foster and Matilda Cahoon Foster, was born in Barnet, Caledonia County, Vt., June 27, 1857, and died 8.30 p. m., Thursday, March 21, 1912, at his residence in Washington.

He was a slender youth of delicate health, having neither ability nor liking for the rough sports of his young comrades, but from early boyhood he was an omnivorous reader, and found his glad employment among his books, a pastime which he indulged late into the night. He obtained his early education in a district school of 24 weeks each year; during the remainder of the year he aided his father upon the farm, and while school was in progress his mornings and evenings were similarly employed. Meanwhile he seized every available means to store up useful knowledge. Fortunately for the lad, the father was a great lover of good literature, and surrounded himself, to the extent of his financial ability, with the means for indulging his tastes, and to these the boy had access.

While his comrades played ball and games of that character, he sat at home an eager student. He entered St. Johnsbury Academy in the fall of 1872, graduated in 1876, entered Dartmouth that fall, and graduated in 1880. While attending the academy he worked for his board, received such aid as the father, mother, and other members of the family could give him, and supplemented their aid by teaching school. During his college life he taught school in the winter, gained scholarships by studious application, tutored students in the lower classes, won money prizes in elocution, and trained his associates in prize speaking. It was while teaching at Chelsea, Vt., that he made the acquaintance of his future wife, Mabel M. Allen, of that town.

From college he went immediately to Burlington, Vt., to read law, was admitted to the Chittenden County court in 1883, began the practice of law at once in the city of Burlington, and was married during the year. He was elected prosecuting attorney for the county of Chittenden for two terms, 1886 to 1890; in 1890 to 1894 he was one of the State senators from that county; was State tax commissioner by appointment of the governor for four years, 1894 to 1898; chairman of the railroad commissioners of the State of Vermont, by appointment of the governor, from 1898 to 1900, and in the spring of 1900 was nominated to the Fifty-seventh Congress and elected that fall. His first committee assignments were those of Foreign Affairs, Claims, and Expenditures in the State Department. He held similar committee positions in the Fifty-eighth Congress, also the Committee on Labor. He retained a position on the Committee on Foreign Affairs throughout his congressional career. He was made chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor in the Fifty-ninth Congress, which position he held until, following the death of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, James Brock Perkins, during the Sixty-first Congress, he was appointed by the Speaker to the chairmanship thus made vacant, when he resigned his position upon the Committee on Commerce and Labor. In the Sixty-second Congress, there being a Democratic majority in the House, he was given the position of the ranking member of the minority in the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

In September, 1910, by the appointment of the President, he headed the delegation which represented this country at the Centennial of Mexican Independence, and during his service as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs he was made chairman by President Taft of the delegation from the United States to the General Assembly of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome. During the winter of 1910–11 he gave a banquet in honor of the Secretary of State, which was a most brilliant and successful affair.

On the 16th of January, 1907, he delivered a speech in the House of Representatives on the treaty power of the Government, which was regarded by his colleagues as a most able and successful effort, of large value in the discussion of the questions then pending, and important in the House and throughout the United States. In the course of this speech he spoke of the intense State pride which had characterized the American people from the very Declaration of Independence, saying:

It was written of old "that one star differeth from another star in glory," and it certainly was never truer than it is to-day that the stars that on the blue firmament of the flag represent the several States of the Union differ one from another in glory. You who come here from the State of New York insist that the star which represents your Empire State shines with a glory that is all its own; and we who come from the little State that lies nestled among the Green Mountains insist that the star which represents our State has a glory that is peculiarly its own; and so you who come from Virginia and Pennsylvania and Texas and Illinois and California and all the other States insist the star which on the flag represents your State has its own peculiar glory. And so to-day, as ever before, the citizens of each of the 45 States are proud of their State. They rejoice in her achievements in peace and war. They guard with zealous care her ancient rights and privileges. They resent with just indignation any reflection upon her fair fame. They rejoice in the part vouchsafed to them in maintaining her honor and prestige; and, best of all, they see in all this nothing incompatible with their absolute and unswerving loyalty and devotion to the Republic.

He concluded his speech with the eloquent passage which follows:

From the days of Benjamin Franklin, our first and still our greatest diplomat, the American people have insisted that our foreign relations should be grounded in the highest morality and justice. Our foreign relations have become one of the most important functions of the Government. Our own growth and expansion during the last hundred years, and the contraction of the world through the extinction of distance, have brought the nations of the earth to our door and have taken us to their door. Hundreds of thousands of Americans are constantly in foreign lands. They are there for business, for pleasure. In addition to the tourists who come to our country from other lands we have a million immigrants per year. These people leave kindred and friends at home and form new friendships here. Hundreds of thousands of them return each year, leaving kindred and friends here. Our vast foreign commerce brings us into contact with the other nations of the earth, for the products of our field and our factory go to nearly every harbor in the world. And so it comes to pass in these days of modern development and modern enterprise and modern invention and modern unification that no nation lives unto itself alone. Our diplomacy has assumed new proportions. And in all her foreign relations the great Republic, standing for equality of opportunity, must continue to shape her conduct by the principles of the highest morality and justice.

On Friday, February 25, 1910, he replied in the House to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] upon the subject of Mr. FOSTER's insurgency in connection with others. During the course of his remarks he said:

It is an axiomatic fact that in popular government, wherever situated, the majority must rule. It is the fundamental principle of popular government that the minority must submit to the rule of the majority so long as it remains the majority. So I, as an American citizen, am bound to yield peacefully to the will of the majority so long as that majority remains. But while this is true, it is also true that it is my right and privilege as an American citizen and my duty as an American citizen if I believe that the majority is wrong and that I am right, to use my best endeavors to see that the minority of to-day becomes the majority of to-morrow.

So it is with parties. Political parties are necessary in this country. We are governed by political parties. And in order to secure party solidarity and therefore party efficiency it is equally necessary that the majority should rule within the party; that the minority yield peacefully to the will of the majority so long as it remains the majority. But while this is true it is equally true that I, as a member of my party and still an American citizen, have the right and privilege and the duty, if I believe that I am right and the majority of my party is wrong, to use my best endeavors to see to it that my minority within my party to-day becomes the majority of to-morrow. It is this that gives vitality and virility to parties and preserves them from stagnation. Old ocean itself would stagnate into rottenness but for the ceaseless action of the remorseless waves and tides.

I resent the implication that a Republican who shows the least inclination toward independence is an insurgent. Lincoln expressed the true doctrine of republicansim in the phrase: "In essentials, unity; in nonessentials, liberty; in all things, charity." I stand for party unity as to all essentials, and I insist that I shall not be called opprobrious names when I stand for individual freedom as to nonessentials.

Mr. FOSTER addressed the House on the occasion of memorial services on the death of Hon. Redfield Proctor, late United States Senator from Vermont, and as illustrative of his finished style of oratory I quote a portion of his closing remarks on that occasion:

He was a typical son of his native State. The jocular remark made years ago, that Vermont was a good State to emigrate from, contained a great truth. That is a good home for the young man to go out from whose choicest decorations are the simple but enduring virtues of human life. Whether that home be a costly mansion, stored with the rarest productions of art and the handiwork of man, or a humble cottage furnishing scant protection against the winter blasts, the recollection of its faith and love and devotion will go with him farther and abide with him longer and be of infinitely more service to him than aught else he can take with him. And that is a good State to go out from whose cardinal principles are the simple but profound truths of human life and human relationship, and whose citizens see in their State the ancient torch of celestial fire handed down from generation to generation and by them to be passed on unimpaired to the generation yet to come. From its earliest history Vermont has been the cradle of human freedom. The sturdy pioneers who went thither in search of homes fell under the most potent spell of nature.

The wild freedom of the forest, the rugged strength of the hills, the beauty of the valleys, and the fierce struggle with savagery developed within them that stern love of liberty, that resolute independence, and that profound respect for government and all the instrumentalities of human progress which have characterized the true sons of Vermont in all succeeding time. And he was one of those true sons. He loved her hills and valleys. He cherished her history, her traditions, her institutions, her achievements. He was jealous of her good name and fair fame, and throughout his long life his heart beat true to her every interest. He honored the State as the State honored him, and no higher tribute can be paid to his memory than the simple truth that the State is better by reason of his life, his character, his career.

June 27, 1857; March 21, 1912. Birth—death. Between these two events a genuine and striking life history may be written. It will be the truth, but it shall read like a romance. It is elementary in that it deals with the triumph of resolute will, untiring zeal, and inflexible purpose over poverty, obscurity, and countless formidable obstacles. It tells of his ceaseless efforts to advance, while it reveals, if closely scanned, the willing and loving sacrifice and service of a devoted family that they might promote the aspirations of a beloved son and brother.

Between these two dates there is the history of one whose life was much more than usually successful in what it brought to him and much more than commonly valuable in what it did for his fellows and his country, and yet a few wholly inadequate paragraphs must contain all that can be said here. How greatly the heart feels, how little the tongue can express!

As the years of his life ran on he climbed with willing feet the more rugged steeps and from those exalted plains breathed a purer air and had a broader, clearer vision. He loved his country and his State with a depth and quality of affection that permitted no rival, while it marked the limits, set the bounds, and laid out the course of his political affiliations and activities.

More and more as the days ripened into years and the years sped on he was developing a statesmanlike grasp of all national problems. Conscious of a high purpose throughout and with a developing confidence in his ability to rightly comprehend and settle the great questions of state, the natural hesitancy of the novice had disappeared and there was a promptness in conclusion, a readiness of action, a steadfastness of position which gave him prominence in party councils and a place of honor among his colleagues.

He was a loyal friend. He counted nothing as too great a hardship if in the end it served and pleased a friend. And his friends were not few. The warm hand of constancy and regard went out alike to the humble and the exalted, the rich and the poor. Born and bred in a home of limited means, among neighbors of like circumstances, he was destitute of ostentatious pride or affectation, and knowing the genuine worth of these sons and daughters of toil was glad always to render them generous service and to knit them closely to his great warm heart. He had a passion for service to his fellow men and delighted most when he could yield most of his time and talent in advancing their interests in promoting their welfare.

He was ready always to serve another regardless of the personal labor and sacrifice which the service involved; he even sought the opportunity to befriend others, especially such as were new to their position and embarrassed by the wealth of their ignorance in the performance of their duties. He was discreet and tactful, and, while vigorously defending his positions, spoke and acted in such a manner and in such language as not to offend but rather to win his opponent, if not to his view at least to a full appreciation of his worth and worthiness as an antagonist. He won all by his manly and courteous bearing, and when death came it was to a man who, true to his convictions as any knight of old, had not an enemy. On the day following his decease, when his draped desk announced at the morning hour the sad tidings to his associates in Congress, all hearts were sad, and many eyes were moist with unshed but gathering tears as they looked upon his vacant seat. No man ever passed out in death from the Hall of this House with fewer enemies or more sincere and mourning friends.

He was not a frequent speaker in this Hall, but when he spoke he commanded the attention of his colleagues to an unusual degree. He spoke only when he deemed speech more potent than silence. From the beginning to the end of his congressional career he was a hard working, painstaking, honorable, and efficient Representative of his district, with augmenting confidence in his resourcefulness and capacity on the part of his colleagues and increasing faith in his character and worth on the part of his constituents.

His ability as an orator on great occasions upon matters of world-wide bearing and importance, of grave character and deep significance, had only begun to be generally appreciated; and yet he had spoken in most of our cities of the first class to large, admiring, and appreciative audiences with a demonstrated power to touch these great themes before vast assemblies with the potent hand of a master.

From his appointment as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to the end of his life he was easily in the very front rank of the membership of the House, possessing the respect and enjoying the regard of all his colleagues, irrespective of party, to an unusual, even to a remarkable degree; and when with inexpressible shock and sadness the knowledge came to them that his earthly career had closed, the depth, breadth, and warmth of the affection with which he was enshrined in their hearts was revealed to them in its completeness.

He had not reached but he was steadily approaching the zenith of his career as a statesman. His life had been, and without question it would have continued to be, one of constant growth in character, in gathering resources, in mental strength and acumen, in increasing faith in his own powers coupled with a steadily growing conviction on the part of the citizens of his native State that in him they had one in high place worthy of unlimited trust and confidence.

His was a manly spirit—virile, pervasive, indomitable. It was manifest in his early boyhood when, struggling against adverse conditions, he broke through his repressive environments and by his own well-directed efforts acquired a liberal education, the goal of his early ambition. It has been manifest since on many noteworthy occasions when battling against strong contending and opposing influences he has risen above them or has overcome them, has illuminated despair with the bright beam of hope, and out of seeming defeat has plucked unquestioned victory.

His was a noble soul, lofty, inflexible, and inspired. He dared to attempt great things, to rise that he might seize great opportunities, and measured by things accomplished there are few of his compeers who show larger or better results. Grand, indeed, was the course which lay before him. It was no easy task to set limitations to his increasing power, honor, and usefulness. It was in the effulgence of a risen sun that his manly, noble life went out, and we who were his comrades and his friends are left to mourn his untimely death.

By the few to whom he gave access to his innermost being, where they could catch the faintest throbs of his warm, true heart, there was abiding faith and fervent love. They who knew him best loved him most. These are the mourners who find no surcease. His memory reigns eternal in their breasts. His widow and his daughters, his aged mother, and his near kin—deep and sad is their bereavement. The chords of human sympathy yield plaintive and tender music when touched by the hand of affliction, and God in infinite love will be their "shield and buckler."

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who desire be granted leave to print remarks in the RECORD for 20 legislative days.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Whereas the people of the State of Oklahoma believe in the due observance of all laws; and

Whereas there is now on the statutes of the State a law forbidding the sale or transportation of intoxicating liquor in the State of Oklahoma; and

Whereas the Federal law now protects the people in one half of the State from having intoxicating liquor brought into their midst, but does not so protect the other half of the State; and

GUS POOL, Chief Clerk.

Mr. OLIVER. In behalf of my colleague [Mr. PENROSE], who is unavoidably absent, I send to the desk a telegram from Hon. Mayer Sulzberger, one of the judges of the court of common pleas of Philadelphia County, Pa., with reference to the pending immigration bill, which I ask to have read and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was read and ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., January 19, 1913.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Conference immigration bill contains provision for character certificate, which by reason of the cruelty of Russian officials will practically bar out all Russian Jews. Louis Marshall, my successor as president of the American Jewish committee, has telegraphed you to-day. Please note his reasons and do what you can to avert calamity.

MAYER SULZBERGER.

Mr. OLIVER. I present a telegram in the nature of a memorial from Louis Marshall, president of the American Jewish committee, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, January 19, 1913.

GEORGE T. OLIVER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Conference immigration bill, in section 3, contains provision not previously considered, excluding subjects of countries issuing character certificate failing to produce such certificate to immigration officials. This will exclude majority Jews coming from Russia and Roumania owing to practical legal difficulties attending procurement of certificates, the compliance with elaborate conditions imposed, their military regulations, and the large expense involved. How could victims of Kishineff or the thousands constantly expelled from their homes by police or those suspected of being political offenders expect to secure such a certificate? Such reversal of our attitude toward the persecuted can not be intended. Bill should be amended to preclude cruel consequences inevitably resulting from present phraseology.

LOUIS MARSHALL,
President American Jewish Committee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND presented telegrams in the nature of petitions from the Symes Grocery Co., of Salt Lake City; of L. G. Webber, of Salt Lake City; and Willard Hansen, dairy and food commissioner of Salt Lake City, all in the State of Utah, praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent the transportation of adulterated or misbranded goods, which were referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from E. G. Peterson, director of extension division of the Utah Agriculture College, of Logan, Utah, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the establishment of agricultural extension departments in connection with the agricultural colleges in the several States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BROWN. I present a telegram from the State superintendent of education in Nebraska, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LINCOLN, NEBR., January 16, 1913.

Senator NORRIS BROWN,
Washington, D. C.:

Trust you will give Page bill your hearty support. Every educator in Nebraska will appreciate your active, earnest interest in same.

JAMES DELZELL, State Superintendent.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Grand Island, Nebr., remonstrating against the parole of Federal life prisoners, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented a petition of members of the Business Men's Association of Milford, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the protection of migratory birds, which was ordered to lie on the table.

ALCOHOL FOR TESTING CITRUS FRUITS.

Mr. WORKS. I introduce a joint resolution extending the privilege of the proviso of section 2 of the act of June 7, 1906, to persons using alcohol for testing citrus fruits, and I ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 155) extending the privilege of the proviso of section 2 of the act of June 7, 1906, to persons using alcohol for testing citrus fruits was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in addition to manufacturers employing processes in which the alcohol used free of tax under the provisions of the act of June 7, 1906 (34 Stat., 217), is expressed or evaporated from the articles manufactured, persons using such alcohol for testing citrus fruits shall be permitted to recover such alcohol and to have such alcohol restored to a condition suitable solely for reuse in testing citrus fruits under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

C., and also a bridge and approaches thereto across Shem Creek, Charleston County, S. C., was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that the bill be placed on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go to the calendar.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE UTTER.

Mr. WETMORE. I desire to give notice that on Saturday, February 22, 1913, I will ask the Senate to consider resolutions commemorative of the life, character, and public services of Hon. GEORGE H. UTTER, late Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Rhode Island.

EXTENSION DEPARTMENTS IN AGRICULTURAL COLLEGES.

Mr. BRYAN. The junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] gave notice that he would call up this morning House bill 22871, to establish extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges, and so forth. The Senator from Georgia is slightly indisposed and unable to be here. He asked me to extend the request for him and make it apply for Friday morning, January 24, instead of to-day.

WASHED MONEY (S. DOC. NO. 1020).

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have an article taken from the Plate Printer on the subject of "Washed money." I ask that it be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

IMMIGRATION OF ALIENS.

Mr. LODGE. I call up the conference report on the immigration bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays the conference report before the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to say a word in regard to the clause referred to in the telegram presented by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to-day. We have all, I suppose, received telegrams in regard to that clause. I have received one from Mr. Marshall, of New York, a very able lawyer, as we all know. I think it important to say something in regard to it, because it is evidently entirely misconceived.

The clause in question is the following, under the excluded classes:

Citizens or subjects of any country that issues penal certificates or certificates of character who do not produce to the immigration officials such a certificate.

The theory expressed in the telegram of Mr. Marshall to me and of the other telegrams of similar character is that the effect of that would be to prevent the immigration of Hebrews from Russia. On that particular point, of Russia, let me say that no such certificate exists in Russia. With a view of the better prevention of the entry of criminals into the United States we have been endeavoring to get from other governments, under existing law, some form of penal certificate in order to show that a man has been convicted of a crime. Application was made to Russia, I am informed, and Russia replied that any such system was impracticable for her, and declined absolutely to do anything of the sort.

The certificates referred to there, so far as I have been able to learn and so far as the State Department has been able to learn, exist only in Italy. They are not certificates of citizenship such as those with which we are familiar in France, which exist also in Germany and possibly in Russia and in other countries, which are mere certificates of citizenship, containing in France, at least, an extract from the register of birth. Those certificates are held by all French citizens, and have no effect or relation whatever to immigration. This is a certificate showing that a man has been sentenced for an offense or has not been sentenced for an offense, and, as I say, it exists solely in Italy.

The only purpose of this clause, which was recommended by the department, was for the better exclusion of criminals. It is really an addition to clauses now existing in the law to exclude criminals. If it could possibly have such an effect as is suggested in these telegrams, I think I am at liberty to say that not only none of the conferees but neither of the committees would have agreed to it for a moment; but it has and can have no such effect.

It so happens, as I have already said, that in Russia, when we asked for certificates of that character simply as a matter of information, they informed us explicitly that they had no such certificates; that it would be impracticable to use them, and that they could not think of doing it. The provision will have no effect on the question of immigration whatever; it is not intended in any degree to restrict or exclude anyone except criminals.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. Before adverting directly to the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts that this provision of the bill, if enacted, would not affect emigrants from Russia, because, as he thinks and as he has been informed by the State Department, there is no law or regulation in Russia that would require any such certificate as is provided for in the bill——

Mr. LODGE. I should say, to be exact, that the Department of Commerce and Labor, through the State Department, made these inquiries of Russia some time ago without reference to this section.

Mr. STONE. Before I go further than that, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if this particular clause in the report of the conference committee was inserted by the conference committee?

Mr. LODGE. It was.

Mr. STONE. I should like to know whether that clause, or anything of that nature, of which this might be considered an amendment or modification, appeared in either the House or the Senate bill?

Mr. LODGE. That clause was inserted in conference on the request of the department. The conferees considered very carefully whether it would come under any rule relating to exclu-sions from conference reports, and came to the conclusion that this was not open to that objection. The House, as I need not say here, is extremely strict on this point. On August 14, 1911, the present Speaker of the House made a ruling in regard to a point of order of a similar character, in which he said:

> The particular matter at bar seems to have been differentiated into two classes by previous Speakers: One, where the dispute between the two Houses is simply a dispute about rates or about amounts, and the other where one House strikes out everything after the enacting clause and substitutes an entirely new bill.

In this case it is just reversed. The House struck out everything after the enacting clause and inserted a new bill.

> Last Saturday there did not seem to be any precedents to fit the point under consideration. This time, fortunately for the Chair at least, four great Speakers of this House have ruled on the proposition involved—Mr. Speaker Colfax, who was subsequently Vice President; Mr. Speaker Carlisle, subsequently Senator and Secretary of the Treasury; Mr. Speaker Henderson; and Mr. Speaker CANNON.
> All four of these Speakers, three Republicans and one Democrat, have passed on this question, and they have all ruled that where everything after the enacting clause is stricken out and a new bill substituted it gives the conferees very wide discretion, extending even to the substitution of an entirely new bill. The Chair will have three of these decisions read, and will have the decision of Mr. Speaker CANNON, just read by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], incorporated into this opinion, because the question ought to be definitely settled during the life of this Congress at least.

Mr. CANNON's ruling was in regard to the passport clause inserted in the immigration bill of 1907. He then said that that was in order because the whole subject of immigration was open to the conference. The present Speaker of the House has adopted those opinions from those four Speakers, the previous Speakers—Mr. Colfax, Mr. Carlisle, Mr. Henderson, and Mr. CANNON—and he makes the fifth, holding that where the entire subject is before the conference it is open to the conferees to substitute, if they so desire, an entirely new bill.

This conference committee, I desire to say, has been extremely careful. After full consideration it came to the conclusion that this particular clause relating to the subject of immigration, and especially to the exclusion of criminals, was distinctly in order under the rulings of the Speakers to whom I have referred.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to request the Senator from Massachusetts, if he has it before him, to read the amendment made by the conferees upon this particular subject.

Mr. LODGE. It is in the exclusion list, and reads:

> Citizens or subjects of any country that issues penal certificates or certificates of character who do not produce to the immigration officials such a certificate.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield for a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senator from Massachusetts refers to telegrams relative to this matter. I presume those are the same as the telegram I have received signed by Mr. Lewis Marshall, president of the American Jewish committee.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; that is the one.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It would seem to me that this telegram was prompted to him even after the conference committee's report, and I would ask that the telegram be read for the edification of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. A precisely similar telegram has already been read and gone into the RECORD.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I was not aware of that, and I withdraw the request.

Mr. LODGE. It was offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Then I send the telegram which I hold in my hand to the desk.

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. I find, on page 436 of the Manual, a rule laid down, which I suppose is the governing law in proceedings of this character in this body. Clause 29, on page 436, is as follows:

> Conferees may not include in their report matters not committed to them by either House.

Mr. LODGE. That undoubtedly is the case as a general statement of law; but in this instance the House struck out the entire bill, and the Speakers whom I have quoted have held that when the entire bill was stricken out by one House and another bill substituted, then the whole subject was before the conferees. The only point on which there is even a doubt—and Mr. Speaker Colfax holds back on that point and leaves it open—is when in the two bills there is a clause in precisely the same language which both Houses have agreed to. Speaker Colfax expressed a doubt whether such a clause could be touched; but beyond that all the Speakers have ruled with the greatest breadth that where the entire bill was stricken out the whole subject was before the conference, and that where anything that fairly relates to the conference—of course, I am excluding amounts of money or rates of duty—that where anything relating to the subject came before the conferees connected with other portions of the bill, it was in order for the conferees to act upon it, and it was not to be considered new matter.

Mr. STONE. Has the Senator any ruling made by a presiding officer of this body on that point?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator is familiar with the procedure here and is aware, of course, that our procedure on new matter in conference reports has been very different from the practice in the other body. In the House, if a point of order of new matter or a point that the conferees have gone beyond their power is made and sustained, that sends the bill back to conference without any action by the body at all. It is like a point of order made on their own bill. That has never been the practice here. If the Senate felt that there was a clause that ought not to have been put in the bill they have sent the bill back to conference with implied instructions to the conferees that they should make the necessary change. Our practice on the question of new matter reported by conferees has been extremely loose.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, as I understand the facts in this case, they are substantially as the Senator has stated them. The Senate passed a bill; the House struck out all after the enacting clause of that bill and inserted another bill. In the main, the chief provisions of the two measures were the same, though there were some differences.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no. If the Senator will excuse me, the only provision that was the same in principle was the sole provision put in by the House—the illiteracy test. Everything else, including the administrative provisions, was stricken out by the House.

Mr. STONE. I know they were stricken out——

Mr. LODGE. They substituted nothing but the illiteracy test in their own form.

Mr. STONE. I so understand; but the bill, then, to which the House agreed after the enacting clause contained in the main provisions similar to those which were embodied in the Senate bill.

Mr. LODGE. It contained nothing but the illiteracy test—not a single sentence beyond the illiteracy test.

Mr. STONE. However that may be, the question submitted——

Mr. LODGE. The whole Senate bill was before the conferees as well as, of course, the illiteracy test, the substitute by the House; that is, the whole subject was before the conferees.

Mr. STONE. The question before the conferees was as to the differences growing out of the two bills.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; the whole subject was before them.

Mr. STONE. The differences between the two bills. Those were the issues. The conferees insert very important independent provisions on their own motion. It seems to me that is in conflict with the rules that govern this body; and I intend to make a point of order and have it ruled upon.

Mr. LODGE. That is a question to be decided by the Senate.

Mr. STONE. I know it is—to be decided by the Senate, but before——

Mr. LODGE. We do not follow the House practice.

Mr. STONE. But before that is done I wish to call the Senator's attention and the attention of the Senate to something which, I think, will show that the Senator from Massachusetts is in error about there being no laws and regulations in Russia that would compel a citizen of that country to present certificates such as are provided for in this bill.

Mr. LODGE. They have certificates of citizenship, but I do not think they have certificates of this character.

Mr. STONE. I hold in my hand a statement of the Russian regulations for emigrants. It was prepared and circulated by the Russian-American Steamship Line, a line plying between the ports of Russia and the United States, and bringing a great many emigrants to this country. I assume that that corporation would not likely be mistaken as to what the laws and regulations are in Russia. It would not be likely to issue and publish a document for general circulation that would be calculated to retard immigration when they were seeking as great a number of passengers as possible.

I am going to ask the Secretary to read this excerpt from the publication to which I have referred, and I wish to invite the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Vermont to its language, and see what they think of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

RUSSIAN REGULATIONS FOR EMIGRANTS.

Every Russian subject, in order to be able to leave his country, must have a passport issued by the governor of his State. Every person, in order to be able to secure such a frontier passport, must have his legal papers on which he is allowed to live in Russia in good order—that is, such papers should not expire just about the time he desires to emigrate. The following are the different legal papers recognized and on which a Russian subject can secure his frontier passport:

State passport.
Legal ordinary passport (Meszansky passport).
Local ordinary passport (Wolostnoi passport).

A Russian in possession of any one of these passports must have the names of all the members of his family desiring to emigrate entered on same, should the members of his family not be in possession of their own passport.

Wives and minor children, in case they desire to travel alone, although in possession of their own passport or their names are entered on their husbands' or parents' passport, must secure a certificate from their husband or parents agreeing to their journey, which must be certified by a notary public and by the police department. In villages these papers are signed by the local head of such village (Starosta).

Wives and minor children whose husbands and parents have emigrated to the United States or Canada and desire to have their families join them can obtain a frontier passport, if they are in possession of a power of attorney from their husband or parents, allowing them to leave Russia. This power of attorney must be made out in duplicate, the husband or parent must sign same, have his signature attested by a notary public, and afterwards legalized by a Russian consul. One of these copies remains on file with the consul and the other is returned to the sender to be sent to his wife and children in Russia. This power of attorney is recognized in Russia, even if the husband or father has left that country unlawfully.

No male Russian subject, if he is 18 years of age, can leave his country unless besides being in possession of his passport he has documentary proof that he has presented himself for military service and has been refused for some reason or other. If such subject is 21 years of age, he must have documentary proof that he has served the army or that his name has been added to the reserve list, if these facts are not already mentioned in his passport.

In addition to being in possession of any one of these papers, a Russian subject must also present a certificate from the police department of the city where he resides, that there is no objection against such passenger leaving his home. In villages such certificates are issued by the village authorities and are obtained without any difficulty, if the person applying for same has no criminal or civil judgment against him, or if a fine has not been imposed upon him. A Russian in possession of these papers can then apply for a frontier passport to the governor of his State.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have said that I have read those passport regulations of Russia. This clause in the bill under consideration would not exclude anybody who failed to have a passport as required by those Russian provisions or failed to have evidence of military service. No one would be excluded on that ground under this clause. It relates to a particular kind of a certificate, affecting solely the question of whether the immigrant has been convicted of crime; and those certificates are not issued by the Russian Government at all. All the clauses that have been read in that paper relate to the getting of passports. A man does not have to have a passport to come into this country and there is nothing in this clause which makes it a positive requisite.

Mr. STONE. But, Mr. President, this regulation does provide that before a man can secure a passport he must present a certificate to the Russian authorities from the police department of the city where he resides, saying that there is no objection to his emigration.

Mr. LODGE. That is perfectly true; I understand that. But that is preliminary to getting a passport; and if a man comes here from Russia without a passport that does not exclude him.

Mr. STONE. Here is a provision requiring him to get a certificate.

Mr. LODGE. But it does not require a passport. It is a particular kind of certificate—a certificate of freedom from criminal conviction.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Will not the adoption of this law encourage Russia or any other foreign country to alter its domestic law so as to provide for the issuance of certificates of character, knowing that the withholding of such a certificate will cause this country to refuse admission to one of its subjects?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think so, Mr. President, because, as I have already stated, we endeavored, as I am informed through the Department of Commerce and Labor, to get some arrangement with Russia as well as with other countries for the issuance of penal certificates—certificates of character—and Russia absolutely declined to enter into such an arrangement, saying it was totally impracticable.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator whether this clause does not make it possible for every foreign power to limit and restrict emigration on its borders? In other words, will it not make it possible for Russia and other foreign powers to defeat our policy as to expatriation?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think it is possible, Mr. President. I do not see how it could be tortured into anything of that kind.

Mr. O'GORMAN. All Russia has to do is to pass a law prohibiting its subjects from leaving the country without securing a certificate of character, in which event, if this law were to be adopted, we would nullify the principle of expatriation, for which this country has stood against the world.

Mr. LODGE. I am entirely in agreement with the Senator about the principle of expatriation. As I said when I began, if I thought this clause would have any such effect as is depicted in these telegrams, not one of the conferees nor any Member of either House, I think, would have agreed to it. But I totally disagree with the Senator in the idea that it can be twisted into anything of the sort. This is a particular kind of certificate.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, if an immigrant has a penal certificate, the chances are he will not offer it. But the issuance of a penal certificate, with access to the records, which we should have through our consular officers, would enable us to know when criminals come.

Mr. O'GORMAN. While it confers that benefit, it puts it within the power of every foreign nation to restrict, if not to prohibit, its subjects leaving that country to come to the United States.

Mr. LODGE. I do not see that it does, because it is a particular kind of certificate. There is only one country that now issues them. They have been required in the case of Italian immigrants for some time. I do not mean to say they have been required as a matter of regulation. They have been asked for; they have been used. They have never led to the exclusion of anyone nor to any remonstrance that I am aware of.

Mr. O'GORMAN. As I understand the Senator from Massachusetts, this proposal did not originate with anyone of the conferees, either in the Senate or in the House. The Members of the Senate and of the House have given diligent thought and study to this subject for many months. It does seem to me that a gratuitous suggestion, coming from the head of one of our departments, that dealing with immigration should not find a lodgment in this law, when it affects the spirit of our country, and more particularly the right of expatriation, for which this country stood alone 100 years ago.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. In reply to the Senator from New York, I should like to say that one of the greatest problems that was presented to the Immigration Commission for solution was the question of how best to exclude the criminal classes from this country. The members of the commission studied that question very thoroughly, and after the completion of their work they called the attention of the President of the United States—both the President now in office and the one who preceded him—to the possibility, under the law authorizing the appointment of the commission, of securing agreements with different European governments under which regulations might be made for the exclusion of the criminal classes. That scheme has not worked out.

The commission then took up the question of reaching that evil by legislation. I think we were all united in the opinion that if the different nations of Europe were in the habit of keeping these records and issuing these individual certificates the requirement that they should be presented on admission to this country would furnish a very good means of reaching that evil. When this bill was framed that matter was overlooked, and it came up in conference. It there appeared that only Italy issues these certificates at this time. For that reason the conferees, believing that they had authority to introduce that clause into the bill at this stage of the proceedings, and their attention being called to it by the department, thought it best to do so.

The point that I wanted to make, in answer to the Senator from New York, was that this was a question which was very carefully considered by the commission. The question was a difficult one. There is no doubt about that. They thought that the requirement of such certificates on the part of those coming from countries granting such certificates would be an admirable means for keeping out the criminal classes.

I do not know that I need say anything further by way of explanation of the reason why the conferees adopted that provision.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Vermont will permit me to ask him a question for information, for what purpose are these certificates of character issued?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It is simply to show the criminal record of the alien, I understand. In Italy the individual can receive such a certificate and bring it with him. The Government issues it and he brings it with him when he comes here.

Mr. STONE. Then there is no agreement between this country and Italy that would give any official character to the certificate, so far as concerns our law or the administration of it?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Not at all. It is received as a matter of evidence of the fact that the man's record is clear so far as criminal prosecutions are concerned.

Mr. LODGE. That is all it does.

Mr. STONE. Is a passport necessary in Italy, so that without it an Italian can not go aboard a ship for foreign travel or for emigration?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. They do not issue passports, I understand.

Mr. STONE. They issue a certificate, then, which in a measure takes the place of a passport?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. No; there is no certificate issued which is recognized by this Government.

Mr. STONE. That is to say, it gives the consent of that Government for the emigrant to embark?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I know of nothing of that kind. Does the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. No; I know nothing of it.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I know of nothing whatever of that kind.

Mr. STONE. I understand that is the case under the regulations in Russia.

Mr. LODGE. That is a passport.

Mr. STONE. I know it is a passport; but a Russian can not get a passport until he presents his certificate.

Mr. LODGE. Under this clause, nobody could possibly be excluded because he did not have a passport as required by the Russian law.

I only want to say this in connection with the point of order: The Senator from Vermont called my attention to it, and I had not had time to look it up. The point of order that is made by the Senator from Missouri was made by Mr. SABATH in the House. He read the same extract from Jefferson's Manual the Senator from Missouri has read. Then this occurred:

THE SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

It was overruled in the House on the ground to which I have already alluded, which was set forth with elaboration by the Speaker, on the 14th of August, 1911. I think his ruling was sound.

I will ask to have the decision of the Speaker of August 14, 1911, printed in the RECORD; also the record in regard to the point of order which was made on the 17th of January, 1913.

Mr. President, I do not think, under the best practice, there can be any doubt as to the point of order.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Would it not offend the rules of the Senate not only to introduce in this discussion, but to make part of the record, something that transpired in the House?

Mr. LODGE. I think not. I think rulings of previous Speakers may legitimately come in as part of the record.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The Senator is alluding not only to the ruling of the Speaker, but to the attitude assumed by a Member of the House on the question.

Mr. LODGE. It always has been the practice to quote the rulings of Speakers on points of parliamentary law. I do not think that infringes the very wise practice of not referring to debates in the House. This is a point of parliamentary law affecting the procedure of both Houses, and I think it properly comes in.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Aug. 14, 1911.]

THE SPEAKER. The particular matter at bar seems to have been differentiated into two classes by previous Speakers: One, where the dispute between the two Houses is simply a dispute about rates or about amounts, and the other where one House strikes out everything after the enacting clause and substitutes an entirely new bill.

The Chair has no doubt whatever that at least one contention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is correct. That is, that if it is a mere squabble about amounts or rates, the conferees can not go above the higher amount or rate named in one of the two bills or lower than the lower rate named in one of the two bills. But that is not this case. In this case the Senate struck out everything after the enacting clause and substituted a new bill. Last Saturday there did not seem to be any precedents to fit the point under consideration. This time, fortunately for the Chair at least, four great Speakers of this House have ruled on the proposition involved—Mr. Speaker Colfax, who was subsequently Vice President; Mr. Speaker Carlisle, subsequently Senator and Secretary of the Treasury; Mr. Speaker Henderson, and Mr. Speaker CANNON. The Chair does not know anything about the parliamentary clerks to Mr. Speaker Colfax and Mr. Speaker Carlisle, but the Chair is fully persuaded that every Member of this House who has served in prior Congresses will agree that Mr. Speaker Henderson and Mr. Speaker CANNON had the advantage of being advised by one of the most skillful parliamentarians in this country, the present Member from Maine [Mr. HINDS]. [Applause.]

All four of these Speakers, three Republicans and one Democrat, have passed on this question, and they have all ruled that where everything after the enacting clause is stricken out and a new bill substituted it gives the conferees very wide discretion, extending even to the substitution of an entirely new bill. The Chair will have three of these decisions read, and will have the decision of Mr. Speaker CANNON, just read by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], incorporated into this opinion, because the question ought to be definitely settled during the life of this Congress at least. The Chair will first have the decision of Mr. Speaker Colfax read, and the Clerk will announce the volume and section of Hinds' Precedents.

Hinds' Precedents, volume 5, section 6421:

"Where one House strikes out all of the bill of the other after the enacting clause and inserts a new text, and the differences over this substitute are referred to conference, the managers have a wide discretion in incorporating germane matters, and may even report a new bill on the subject. On March 3, 1865, Mr. Robert C. Schenck, of Ohio, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill H. R. 51, entitled 'An act to establish a bureau of freedman's affairs,' reported that the Senate had receded from their amendment, which was a substitute, and the committee had agreed upon, as a substitute, a new bill, entitled 'An act to establish a bureau for the relief of freedmen and refugees.'

"As soon as the report had been read, Mr. William S. Holman, of Indiana, made the point that the report did not come within the scope of the conference committee. It did not report the proceedings of the Senate or an agreement by the committee on an amendment to the Senate's amendment to the House bill, but it reported an entire substitute for both the original bill and the substitute adopted by the Senate, and it established a department unprovided for by either of the other bills."

The Speaker, Mr. Colfax, said:

"The Chair understands that the Senate adopted a substitute for the House bill. If the two Houses had agreed upon any particular language or any part of a section, the committee of conference could not change that; but the Senate having stricken out the bill of the House and inserted another one, the committee of conference have the right to strike out that and report a substitute in its stead. Two separate bills have been referred to the committee, and they can take either one of them or a new bill entirely, or a bill embracing parts of either. They have a right to report any bill that is germane to the bills referred to them."

On an appeal the Chair was sustained—yeas 89, nays 35.

THE SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the ruling of Mr. Speaker Carlisle.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 6422 of Hinds' Precedents, volume 5:

"6422. On August 3, 1886, the House had under consideration the report of the committee of conference on the river and harbor bill.

"Mr. William M. Springer, of Illinois, made the point of order that the conferees had included new matter in their report.

"The Speaker, Mr. Carlisle, ruled:

"The House passed a bill to provide for the improvement of rivers and harbors and making an appropriation for that purpose. That bill was sent to the Senate, where it was amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting a different proposition in some respects, but a proposition having the same object in view. When that came back to the House it was treated, and properly so, as one single amendment and not as a series of amendments as was contended for by some gentlemen on the floor at the time.

"It was nonconcurred in by the House and a conference was appointed upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. That conference committee having met, reports back the Senate amendment as a single amendment with various amendments, and recommends that it be concurred in with the other amendments which the committee has incorporated in its report. The question, therefore, is not whether the provisions to which the gentleman from Illinois alludes are germane to the original bill as it passed the House, but whether they are germane to the Senate amendment which the House had under consideration and which was referred to the committee of conference. If germane to that amendment, the point of order can not be sustained on the ground claimed by the gentleman from Illinois. The Chair thinks they are germane to the Senate amendment, for, though different from the provisions contained in the Senate amendment, they relate to the same subject, and therefore the Chair overrules the point of order."

THE SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the decision by Mr. Speaker Henderson.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 6423, volume 5, Hinds' Precedents:

"6423. On February 25, 1901, Mr. GILBERT N. HAUGEN, of Iowa, presented the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 2799) to carry into effect the stipulations of article 7 of the treaty between the United States and Spain, concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898.

"The conferees recommended that the House recede from its amendment, which was in the nature of a substitute, striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting a new text; and they further recommended that the House agree to the Senate text with certain specified amendments.

"Mr. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, of Alabama, made a point of order that the conferees had exceeded their authority and incorporated in their report matters not in difference between the two Houses. The House text had substituted reference to the Court of Claims instead of to the commission proposed by the Senate text. The conferees not only recommended the adoption of the Senate text, but had enlarged the provisions of it, making the number of commissioners five instead of three, although, he asserted, there was no issue between the two Houses on this point, and also materially changing the Senate text in those portions relating to the right of appeal.

"After debate the Speaker, Mr. Henderson, held:

"The current of authorities in regard to the action of the conferees is that they must be held strictly to the consideration of such matters as are in issue beween the two Houses. That is the general governing principle, and a most valuable one and a necessary one. In this case, however, the Chair sees no difficulty. As stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Mahon], the Senate presents a proposition for a commission; the House turns that down, so to speak, and adopts an amendment, by way of substitute, providing that these Spanish claims shall be referred for determination to the Court of Claims. In other words, the Senate contends for a commission, the House for the Court of Claims. The method of treating these Spanish claims is thus put in issue. The House, when it sent over to the Senate its amendment by way of substitute, said: 'We will not entertain your method; we have a better one; we offer you a substitute whereby these matters shall be referred to the Court of Claims instead of a commission.' That puts in issue every question bearing upon this controversy between the two Houses. The able remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] have not suggested a single question that is not brought in issue between the two Houses in the present position of this question. The conferees have not gone beyond the matters in issue. On this point the Chair will ask the Clerk to read from the Parliamentary Precedents of the House of Representatives, section 1420, a decision made by Speaker Colfax.

"The section having been read, the Speaker concluded:

"The House will readily see that the precedent just read bears strongly on this question, although in the present case the conferees have not gone so far as they did in that case. There is nothing here that is not germane to the main issue. In reference to no matter in controversy between the two Houses have the conferees attempted to trench upon or change a single expression that the two Houses have agreed upon. The Senate sends to this House a bill for which the House presents a substitute, and the report of the conferees seeks only to treat of matters in issue. The Chair feels clear that he is justified in overruling the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the report."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the decision by Mr. Speaker CANNON.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 6424, volume 5, Hinds' Precedents:

"6424. Where the disagreement is as to an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the entire text of a bill, the managers have the whole subject before them and may exercise a broad discretion as to details.

"A point of order against a conference report should be made or reserved after the report is read and before the reading of the statement.

"On February 18, 1907, Mr. William S. Bennet, of New York, submitted the report of the managers of the conference on the bill (S. 4403) entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved March 3, 1903.'

"Before the report was read Mr. JOHN L. BURNETT, of Alabama, proposed to reserve a point of order.

"The Speaker said:

"The Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama, who desired to reserve points of order, that it is the impression of the Chair that the point of order, if any is made, is in time after the report is read; but if the gentleman desires, out of abundant caution, he may reserve at this time points of order. * * * All points of order are reserved. The proper time to reserve points of order, as the Chair is informed, on conference reports is after the conference report is read and before the statement is read."

The report having been read, a point of order was made by Mr. BURNETT, who insisted that the managers had exceeded their authority in inserting the following provisions:

"Provided further, That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign government to its citizens to go to any country other than the United States or to any insular possession of the United States or to the Canal Zone are being used for the purpose of enabling the holders to come to the continental territory of the United States, to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President may refuse to permit such citizens of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such other country or from such insular possessions or from the Canal Zone."

And in another portion of the report the following:

"SEC. 42. It shall not be lawful for the master of a steamship or other vessel wherein immigrant passengers, or passengers other than cabin passengers, have been taken at any port or place in a foreign country or dominion (ports and places in foreign territory contiguous to the United States excepted) to bring such vessel and passengers to any port or place in the United States unless the compartments, spaces, and accommodations hereinafter mentioned have been provided, allotted, maintained, and used for and by such passengers during the entire voyage; that is to say, in a steamship the compartments or spaces, unobstructed by cargo, stores, or goods, shall be of sufficient dimensions to allow for each and every passenger carried or brought therein 18 clear superficial feet of deck allotted to his or her use, if the compartment or space is located on the main deck or on the first deck next below the main deck of the vessel, and 20 clear superficial feet of deck allotted to his or her use for each passenger carried or brought therein if the compartment or space is located on the second deck below the main deck of the vessel: Provided, That if the height between the lower passenger deck and the deck immediately above it is less than 7 feet," etc. (continuing in detail).

After debate, the Speaker [Mr. CANNON] held:

"The Senate during the last session passed an act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States,'" etc.

"This Senate bill was broad in its provisions and substantially amended the immigration laws then in force. It was very general in its nature, as will be found upon examination. The bill came to the House. The House struck out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause, by way of amendment, and passed a substitute therefor. So that the House entirely disagreed with every line, with every paragraph, with every section of the Senate bill—everything except the enacting clause—and proposed a substitute therefor, and this substitute, on examination, is found to be a complete codification and amendment of existing immigration laws and, incidentally, the labor laws connected therewith, especially those dealing with contract labor, and with many other questions to which it is not necessary to refer. And in the final clause of the House substitute there is the provision:

"'That the act of March 3, 1903, being an act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, except section 34 thereof, and the act of March 22, 1904, being an act to extend the exemption from head tax to citizens of Newfoundland entering the United States, and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to repeal, alter, or amend existing laws relating to the immigration or exclusion of Chinese persons,' etc.

"So that not only does the House by its substitute amendment codify and amend all the laws touching immigration, but incidentally changes those relating to labor, especially contract labor. The House substitute is found to be abounding in section after section with the prohibition of contract labor in connection with immigration, and with various other provisions of a similar nature.

"The House substitute, by way of amendment, went to the Senate. The Senate disagreed to every line, paragraph, and section of the House provision; and with that disagreement to the Senate provision, and with the House provision in effect a disagreement to the original Senate bill, the whole matter went to conference. That is, by this action there was committed to conference the whole subject of immigration, and, as connected therewith, the prohibition of immigration by way of contract labor in the fullest sense of the words. * * * The Chair has not had time to hunt up all the provisions of the immigration laws of the country, but the repealing clause, with the exception as proposed by the House and the disagreement of the Senate, sent this whole matter, in the opinion of the Chair, to the conferees.

"Now, then, there is but one provision that is seriously contended for in the point of order that is made, and that is to be found on page 2 of the House conference report, No. 6607, and is as follows:

"'That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign government to its citizens to go to any country other than the United States or to any insular possession of the United States or to the Canal Zone are being used for the purpose of enabling the holders to come to the continental territory of the United States to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President may refuse to permit such citizens of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States, from such other country or from such insular possessions or from the Canal Zone.'

"Now, then, one of the principal efforts in legislation heretofore have been to exclude labor that is brought in under contract or is promoted, so to speak; and the very reason of that legislation has been and is that the labor conditions in the United States should not be affected unfavorably. Three sections of the House substitute deal expressly with that question. It is not like unto the precedent cited by the gentleman from Mississippi, which was made by the ruling of Mr. Speaker Henderson. The only thing there was a disagreement between the House and the Senate as to certain specified claims, and between the Senate and House as to certain other specified claims. The conferees in that case, taking in the whole sea or ocean of claims, from the birth of Christ to the supposed death of the man with hoofs and horns, picked out a number of claims that the House or Senate never had heard of or dealt with and put them in the conference report, and Mr. Speaker Henderson properly sustained the point of order to the conference report. The Chair has no difficulty nor any hesitation in holding that this is germane first; and, second, that it comes within the scope of the disagreement between the House and Senate as affects immigration on the one hand and the interest of labor on the other, and therefore overrules the point of order."

"Mr. BURNETT having appealed, the appeal was laid on the table on motion of Mr. SERENO E. PAYNE, of New York, by a vote of yeas 198, nays 104."

The SPEAKER. It will be observed from one of these decisions that in days gone by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] had the other end of this question than the one he has to-day [laughter], and that he was overruled. In view of this long line of decisions by illustrious Speakers, the Chair overrules the point of order of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Jan. 17, 1913.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the report can not be considered in the House until the original papers are before the House, and that the original papers are not in the possession of the House. I understand the original Senate bill is in the possession of the Clerk. The House adopted an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause, so it is claimed.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker wishes that the gentleman would go over that again. The House will be in order.

Mr. MANN. The House, I believe, agreed to an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause. Under the rules and the laws and the practice that amendment is sent by resolution from the House to the Senate. I have the form of the resolution in my hand, and the form of the resolution is in the possession of the Clerk. It has to be certified to or attested by the Clerk. That has not been done, and the papers that are before the Speaker, I have no doubt the original papers, properly attested by the Clerk, are in the possession of the Senate. I make the point of order that, in the absence of the original papers, the House can not consider the conference report.

The SPEAKER. How did the Senate ever get possession of it, then?

Mr. MANN. I suppose the Senate has possession of the original papers. I do not know what the Senate has done about it.

The SPEAKER. The original Senate bill is here, properly attested by "Charles G. Bennett, Secretary," and "H. M. Rose, Assistant Secretary."

Mr. MANN. The Senate bill is properly attested, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER. The House part, that is attached to the original Senate bill, does not seem to have been attested by the House Clerk. If we can get hold of him we can have him sign it nunc pro tunc.

Mr. MANN. By unanimous consent I suppose he could do that.

The SPEAKER. Why would it take unanimous consent? The Speaker has never investigated it, but he thinks he would have the same power in that kind of a case that a nisi prius judge has. The Chair is not certain about that, however.

Mr. MANN. I take it that we are entitled to the original papers.

The SPEAKER. Unquestionably.

Mr. MANN. We must proceed on what is officially before the House. The House did have this bill up for consideration and did agree to an amendment. We have not official information at this time as to what that amendment consists of. In the absence of the original papers, and if we adopt the practice of considering a bill without the original papers and without the attestation of the Clerk, no one knows what might be presented as the original papers.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that the gentleman's point of order comes too late. The House has proceeded to consider such papers as it had before it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that that point of order is not well taken. This document, purporting to be the conference report, has been read. That is all the proceeding that has been taken on this matter except the parliamentary skirmish that took place earlier in the day. The Chair does not think that the gentleman's point of order comes too late.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I desire to know whether it is now in order to raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to raise the question of consideration until this other matter is determined. The Chair does not have any doubt about the right of the Speaker to order the Clerk to sign that document.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the question is whether the original papers are the ones that were presented to the Senate. Is the Speaker prepared to say that the resolution which was sent to the Senate, not attested, is not merely a copy of the papers that we want—is not merely a copy of the papers we are entitled to?

The SPEAKER. Here is the situation: We have a certified copy of the Senate bill. Then we have the conference report sent over by the Senate, with this House amendment, striking out all after the enacting clause, and enacting a new law, so far as the House could make a law, and the Clerk failed to sign it. But the fact that the Senate bill has come back here attached to the House amendment seems to the Chair to be reasonable proof that the document that purports to be the report from the House that is included in this bundle of papers is the same document that the Clerk sent over to the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Well, that might be a guess. How can the Chair know that? It is presumed that the officers of the House properly perform their duties, in which case they sent to the Senate an attested copy of the House amendment.

The SPEAKER. Now comes the Clerk of the House and attests it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Without examining it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have him examine it.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, it is rather late in the day for him to sign it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is a lawyer——

Mr. MANN. Used to be——

The SPEAKER. And has seen a hundred times, if not more, orders entered nunc pro tunc in a nisi prius court without objection from anybody. If there was any doubt about this being the correct paper, of course we would not tolerate it for a second.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know but that I would rule the same way the Speaker has ruled if I were in the chair.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair thinks himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I make a further point of order. The matter is before the House, and perhaps some other Members desire to make a point of order. But the conferees have included matters in the conference report which were not in disagreement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend a moment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] a while ago asked the Chair if the time had come to raise the question of consideration.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to raise that question when the time comes.

Mr. MANN. I do not think that question can be raised until there has been a disposition of the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think I addressed the Chair in the interim between the determination of one point of order and the other.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that if the House is not going to consider the bill there is no use arguing points of order about it.

Mr. MANN. If the question is raised, I think it is probably beyond a point of order, but I do not care.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman on his point of order as soon as this question is determined. The question is, Will the House now consider this conference report on the immigration bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the consideration of this motion preclude the making of other motions, such as to lay on the table, or should they be made now?

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; they can be made afterwards.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HAMILL. For the purpose of making a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMILL. Is it in order now, before the determination of this motion, to present a motion for the postponement of the consideration of this conference report?

The SPEAKER. That will come afterwards. The question is, Will the House consider this conference report at this time?

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I thought the Senator from Massachusetts had concluded.

Mr. LODGE. No; I had not. I have just a few more words to say.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will permit me, I can say right now what I desire to say.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. The proposed provision for penal certificates follows immediately after the clause with reference to exclusion on account of crime?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; it is in connection with that.

Mr. SIMMONS. The clause immediately preceding is:

Persons who have committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude.

Then follows the clause that is in controversy. I imagine that everybody is anxious for this country to exclude the criminal classes of Europe. I imagine that one of the most difficult things immigrant officers have to deal with is the matter of determining who are subject to this provision and who are not.

The Senator from New York suggests that if this amendment inserted by the conferees is allowed to stand, the countries of Europe might pass laws requiring these penal certificates and thereby exclude the classes that otherwise might be admitted to this country. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not think it would help this country to exclude the criminal classes if all the countries of Europe were to adopt laws providing for penal certificates, so that we might have the finding of those countries that this and that man was a criminal without having to search the records ourselves in order to get the information which it is so difficult to secure?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, may I say a word?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from North Carolina. I will say that I think it would be of very great assistance.

I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I am afraid the Senator from North Carolina misconceives the view I entertain with respect to the harmful tendencies of this provision. If this provision be adopted, it will be within the power of every foreign nation to make a rule or enact a law requiring every person, before leaving the country, to procure a certificate of good character, and then they may be indifferent about furnishing the certificate; so that the harm will not reach the criminal alluded to by the Senator from North Carolina. As to the criminal, we are in perfect accord; but it may be the means by which honest, worthy men, eager to come to the United States, may be prevented from landing here, because they may be denied a certificate to which in justice they would be entitled, but which may be withheld from them so long as it suits the purposes of the nation in question, so long as it is anxious to restrict, discourage, or prohibit its subjects from coming to the United States.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I wish to suggest to the Senator from New York that if we found any foreign nation adopting any such plan as that, to prohibit the emigration of industrious and worthy citizens, we could very easily repeal this clause.

Mr. LODGE. Perfectly easily.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I do not know how easily it could be done.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. We have all stood against any clause of that kind which affected honest, upright citizens.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, what the Senator from Alabama says is perfectly true, of course. Nobody would for a moment favor such a clause if it could be twisted into the uses which the Senator from New York thinks possible. If anything of that sort occurred it would be a matter of great ease to change it.

I will say just one word more. Italy has issued these certificates. We have used them, of course, as a matter of evidence. It has not had the effect of checking emigration from Italy at all. It has been a protection to the innocent immigrant, because there he had complete proof at once that he had no criminal record, whereas it is a very easy thing for some enemy, perhaps somebody on board ship he has a quarrel with, to make a suggestion that he has a criminal record, and then he is held up for days that the matter may be looked into. My own belief is that it protects the innocent instead of injuring them. But if any such result flowed from this, it is within our power to stop it in a moment. There would not be the slightest difficulty about that.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this is but one small clause, easily disposed of if put to bad uses, in a great bill such as occupied the attention of Congress, through the Immigration Commission and through both its committees, for years. It contains new provisions of the very greatest importance to the better administration of our criminal laws.

I am not speaking now of the illiteracy test, which has been the point in contest. For instance, we have some 15,000 aliens excluded under our laws who come back here as seamen on ships, shipping just for the voyage, getting in those ships and passing into this country, perhaps diseased, perhaps with criminal records, without any examination at all. For the first time we have made provision for meeting that very serious difficulty.

The whole administration of the Immigration Service has been greatly improved by this bill. An immense amount of work has been put upon it. The bill passed the Senate carrying all these provisions, except the one we are now discussing, with only 9 votes against it. It passed the House by a vote of over 3 to 1. This is the Senate bill substantially as it was before us. I described the slight changes in the illiteracy test, and those the Senate conferees receded from and made it only reading instead of both reading and writing, as it passed here.

The rest of the bill is substantially the bill as it passed the Senate by that great vote. In the same way the House passed it by overwhelming majorities. The conferees have been at work on it for many days. It has been a bill which involved the greatest possible care and study. I have no doubt there are mistakes in it; in a bill of such magnitude there are certain to be mistakes; but I believe it is as nearly perfect as the department, the Immigration Commission, the immigrant officials, and the two Houses of Congress through their committee can make it, and I am extremely anxious that the report should be agreed to.

If I did not firmly believe there was misapprehension in regard to this clause and the fears suggested by the Senator from New York were wholly unfounded, I should feel exactly as he does, but I am certain that if by any possibility, which I consider to be out of the question, there should be any attempt to use that clause for the purposes the Senator from New York suggests, no Member of Congress would tolerate it for a moment, and the clause would be stricken from the law as rapidly as the forms of legislation could be complied with. But I think it would be a great misfortune not to pass this bill now and send it to the President.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts one further question. Is it not a fact that in Russia, perhaps in Germany and in some other European countries, a native who leaves the country in violation of the rules respecting the military organizations and the necessity of enlisting is regarded as a criminal?

Mr. LODGE. They are not regarded as criminals by us, and this would not affect that.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I am speaking now of those foreign countries. To be specific: Is it not the case with Germany to-day that a subject of that country who leaves without performing his military service is a criminal in the eyes of the German nation? It is true also in Russia and in other European countries. Would not such men be denied by those countries a certificate of good character no matter how virtuous their lives may have been and however deserving they are of taking a place in this country as citizens?

Mr. LODGE. The fact that he avoided military service would not become a crime until he reached here and if it was a crime for him to leave without having performed his military service.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I do not agree with the Senator with respect to that provision.

Mr. LODGE. Because if he stayed there he would not be a criminal.

Mr. O'GORMAN. If he stated that he intended to leave the country at a certain time, the certificate would be withheld, because in the view of the local authority he was seeking to evade military duty.

Mr. LODGE. I do not see how it could possibly be effective, because it would not be incurred until after he had come to this country.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I can see how it would occur before.

Mr. STONE. How would he get the certificate?

Mr. LODGE. They have the certificate now in Germany; that is, they have certificates of citizenship.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The Senator says he might escape and it would not be known until he came to this country, but would he come here with a good character certificate, such as is contemplated by this provision?

Mr. LODGE. Of course he would.

Mr. O'GORMAN. He would get it?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly he would have his character certificate. A man can get this certificate without intending to emigrate at all. It is not a prerequisite. It is issued to all citizens of Italy alike, as I understand it.

But, Mr. President, there is no danger. This is connected with the immediately preceding clause, which defines the persons excluded for crime who have committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude. You could not abandon that definition in deciding whether the man was a criminal.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I can not agree with the Senator from Massachusetts. There is no personal relation or connection between the two propositions. They are absolutely separate and distinct, because the force of one is not affected by the other provision. We have a naked, bald proposition that no citizen or subject of a foreign country shall be permitted to land in the United States unless he is able to produce to the immigrant officials a certificate of good character, if such certificates are issued in the foreign country. While at the present time, perhaps, there are only two countries, Italy and Russia, issuing such certificates——

Mr. LODGE. Russia issues no such certificate.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The equivalent of such a certificate.

Mr. LODGE. No.

Mr. O'GORMAN. It is so stated.

Mr. LODGE. Those are the conditions of getting a passport. This is a certificate, not a passport.

Mr. O'GORMAN. But apart from the circumstance as to whether Russia to-day issues such a certificate as suggested, in my judgment the adoption of this law will be an encouragement to every foreign power to immediately provide for the issuance of a certificate of character, knowing that the United States would not receive anyone not possessing such a certificate.

Mr. LODGE. I can only say that I do not think that interpretation could be put upon it; in the second place, I do not think there is the slightest practical danger of it because other countries have already refused; and, finally, if such a state of things should arise, it is within our power to end it within 48 hours.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, as a member of the Immigration Committee I would hesitate to discuss any of the provisions of the bill as it passed the Senate, because the chairman of this committee has shown the utmost courtesy to me, and I believe to the entire membership of the committee. I am, however, very much opposed to the new matter that has been inserted in the bill.

It may be true, as has been stated, that there is only one, although I believe there are two countries that issue penal certificates, namely, Italy and Asiatic Turkey. But be that as it may, Mr. President, I believe that this is a very unwise provision. Anyone familiar with the conditions in northern Europe to-day knows that in all of the north European countries they are, as a rule, very much opposed to the emigration of their young men from those countries.

Take Germany, for instance. Will anyone suppose that we would get the splendid citizenship from that country if this provision is left in the bill? Within six months it will bar out every male German and Scandinavian of the age for military service, as Germany, which does not desire the emigration of its young men, will be glad to take advantage of this provision. As to Italy, it puts it in the power of the mayors of the cities of Italy to issue certificates to their least desirable, and the bill provides no way of authenticating these certificates. But, above these considerations, the bill puts into the hands of European nations the right to say which of their citizens or subjects shall come to us. We have heretofore maintained our right to say whom we shall admit or exclude, but this proposal is to abdicate that right. It will keep out the Jews from Russia, Armenia, and Austria and the Armenian and other Christians from Turkey. If it had been in force in 1848, it would have kept out Germans like Carl Schurz, who fled after the German revolutions, and it is an outrageous provision to be thought of by a free country. Incidentally it nullifies, at the option of foreign countries, every favorable proviso in the immigration law.

The new provision I find is on page 3 of the conference report. I will read the first two lines on page 2:

> That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States.

Then it goes on to name different classes to be excluded, which I will omit, but the language inserted as a new matter reads as follows:

> Citizens or subjects of any country that issues penal certificates or certificates of character who do not produce to the immigration officials such a certificate.

It is perfectly evident, Mr. President, that unless the immigrants have those certificates they will not be admitted to this country. It is obvious that in any of the foreign countries where they are opposed to the emigration of their young men regulations will be made requiring these certificates, and these certificates they will not be able to obtain.

So, Mr. President, I believe that we should ask to have this report referred to the committee of conference. I do not care to argue the point of order made against it, but we know that it is new matter; that it is matter which was neither in the House bill nor in the Senate bill.

It has been said that we must restrict immigration in order to give labor a better and a fairer show.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GRONNA. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I believe, Mr. President, that this is a matter of sufficient importance to have it discussed in the presence of a quorum if it can be, and as a quorum will have to pass upon it ultimately, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin suggests the absence of a quorum, and the roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	du Pont	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. STONE. I desire to make the announcement that my colleague [Mr. REED] is unavoidably absent from the city.

Mr. KERN. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] on account of illness in his family.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from North Dakota will proceed.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, as I said, I am very much opposed to the provision that has been inserted in the conference report, because I believe that it is an unwise provision; that it is wholly unnecessary so far as this country is concerned; that it is a dangerous precedent to establish; and that it is an admission of weakness by us as a great Nation to say that we are incapable of providing whom we shall admit or whom we want to exclude as immigrants to this country.

It is claimed by some that we must not oppose this bill or any provision of it because it has been asked by labor organizations to have these provisions inserted. No one will go further to protect labor than I; but labor organizations, sir, have no more right to ask the American Congress to enact into law provisions that will be detrimental to the country at large than have any other class of our people. We who come from the West, who desire immigration, who are interested in seeing that progress is made, and that our new country is developed, feel that we have a right to be heard on this question. No one is more anxious than I to exclude every alien, I care not from what country he may come, who will not make a good law-abiding citizen when he comes to this country.

There is another provision which I want to touch upon briefly, and that is the increase in the head tax. I believe that tax was increased on the floor of the Senate. If I remember correctly, the bill as it was reported from the committee provided for a $4 head tax.

Mr. LODGE. It was increased on the floor of the Senate. Five dollars was the provision in the bill as it passed the Senate.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, what is the necessity of increasing this head tax, when in the year 1911 there was a surplus in this fund of more than a million dollars? Upon whom will this burden bear the heaviest? Will it fall upon those who come here seeking labor and then return to their native lands, or will it fall upon those who come here with their families seeking homes? We all know that those who come from the northern part of Europe are those who come with large families. This head tax must be paid by them; and it is upon that class of people that the burden will fall.

So far as the people from northern Europe are concerned, it matters but little what kind of illiteracy test you apply. Nearly all of those who come from Ireland, from Scotland, from England, from the Scandinavian countries, and from Germany can read and write. Statistics show that. I am not complaining, however, of the provision in this bill so far as the illiteracy test is concerned, because the old provisions of the law remain in the bill. The writing test is not applied as the Senate bill provided when it passed this Chamber.

I said a moment ago, and I say again, Mr. President, that subjects coming from such countries as Germany and the Scandinavian countries would be barred in a few months from coming into this country. None of those countries desire that their young men shall emigrate from their shores; they wish to keep them home, and there are laws on the statute books of those countries making it a crime when an emigrant leaves his country to escape military service. How, then, would it be possible for such men to get their certificate of good character or good conduct? So I believe, Mr. President, that this is of such great importance that the bill should be recommitted to the conference committee and that we should insist that this language shall be taken out of it.

I have just received a telegram from New York from a gentleman whom I know very well, and I wish to have his telegram read and incorporated in my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made. The Secretary will read the telegram.

The Secretary read as follows:

NEW YORK, January 20, 1911.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.:

Society of Friends of Russian Freedom protests against character-certificate provision in immigration conference bill as encouragement to oppression and reversal of our traditional policy of welcoming liberty-loving immigrants.

HERBERT PARSONS, President.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have also received another telegram, which I shall not ask to have printed, because a similar one has formerly been ordered printed in the RECORD, but I have asked that the telegram just read be printed because it is signed by an influential, honorable ex-Member of the other House.

There are other provisions in the bill to which I might call attention, but I shall not take up any more time of the Senate. I believe, however, that this country has been benefited by its liberal policies and its liberal immigration laws. I care not what restrictions are made to keep out the criminal class; we are all equally patriotic in seeing that none but good, honest, law-abiding men shall come to our shores and become citizens of this great country; but we also have the right, so long as the condition exists that we need more people, to have proper legislation on this subject. Nothing can benefit the western country more, Mr. President, than the immigration of good, honest, law-abiding citizens to this country. The men engaged in the industries of our country are entitled to some consideration, and I ask you who will take the places of some of the men who are working in the ditch? It is just as important to the success and the welfare of our people to have those come here as it is to have men who are engaged in the professions and the trades. Very few of the native born are willing to take their places.

So, Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Immigration will not insist that this conference report shall be adopted before it has again been considered by the conference committee.

Mr. SHIVELY. I ask the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts for a moment. What does the Senator understand is meant by the penal certificate?

Mr. LODGE. The penal certificate, as I understand, under the practice in vogue in Italy, is a certificate showing whether or not a man has been convicted of crime.

Mr. SHIVELY. And under this bill the immigrant is required to produce that certificate, if he has it?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. SHIVELY. And if he produces it does that fact admit him?

Mr. LODGE. No. The object is to secure knowledge as to those who are criminals.

Mr. SHIVELY. Section 3 begins:

That the following classes of aliens——

Mr. LODGE. If he produces a penal certificate, unless he can show he was not convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude, it would exclude him.

Mr. SHIVELY. As I understand, he would fall within the class to be excluded. Section 3 provides:

That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States.

And, then, after a series of descriptions of classes to be excluded, the following language is used:

Citizens or subjects of any country that issues penal certificates or certificates of character who do not produce to the immigration officials such a certificate.

Mr. LODGE. That is a certificate of character showing that he never has been convicted for a penal offense.

Mr. SHIVELY. Then, he must produce either a penal certificate or a certificate of good character before he can be admitted?

Mr. LODGE. That is simply a different denomination of the certificate. It is really a certificate to the effect simply that he has never committed a crime. The two classes of certificates are really descriptions of the same thing.

Mr. SHIVELY. Does the Senator mean that they refer to the same document? Do penal certificates and certificates of character mean the same thing?

Mr. LODGE. They are practically the same certificate. One is called "a penal certificate," and that excludes the immigrant if it shows that he has been convicted of a crime. The other shows no crime, of course, but is simply a certificate of character. If it shows a crime, it is a penal certificate.

Mr. SHIVELY. Does the Senator mean to say that the provision I have quoted would not require every person who applies for admission to produce a certificate of this kind?

Mr. LODGE. No; only when the immigrant comes from a country where they issue certificates of character. For instance, Italy issues them, and has done so for some time. Russia was asked if she would not issue certificates of that character, and declined. She said it was entirely impracticable.

Mr. SHIVELY. I recall the alleged incident that Oliver Cromwell and John Hampden were at one time on the point of embarking for the New World.

Mr. LODGE. They were suspected of that intention.

Mr. SHIVELY. Yes; and it is claimed that they were detained and restrained from taking their departure by the British Government. If the British had in force to-day provisions of law for the issue of the certificates referred to in and contemplated by the language of these lines of the conference report, and were Cromwell and Hampden living to-day, neither could be admitted to this country under the proposed procedure without producing such certificate, could he?

Mr. LODGE. No, Mr. President, all citizens of Italy have these certificates of good character, as I understand, just as they have certificates of citizenship, and whether they are going to migrate or not makes no difference. It is not a prerequisite of migration. If a man is going to migrate he does not have to procure such a certificate; he has it anyway; he does not have to give notice.

Mr. SHIVELY. How does the certificate of character become associated with or merged in the penal certificate?

Mr. LODGE. Of course, if a man holding a certificate of character is tried and convicted of an offense, then the entry that he has been convicted of a crime is made on his certificate, and it is returned to him with that entry; but he has that certificate; everybody there has one, without regard to migration.

Mr. SHIVELY. The Senator says this rule of issue of certificates is at present in force only in Italy?

Mr. LODGE. That is true of Italy to-day, but it has no effect at all on Italian immigration.

Mr. SHIVELY. It is a rule easily capable of adoption in every European country. Whether the rule be made with or without reference to immigration, the certificate issued by a foreign Government becomes determining whether the immigrant shall be admitted to the United States. The applicant must be provided with the certificate from a foreign Government. Such requirement is directly in the teeth of our well-settled and long-cherished doctrine on the right of expatriation.

Mr. LODGE. He would have the certificate in any event. It is only a question of whether we require it.

Mr. SHIVELY. Oh, yes; he would have the certificate in any event if his Government required him to have it, but it is only——

Mr. LODGE. He would not have to go and ask for it.

Mr. SHIVELY. But it is only in the event that the lines in this conference report that I have quoted become law that the certificate issued by a foreign Government would carry any significance so far as admission of its bearer to the United States is concerned.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; it would have no value to him as an innocent man—none whatever.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the last remark of the Senator from Massachusetts is indicative of the wrong basis upon which this discussion has proceeded. It has proceeded upon the assumption that this provision was intended to apply only to criminals—those seeking admission to this country as immigrants who have been convicted of crime.

Mr. LODGE. That is its intent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If that is its intent, it is so worded as to go entirely beyond the purpose of those who framed it. It can have but one effect. Observe the language of the provision. After enumerating several classes of aliens to be prohibited, in the exclusion of which all will agree, the conferees add the following:

> Citizens or subjects of any country that issues penal certificates or certificates of character who do not produce to the officials such a certificate,

That clause provides not only for penal certificates, but it also provides for certificates of character. Make that the law and no citizen or subject of any country can expatriate himself excepting with the consent of his Government.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. ROOT. I would not go so far as the Senator from Wisconsin and say that it can have but one effect. I think there is a legitimate effect—that is, to require persons coming here from countries that give penal certificates to produce the certificates, so that the immigration officers may have that very easy evidence regarding their character.

I have no doubt that that was the intention of the provision, and that it would have that effect. But I think it ought to be guarded so that it will not also produce the other effect that the Senator from Wisconsin suggests.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am very glad to hear the Senator from New York make that declaration, because if all that was required and all that was intended by this clause was what the Senator from New York now says it should provide, it should be limited to penal certificates.

Mr. President, I want to turn aside just for a moment to comment on the wide latitude given to conferees, of which this is one of the most striking examples, in the way of engrafting onto legislation new matter which neither House of Congress has ever considered. Sir, the rules and the precedents of this body and the body at the other end of the Capitol have been so framed as to put legislation in the hands of a very few men. I venture to hope, Mr. President, that the day is near at hand when both branches of Congress will be made more democratic and more responsive to the public will.

Here is a provision inserted in this bill which never had a moment's consideration in the Senate nor in the House of Representatives—a provision of the widest sweep and the most important effect, if it is to be enacted into law, upon the future of this country and the class of immigrants that are to be admitted to citizenship.

Why, sir, under the provisions of the clause which is now under discussion Carl Schurz would have been excluded from this country; also the great body of German refugees and emigrants from northern Europe who were resisting the encroachments of tyranny in the Old World. That period seemed to be one of the cycles in the life of liberty of the human race. In Germany, in France, in Austria-Hungary, in Poland, all over Europe, empire was crowding liberty back to the wall.

Carl Schurz broke jail and came to this country with some of his associates. Thank the Lord for it! He came up into Wisconsin. The thousands of liberty-loving Germans and emigrants from northern Europe that came into the State in which I had my birth laid at that time the foundations for the thoroughly democratic population which has gone leagues ahead of all the other Commonwealths of this country in bringing government back to the people.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, in just a moment, if the Senator will permit. I suppose the Senator rises to call my attention to the fact that this bill provides that people convicted of political crimes are not excluded. Am I right?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is what I anticipated. But Carl Schurz had not been convicted of a political crime. And this conference report would admit to this country only those who have been actually convicted of political crime, but not those who have been persecuted for their political opinions; not those who love liberty and who have preached the doctrine of a republican form of government in Russia and in other countries of the Old World—and there are thousands and thousands of them doing it to-day. They can not have the shield of protection of this bill as you propose it unless they have been put upon their trial and convicted of a political crime.

If they have been under police surveillance and police espionage, watched and dogged at every step and turn, and finally, in despair of enlarging the liberties of the people of their own country, they desire to seek a home for themselves and their families in America, they would have small chance indeed of procuring a certificate of good character, without which they would be excluded from this country under this provision.

How can a subject of Russia get a certificate of good character in the Russian Empire? You can not leave that empire to come to America without a passport. You can not get a passport without its being signed by the governor of the province in which you live. You can not get the signature of the governor of the province in which you live without its first being certified by the police authorities that you are a suitable person, according to Russian police standards, to receive that passport. It may be that you have not been convicted of any political crime. It may be that you have simply published some pamphlet advocating larger freedom for the people of Russia. If you have done that you fall under police surveillance, and you can not hope to get the certificate of the police which will enable you to apply for the passport of the governor of the province in which you live. Therefore you can not get a passport at all. Without a passport you can not get a certificate under the proposed law, of course.

Mr. LODGE. It does not seem to me that that follows.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Why, Mr. President, here is a nation that will not permit its subjects to leave the country without a passport.

Mr. LODGE. But the Senator is aware, of course, that thousands come from Russia without passports.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Ah! But does the Senator suppose they come with the approval of Russia? No.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly not.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; no. They come surreptitiously across the border; and if they come in that way, does the Senator suppose they are going to be able under this new provision of law to apply for and get a certificate of good character from the Government?

Mr. LODGE. Of course not. Russia does not issue those certificates.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; but the day after this bill becomes a statute Russia can adopt a provision that will make it applicable to every single subject that leaves her borders.

Here is a most ingenious device engrafted upon this bill by the conferees—not intentionally, I am bound to say, but inadvertently, I have to say—to promote and aid the system that prevails in Russia to-day, to restrain from coming to this country those of her subjects who may wish to come over here and preach larger liberty for Russia.

It was suggested in the debate on this paragraph in the House that any one of the governments would be glad to get rid of these disturbing subjects and to give them these certificates to come to this country. Not so. We would get, under this provision, those whom they could easily and would willingly spare. But the virile, sturdy, aggressive, progressive subjects of every country, who make the foundation stock of our best civilization when mixed with the blood of New England and every other State, we would not get. They would be retained in Germany to serve in the army; they would be kept in Russia, where they would be under their strict police system. Why? Because they fear them in America more than they do in Russia.

Mr. President, I do not mean to speak discourteously of the conferees, but think of the proposition of turning over to another country the determination of what class of immigrants shall be received in the United States! If they be not diseased, we may receive the weaklings of a foreign country. But the sturdy, virile type which makes up the German Army and the French Army and the armies of the other countries of Europe that require military service would be denied admission here because, unless the country wants to part with them and gives them certificates, they can not be admitted. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor has no discretion in the matter. No officer of this Government can exercise any discretion. The certificate of a foreign country disposes of the whole matter.

Mr. President, I remember that when this conference report was under discussion in another place in the Capitol the criticism which I am making was met in this way: It was said that Russia would be very glad to get rid of the people who were making political disturbances over there. Russia knows better than did the gentleman who made that argument. Russia knows that one free tongue in New York is more harmful to Russian despotism than 10,000 shackled subjects in Siberia. No! Russia does not want—and I am constrained to believe that that is the reason why some other people do not want—these people who are seeking freedom for mankind admitted to the United States.

Mr. President, they are not only a menace to Russia, they are a menace to plutocracy in America. There are some gentlemen in various places in our social order who are defending plutocracy and guarding every encroachment upon its sacred preserve.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin will suspend for a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. WORKS. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Wisconsin will proceed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, any person who has been active in founding a republican form of government in Russia such as we enjoy could only come to this country by leaving Russia surreptitiously. There is not any question about that at all. They can not get a passport, and they can not get a certificate of good character.

Of course, if it is your purpose to exclude those people from coming here—that is, people who are opposed to the Russian system but who do believe in the system of government we have in the United States, and who would like to see that system of government adopted in Russia—if you want to exclude the subjects of Russia who so believe when disheartened in the fight for Russian freedom they seek an asylum in this country, and if you wish to deny them that asylum, stand for this provision that the conferees have put into this immigration bill without a moment's consideration from either branch of Congress.

I started with my opening word upon this subject to say something in criticism of that practice by conference committees. We have seen it many times.

A conference report has to be accepted or rejected in toto. You have to swallow the whole conference report or you have to defeat all the good things in the conference report in order to get some one bad thing taken out.

I tell you, Mr. President, that is a vicious practice in legislation, and to the Senators who are to have some power in molding the rules under which laws shall be framed in future, let me appeal to you to give your attention to reforming this abuse.

Let me recall something to your minds. In May, 1908, I stood on this floor for 19 hours protesting against the passage of a bill. I did not do that as an exhibition of my physical endurance. I believed that that bill was a bad bill, but the methods employed to pass that bill I believed to be vicious, and I was willing to go to the very limit of risk in order to emphasize to the country the iniquity of that proceeding.

It was an emergency currency bill—the so-called Vreeland-Aldrich currency bill. It had been proposed in the Senate. It had been put upon its passage in the Senate. When it was proposed in the Senate it contained a provision that railroad bonds should be made the basis of the issuance of emergency currency. Since 1903 there had been pending an appeal to Congress from the Interstate Commerce Commission to value the physical properties of railroads of the country in order to determine how much the railroad securities represent actual investment and how much they represent water—a fraud upon the American public.

Without any determination on the part of the Government, pursuant to the recommendations of the Interstate Commerce Commission as to the real, true value, the real investment in the railroads in this country in the Aldrich-Vreeland bill, it was proposed through this side door to work into the foundation, as it were, the financial system of this country, as a basis for circulation, railroad bonds, regardless of the value that was back of them. I was opposed to that, Mr. President, and gave notice that I should attack it. Twenty minutes before I took the floor to make my argument against the railroad-bond provision in the emergency currency bill Senator Aldrich, the leader on the Republican side, withdrew the proposition making railroad bonds one of the securities upon which emergency currency could issue. Why? Because he well knew that he could not stand for a moment the attack that would be made, based upon the historic and economic development of the railroads of the country and the known facts as to fictitious capitalization. So 20 minuts before I was to begin an argument he rose and withdrew that provision. Then what happened? I took the floor. I made my argument notwithstanding the withdrawal. I predicted that that proposition withdrawn would be found in the conference report before that legislation was over.

Now, what happened? The bill passed the Senate. It was finally thrown into conference. Shortly thereafter we were told that the conferees could not agree, and that no legislation upon that subject would be enacted. Finally, just at the close of the session, when it was impossible to secure serious consideration for any measure, Congress and the country were suddenly informed that the conferees had agreed, and the Aldrich-Vreeland bill, in the form of a conference report, was thrust upon the House and the Senate.

And in that conference report, Mr. President, just as I had predicted, the railroad-bond provision had a secure place.

Do you understand, Senators? The railroad-bond provision was back in the bill, not in the original form, for under the bill as it came from the Committee on Finance there were some restrictions as to the bonds which might be accepted as a basis for emergency currency circulation. But as the provision appeared in the conference report any sort of railroad bonds could be accepted as security.

Mr. President, that is a bad method, a vicious method of legislating, and we should make an end of it at once and for all time.

Now, take this conference report. It is an exemplification of the abuse. I do not mean to reflect on the Senators who were on the conference. They have done what other Senators have done. The rules and the practice sanctions it. I think the Senator from Massachusetts is absolutely right. He is within the precedents and within the decisions of the House of Representatives, and I am not assailing the conferees. But I am assailing this system. It is not the way to legislate, Senators. It does not reflect the will of the people in legislation, and that is what our kind of a government ought to mean.

Now, Mr. President, I beg pardon of the Senate for having digressed at such length. I did not intend to do so. I just want to call attention to another provision in this conference report that I am sure escaped the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts. As to that portion of the conference report which I have discussed I am led to believe that the Senator from Massachusetts regarded this certificate provision as applying only to convicts.

Mr. LODGE. I certainly did not suppose it was open or susceptible to the interpretation which has been put upon it by Senators or I never would have agreed to it, and no other member of the conference would have agreed to it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am bound to believe that; but I submit when you read the language it is evident that my contention is right. Of course, we all know how conference reports are adopted. It may be that it was adopted at the end of a long conference, that had exhausted the members of that conference committee.

Mr. LODGE. I will say, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, the history of that particular clause is that it was not adopted in that way. It was a suggestion from the department and was very strongly urged by the department.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I remember now, since the Senator from Massachusetts says so, that it is in the recommendations of the——

Mr. LODGE. It is in the draft of the bill sent up to the Senate by the Commissioner General of Immigration.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That leads me to wonder why it did not find its place in one or the other of the bills, in view of the fact that it had the indorsement of this official.

Mr. LODGE. I mean the draft of the bill of the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I would not undertake to say that. It was not in the bill reported to the Senate and passed by the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. No; it was not.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Now, there is another matter that I want to call the attention of the conferees to. I have gathered here, Mr. President, a mass of cases, not suppositions, not speculations, but concrete cases which come within the provisions of this proposed law that would be excluded if it were to become a statute of the United States. I do not want, unless there is a disposition to press this matter, to take the time to read these particular cases. I will, if there is a disposition to do so; otherwise, I ask, Mr. President, to incorporate them in what I have to say.

In Russia a "certificate of good character" is required from every applicant for a foreign passport, and under the Russian law no one may leave the Empire without such a passport.

It is therefore clear that the Russian Government does issue "certificates of good character" to prospective emigrants. There are numerous other cases where the Russian law requires the production of a "certificate of good character."

Such certificates are issued by the police and may be denied in its discretion. The substance of the certificate is that the bearer has not been convicted of any crime. Under the antiquated Russian law such certificate could be denied to many persons innocent of any offense involving moral turpitude.

Section 1171 of the Russian Penal Code reads as follows:

> Jews convicted of engaging in any mercantile pursuit except that which is allowed to them in specific cases provided by law, outside the pale assigned to them for permanent settlement, shall be sentenced to confiscation of their merchandise and immediate deportation.

There are a series of decisions of the supreme court of the Empire (the cassation departments of the governing senate) which illustrate the character of the offenses coming within the purview of this section.

In re Mandelstamm, which was No. 731 of the decisions rendered in 1874, it was held that a Jewish artisan is allowed to sell only the products of his own manufacture, but not the products of other factories than his own.

In re Goorvich (1877, No. 20) it was held that a Jewish baker may sell bread, but not flour.

In re Kroopkin (1877, No. 12) it was held that a Jewish butcher may sell meat from cattle slaughtered by him according to the Jewish rites only to his coreligionists, but not to gentiles.

The Jews in Russia are restricted in choice of domicile to urban settlements of a few provinces, and are debarred from the rest of the Empire. There are, however, special exemptions in favor of a few privileged classes of Jewish citizens. Among these are graduates of dental colleges.

Recently 200 Jewish merchants residing in Moscow, which is a forbidden city to Jews, were indicted for procuring illegally dentists' diplomas, which enabled them to live in Moscow and engage in business. The penalty for their offense ranges, under section 294 of the penal code, from imprisonment in a penitentiary for not less than two and one-half years to banishment to Siberia for life.

If these men, to whom all doors of opportunity to earn an honest living are shut in Russia, should attempt to enter this country they will be shut out, if this bill becomes a law, on the ground that they could not furnish a certificate of good character from the Russian police.

They were all men of means, and were making an honest living as business men. Yet the Russian law says that an ordinary Jewish citizen must not do business in Moscow. He may secure that privilege by renouncing the faith of his fathers and joining some Christian denomination, a form of religious persecution which is abhorrent to the spirit of our institutions.

Another class of offenders against the Russian law that would be debarred by the pending bill are young men who emigrate in order to evade compulsory service in the Russian army. Every young man of the age of 20 must report for two years of active service in the army. His labor may help support his parents and younger brothers and sisters, but he must give two years of his life to the Czar. Most people in Russia do it reluctantly. The Jewish recruit is as a rule transported for service to those Provinces where people of his race are ordinarily not permitted to reside. As soon as his term of service expires, he is ordered to leave the place and return to the place of his legal residence. Can he wax patriotic in the defense of a country from which he himself is excluded as a citizen?

Shall we who have no compulsory enlistments condemn him if he seeks to escape service in the army of a country which he leaves for good in order to become a citizen of the United States?

Still, such a man could not secure a certificate of good moral character from the Russian police.

The other day the cable news carried an item characteristic of Russian conditions. A detachment of 130 Cossacks, serving on the Austrian frontier, crossed over the boundary line to Austria, lay down their arms, and declared that they had left Russia for good. The Cossacks, it must be understood, are a special force used chiefly to suppress revolutionary outbreaks of the people. These 130 Cossacks got tired of such duties and resolved to leave the country rather than to shoot down their countrymen who are fighting for liberty. Should any of these Cossacks come to this country, we shall ask them to produce certificates of good character from the Russian police, and upon their failure to do so we shall send them back to Russia.

We have retrograded in our attitude toward political refugees. The act of August 3, 1882, which for the first time debarred foreign convicts, excepted "those convicted of political offenses." The act of March 3, 1891, made the exemption bill stronger by the insertion of the following proviso:

> Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to or exclude persons convicted of a political offense, notwithstanding said political offense may be designated as a "felony, crime, infamous crime, or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude" by the laws of the lands whence he came, or by the court convicting.

The provision was in agreement with the best authorities on international law, which recognize that most political offenses are "admixt crimes," which would be considered common crimes if it were not for the political motive of the offender.

The reason for the exemption in favor of political refugees is the general recognition of the fact that men and women who fight tyranny in the country of their birth may prove very useful and peace-loving citizens in their adopted country. We have erected monuments in this city to two Polish political offenders, Kosciuszsco and Pulaski.

I have referred to the German refugees who came to this country after the revolution of 1848 to escape capital punishment in their own country; some of them fought in our Civil War. One of these revolutionists, Carl Schurz, sat in the Cabinet of a President, an honored leader of the Republican Party. The son of another of these revolutionists, Charles Nagel, is a member of the Cabinet of President Taft, and, by the irony of fate, under the provisions of this conference report, should it become a law, would be compelled to enforce the law barring immigrants guilty of political offenses which do not differ from those committed by the German revolutionists of 1848.

The bill as reported by the conference committee qualifies political offenses by adding the words "purely political," and further as "not involving moral turpitude."

Opinions may differ as to when an act is just simply political or "purely political," also whether or not it involves "moral turpitude." Arson, murder, when committed by an individual from personal motives are crimes involving moral turpitude. Yet when a revolution is on these same acts are generally looked upon as acts of heroism, and free nations erect monuments to their fighters for liberty who committed them.

Within the last few years the Russian Government made demands upon the United States for the extradition of its former subjects on the ground that they were guilty of common crimes, such as murder, arson, and assaults upon officials. In every case the League for the Defense of Political Refugees was able to prove to our officials by documentary evidence that the act complained of was of a political nature. But if this provision becomes law, a Secretary of Commerce and Labor who happens to regard such an act as involving moral turpitude will have the power to shut out such a revolutionist from this country on the ground that he can not produce a certificate of good moral character from his Government.

It appears from the case of the English newspaper man, Mylius, who is just now awaiting deportation under a decision of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, that our law in effect denies an asylum to persons convicted of political offenses. The facts in this case deserve the closest attention of the Senate.

Mylius was convicted of "seditious libel" for accusing the King of England of bigamy. It appears from the record of the case that the English court regarded the offense as one of a political character. In fact, Mylius was tried not for libel, but for defamation of character. In a prosecution for libel truth is a complete defense. In a prosecution for defamation the defendant is not permitted to prove the truth of his accusations. Mylius offered evidence to prove the truth of his publication, but his evidence was not admitted.

There is a similar distinction in the New York Penal Code. A person may be prosecuted for defamation of character of a private citizen even though his accusations may be true. But there is a very important exception to this rule: If the complainant holds a public office and the accusation is made with a public purpose, truth is a complete defense. It is evident that a King holds a public office, and the allegation of Mylius that the object of his publication was to arouse the public sentiment against the institution of monarchy was very material. Certainly there was no personal malice in his act, for he is too far removed from the King to nurture any personal spite against him. If there ever was a "purely political offense," this was one of them. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor holds the political motive of the publication is insufficient to make it "a purely political offense" and that it "involves moral turpitude." And back to England Mylius must go. Under this interpretation the Declaration of Independence, which charged King George III that "he has plundered our seas, ravaged our coasts, burnt out towns, and destroyed the lives of our people," was libel involving moral turpitude. It is clear that the bill gives no adequate protection to political refugees.

Now, permit me to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to one provision which I believe has wholly escaped the attention of the conferees. In the paragraph——

Mr. LODGE. From what section does the Senator read?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is in section 3, in the paragraph beginning "All aliens." Has the Senator a copy of the conference report before him?

Mr. LODGE. I have that section before me.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is section 3.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I have section 3.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Now, just run along to the third paragraph beginning "All aliens over 16 years." Has the Senator found that?

Mr. LODGE. The illiteracy test?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes. Now, then:

All aliens over 16 years of age, physically capable of reading, who can not read the English language, or some other language or dialect, including Hebrew or Yiddish—

That is, they are excluded—

Provided, That any admissible alien or any alien heretofore or hereafter legally admitted, or any citizen of the United States, may bring in or send for his father or grandfather over 55 years of age——

That was "50 years of age" in the Senate bill. The age limit is raised for some reason.

Mr. LODGE. That is the House bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The provision continues:

his wife, his mother, his grandmother, or his unmarried or widowed daughter, if otherwise admissible, whether such relative can read or not; and such relatives shall be permitted to enter.

There is an omission right at that point. After the word "grandmother," there is omitted "of children over 18 years of age," which appeared in the Senate bill.

Mr. LODGE. The House insisted on their language at that point, and the argument they made was that this would admit the daughter at any age.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; it admits the daughter if she is widowed.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; if unmarried or widowed. It admits the daughter at any age.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; that is right.

Mr. LODGE. It admits sons under 16.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. The House took the ground that a son over 16 could learn to read and write in order to be able to get in. They made that distinction, and insisted on it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No son over that age; no boy.

Mr. LODGE. No son.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No boy over that age can be admitted to this country unless he can read and write although both his father and his mother and all the rest of the family are here. I can not believe that it ministers to the good of this country or to the betterment of social conditions to separate the father and the mother from their 16-year-old boy.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think that the cases that would arise would be very serious or very numerous.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Well, but if that rule——

Mr. LODGE. I see the Senator's point. If the matter should be reopened in conference, of course we would bring that point up.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is not a question of how many are hurt, but whether any of those who in good faith cast their lot with us are made to suffer needlessly. The family is separated only temporarily—long enough for the father to come to this country to earn the money with which to bring over the wife and their boys and girls. The Senate of the United States ought not to stand for a provision that would deny the right, when the father and mother and daughters are here, to bring over the boys of 16, 17, 18, and 19, even though they might not meet the literacy test, when the father and mother have been admitted before that test went into effect. What a hardship to that family, and what a cruel wrong to those young boys, who will later, in all probability, come to this country and become a part of our political and social life, but who in the meantime have been deprived of the parents' guidance and of all the precious home ties. It can not make for good citizenship or be an advantage to this country.

There is a provision later on, at the end of that section, which reads:

Provided further, That nothing in this act shall exclude the wife or minor children of a citizen of the United States.

But a man must be five years in this country before he can become a citizen of the United States, and many good men within my own knowledge have been in this country much longer than that without becoming citizens. They have moved from one State to another in order to find employment or to secure better advantages for themselves and their families. These changes in residence sometimes make it difficult to secure the necessary two witnesses, so that under the provisions of this conference report many minor boys might be excluded whose parents are already here. It is wrong.

Now, Mr. President, I have taken more time than I intended, as I purposed only very briefly to point out the obvious wrongs that might result if the bill was not amended. I hope that there will be no opposition to sending it back to conference. Here is a great measure, of vital importance to the country. It can not be too well considered. I know that we need legislation upon this subject. Because of the large number of people of foreign birth that we have in Wisconsin, I have watched the progress of this kind of legislation since I was old enough to understand.

It has seemed to me the purpose of our legislation generally should be not so much the limitation as the improvement of immigration, the uplifting of the people who come here to become a part of our citizenship. With that, Mr. President, I am most thoroughly and completely in sympathy.

But there is going on in many countries of Europe a struggle for larger freedom, with which the American people are in sympathy, and we should not write into a measure of this kind any provision that would militate against the great movement for a truer democracy that is sweeping over the world.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE subsequently said: I ask leave, in connection with my remarks, to print many telegrams which I have received, one of them from a former member of the Russian Douma, now living in Massachusetts, in which he makes a most touching and pathetic appeal for the dropping out of the provision which has been the subject of principal discussion here to-day, which I hope the Senators will find time to read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order will be made.

The telegrams referred to are as follows:

DORCHESTER, MASS., January 20, 1913.

Senator LA FOLLETTE,
Washington, D. C.:

In behalf of my friends and political refugees from Russia I most emphatically protest against the clause of the pending immigration bill requiring from political refugees a certificate of character from their home Government. This will bar all political refugees coming from Russia, where they are denied all political and civil rights merely on account of their republican views inimical to the autocratic government of the Czar. I wish to emphasize the fact that even the members of the Duma who belong to opposition parties are prosecuted for their political beliefs and are forced to emigrate. Furthermore, I wish to state that political refugees never leave their countries upon their free will. They keep their places among their native people in their native country as long as they possibly can, fighting for freedom of their own nation. A successful revolution in any country means more happiness and more contentment among the bulk of the people. Bad home government makes for large immigration. Democratic governments are apt to keep their people home. It is my firm conviction that the great Republic of the United States should not help to thwart the government for freedom in Russia in trying to punish once more those who are being punished severely enough by the Czar's Government, which forces them unwillingly to choose banishment from their beloved country.

Ex-Member of the Second Duma of Russia.

The Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Many thanks for telegraphing, giving me certificate provision in immigration conference report. Earnestly hope that provision will not be adopted. It would operate to deprive us of finest immigrants from oppressed people.

HERBERT PARSONS,
President Society Friends of Russian Freedom.

NEW YORK, January 19, 1913.

Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Political Refugees' Defense League, New York, respectfully requests that you oppose provision in immigration bill demanding immigrant furnish certificates good character from Government issuing same. This means Russia only, who refuses such certificates to revolutionists, democrats, liberals, and all only suspected of opposition. Officials exact bribes from all not suspected for issuance certificates. Thousands honest immigrants unable to secure certificates for these and other reasons not within their control will be excluded, for Government will be tool of Russia.

Senator LA FOLLETTE,

We protest vigorously against clause said to be included in immigration bill in conference committee which would demand from immigrants good character certificates from their government. Some of the best citizens America has had would have been excluded under such ruling. Please use your influence in Senate against this.

NEW YORK, January 19, 1913.

ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Conference immigration bill, in section 3, contains provisions not previously considered, excluding subjects of countries issuing character certificate failing to produce such certificate to immigration officials. This will exclude majority Jews coming from Russia and Roumania, owing to practical legal difficulties attending procurement of certificates, the compliance with elaborate conditions imposed, their military regulations, and the large expense involved. How could victims of Kishineff or the thousands constantly expelled from their homes by police or those suspected of being political offenders expect to secure such a certificates? Such reversal of our attitude toward the persecuted can not be intended. Bill should be amended to preclude cruel consequences inevitably resulting from present phraseology.

LOUIS MARSHALL,
President American Jewish Committee.

DORCHESTER, MASS., January 20, 1913.

Senator LA FOLLETTE,
Washington, D. C.:

In behalf of the Boston Political Defense League, we emphatically protest against the pending immigration bill, particularly against the clause requiring from immigrants a certificate of character from their Government. This would be tantamount to absolute exclusion of political refugees from Russia, whose Government stamps as crime any political view differing from those of autocracy and tyranny, and whose courts and officials regard any immigrant leaving the country without the consent of the Czar's Government as criminal and outlaw, whose property may be confiscated. It is our firm belief and hope that the Republic of the United States will not become a party to the oppressive policy of the autocratic Government of the Czar.

For the Boston Political Refugees Defense League,

E. S. VRAY, President.

CHICAGO, ILL., January 20, 1913.

Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
186½ Wyoming Avenue, Washington, D. C.:

Section 3 of the conference immigration bill contains provision for certificate of character that would be complete reversal of the United States attitude toward those of other nations persecuted for political opinion. If this provision were enacted into law it would exclude the majority of Jews coming from Russia and Roumania, owing to legal difficulties in securing certificates. I hope that you will use your influence to have bill amended to preclude cruel consequence inevitably resulting from present phraseology.

ALEX. A. MCCORMACK,
President of the Board of Commissioners of Cook County.

CHICAGO, ILL., January 20, 1913.

Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
186½ Wyoming Avenue, Washington, D. C.:

We have just learned that conference immigration bill, section 3, requires immigrants to produce certificates of character from their home Governments. Should this bill become a law, it would bar political refugees from entering this country, as no Government would give certificates of good character to political agitators who endeavor to secure laws for the betterment of their conditions, while it might readily give such certificates to criminals and other undesirables, in order to be rid of them. This country has always been the asylum of political refugees, and we, on behalf of 70,000 members of the Polish Catholic Union of America, who are citizens of this country, protest against this bill as being unjust and un-American; and we respectfully appeal to you to use your influence to defeat this measure.

STANISHLAUS ADAMKIEWOZ,
President Polish Catholic Union of America.
N. S. BUDZBAN, Secretary.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, as I was not a member of the committee which reported this bill or of the conference committee, I did not read the terms of the conference report until the report was printed in Saturday's RECORD. I am, however, somewhat familiar with the history of the long struggle of the United States to establish and maintain the American doctrine of expatriation, and I feel deeply interested in having nothing embodied in our legislation which may tend to strike down that doctrine or which may tend to put it in the power of any other country to limit the operation of the doctrine that every man in this world is entitled to change the country of his residence.

I think, upon reading this clause, that it probably would open the door to make it possible that the right of immigration from foreign countries to the United States might be limited or prevented by the action or refusal to act of the country from which the immigrant seeks to come. For that reason I hope that the Senators in charge of the bill will ask to have it sent back to conference, in order that the following words may be stricken out:

Citizens or subjects of any country that issues penal certificates or certificates of character who do not produce to the immigration officials such a certificate.

I am in favor of the bill, Mr. President. I think it contains many provisions of very great value, and I would regret exceedingly to have its passage prevented.

Let me make one further suggestion. I think I can appreciate, probably better than most Senators, the reasons which perhaps led to the inclusion of this clause, because it is in my own State and in my own city that the evil resulting from the immigration of criminals has been most deeply felt. It has been a very great evil; it is so now. It is making collections, groups of the most desperate criminals in our American cities, and especially in my own city of New York; and I feel sure that the recommendation for the insertion of this clause by the department was with the sincere desire to make it possible for the immigration officers to keep out the Black Hand and the Camorra, which are so injurious to the maintenance of order and the enforcement of law in the city of New York. I feel sure that the clause was inserted with a good intention. I do not want, however, to let this occasion pass without expressing my belief that this clause was framed by officers who were thinking about keeping out Italian criminals and were not thinking about Russia at all; but because, as so frequently happens, a clause put in with one idea in mind may produce unexpected results in other directions, I think the clause ought to go out.

Mr. President, I think this is a very good illustration of the value and importance of discussion of having for measures of legislation the scrutiny of many, and an opportunity for discussion upon every provision. That opportunity having been given, I hope the evident sense of the Senate on this subject may receive effect on the part of the conferees.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] have both recognized that the intent of the conferees was not to usurp power or put in any language which they did not thing was proper. I think, as a mere question of parliamentary procedure and precedent, we had a right to put in the provision under the very sweeping decisions to which I have referred. However, that is not the question; the question is whether it ought to be there at all.

I hesitate very much to disagree on questions of interpretation of law with either Senator from New York; but I find, Mr. President, that an interpretation of which I did not think it susceptible is given to that clause, not merely by Senators who are opposed to the bill, but by Senators who are as strongly in favor of the bill as I am. If the provision is open to the interpretation which has been given to it here in debate, to which both Senators from New York, the Senator from Wisconsin, and others think it is open, I feel, Mr. President, reluctant as I am to cause any delay in the adoption of this report, that it ought to be sent back to conference. I therefore move that the Senate disagree to the report of the conference committee, and request a further conference with the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, before that motion is put, if the bill is going back to conference, I hope the conferees will not overlook the other point which was brought up by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and which, it seems to me, is very worthy of consideration. I refer to the point which he made in regard to limiting the age at which children may be brought into this country by their parents and under which only the sons under 16 years of age can be brought into this country, unless they can pass the literacy test. I have had recently one or two very sad and deplorable cases brought to my attention, where parents who are in this country have attempted to bring in their children.

One case in particular occurs to me, of a young girl, perhaps 10 or 11 years old, who under the operation of the present law, if in the charity of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor it had not been interpreted very liberally, would have been sent back to Europe under conditions which seemed to me almost equivalent to murder. She would have been landed upon the docks there with absolutely nobody to take care of her, with no relatives, and with no means of support.

In addition to that, as suggested by the Senator, such a provision would have a tendency to break up families and leave boys of 16 years of age to become waifs in the great cities of Europe or to be brought up under conditions that would almost surely make for criminality, or something of that character. I hope that if it is possible that part of the bill will also receive the attention of the conferees.

Mr. LODGE. I assure the Senator that the matters to which the Senator from Wisconsin has called attention will receive the consideration of the conferees.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think if the conferees would restore the language of the Senate bill at that point it would cure what I conceive to be the defect there.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; by restoring the Senate provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I moved to disagree to the report. Of course the other motion takes precedence if anyone makes it, but I made the motion to disagree.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I made a point of order against the provision which has been discussed most extensively here; but I am not going to press the point of order now, in view of the attitude of the Senator from Massachusetts. I desire to say, however, that it seems to me, notwithstanding the decisions of several Speakers of the House of Representatives, for whom I have great respect, that the better and safer practice is the one laid down in the Manual. I think it is an unwise and dangerous practice to confer power upon conference committees to introduce into legislation important provisions like the one now before us without giving to the Senate or to the House any opportunity to discuss them.

The Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] well remarked that this is a fine illustration of the necessity of having matters of this kind brought before the body of the Senate—the Senate itself—for discussion and elaboration. True, various Speakers of the House of Representatives have held otherwise, or seemingly so at least; but I do not know whether there are any precedents of the Senate—I have not had time to have them looked up—embodying rulings upon like questions.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me at that point, there was a question involving this principle decided both by the Senate and the House in the case where the conference committee put what was known as the "Japanese passport clause" into the immigration bill of 1907. It was absolutely new matter; but it was held under the general rule, which I have cited, that the whole subject was before the committee, and both the Senate and the House ruled it in order.

Mr. STONE. All I care now to say is that if this provision is brought back in any objectionable form—I am not sure, in any form—as an entirely new clause in the bill, I shall ask the judgment of the Senate as to whether the practice which the Senator from Massachusetts says is established in the House shall prevail in the Senate. The Senate, of course, can adopt its own rules——

Mr. LODGE. Oh, absolutely.

Mr. STONE. And its own practices.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator can search this bill from beginning to end and he will not find anything in it that was not in one bill or in the other——

Mr. STONE. Well, we have found one very important provision that was not in either bill.

Mr. LODGE. Except this provision; and of that the conferees were perfectly aware.

Mr. STONE. Now, Mr. President, I am going to ask that the part of an article I have marked, appearing in to-day's New York Times, prepared by Mr. Herbert Friedenwald, with relation to this particular clause, may be inserted in the RECORD without reading. I now withdraw the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri withdraws his point of order. The matter which he desires printed in the RECORD will be ordered printed, in the absence of objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Statement, signed by Herbert Friedenwald, secretary of the American Jewish committee:

"The conference committee on the immigration bill which has for more than a year been under consideration in Congress, reported what is practically a new measure late on Thursday. On the following day the House of Representatives adopted the bill as reframed by the Senate and the Senate will probably act on it on Monday.

"It has just been discovered that the bill thus reported contains a clause which will exclude the majority of all Jews coming to this country from Russia and Roumania, and practically all immigrants who are suspected of being political offenders, and a large number of immigrants of all religious denominations from continental Europe. This provision adds a new class of aliens to those who are to be excluded from the United States, namely, 'citizens or subjects of any country that issues penal certificates or certificates of character, who do not produce to the immigration officer such a certificate.'

"The Russian laws regulating the issuance of such certificates are minute and onerous in their provisions. First of all, the possession of a Russian passport is required. This calls for the signatures and counter signatures of police and Government officials and of notaries. If the intending immigrant is a male 18 years of age, he must also present documentary proof that he has presented himself for military service and has been refused; if more than 21 years of age, that he has served in the army or is among the reserves. He must procure a police certificate that there is no objection to his leaving his home; that no fine has been imposed upon him; and that there is no civil judgment against him. If any member of the applicant's family is under disabilities his application is rejected.

"The legal fee to be paid for the passport is $9. The exactions of the police officials frequently amount to much larger sums, and it is conceivable that under the 'system' it will be easier for a real criminal to purchase the necessary certificate of character than it would be for a poor and honest man to obtain it.

"When one considers the exactions to which the Russian Jew is constantly subjected, his harsh and oppressive treatment by police officials, the fact that he is driven from pillar to post, and is frequently excluded from his home and stripped of his belongings on the pretext that he has overstepped the pale of settlement, it becomes at once apparent that for the average man compliance with the proposed amendment will be a practical impossibility. How could the victims of Kishineff or the thousands who are suspected of political offenses expect to secure such a certificate?

"In Roumania Jews are regarded neither as citizens nor as subjects. They are declared by statute to be 'aliens.' In their case compliance with the act is literally impossible.

"It is thus evident that this objectionable clause must have crept into the bill of the conference committee through inadvertence or without due appreciation of its consequences. It certainly can not have been intended to reverse our historic policy of affording an asylum within our hospitable gates to the persecuted and to those supposed to be political offenders.

"Congress has had no opportunity to give the slightest consideration to this important change in the law. It was never even suggested during the protracted consideration that has been given to the bill, and we are now confronted with the grave peril of having this un-American clause thus hastily injected into our legislation without the realization of its consequences.

"By means of it foreign Governments will be able to regulate immigration into the United States by arbitrarily granting or withholding certificates of character. This feature of the immigration bill, superadded to the literacy test, in itself a sufficient objection, should determine its fate."

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to detain the Senate only a moment. I want to express my sympathy with the views set forth by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] in regard to the powers of conference committees and the manner in which the two Houses are handicapped under the present rules in dealing with conference reports. I am glad the Senator from Wisconsin brought that matter up, and I am glad we have had this discussion with regard to the rules governing conference reports. I think there ought to be a liberalization of these rules. I believe that the House and the Senate ought to have the right to adopt the report of a conference committee with amendments, and that these amendments should go back to the conference committee for further consideration. I do not suggest that as the best method of reaching and remedying this difficulty, but I do wish to say, Mr. President, that I have felt repeatedly since I have been a Member of this body the necessity of some liberalization of the rules under which the Houses act with reference to conference reports.

Now, one word, Mr. President, in reference to the provision as to penal and character certificates incorporated by the conference committee. I think that if there is anything emphasized under our immigration laws it is the purpose on the part of the people of this country to exclude so far as practicable from admission to our shores the criminal classes of Europe. I am heartily in sympathy with any provision which will accomplish that purpose. I believe that a part of the provision proposed by the conferees does contribute to that end. I believe that that part which refers to penal certificates would be most valuable in accomplishing our fundamental purpose in excluding European criminals.

I think, however, the committee has presented the provision in a form that is rather too drastic, too mandatory, too binding upon our immigration officers, and as this bill, probably by unanimous consent, is to be allowed to go back to the conference committee, I suggest that that provision might be retained not as a mandatory provision, but allowing such certificates to be considered as prima facie evidence of the criminality and the nonadmissibility of the alien.

The great difficulty, Mr. President, in administering the provision of our laws against the admission of criminal aliens is in ascertaining the facts bearing upon the record of the immigrant. If we can secure some official evidence under the laws of the country from which he proposes to emigrate showing that he is or is not entitled to admission, I think it would be a matter of wise precaution to take advantage of that law. I do think, however, that the provision in the conference report is entirely too drastic.

Now, so far as the character of the second certificates provided for in the report are concerned, I am very glad the Senator from Massachusetts feels the force of the argument which has been made with reference to them. I do not think the mischief apprehended by some Senator would follow the adoption of this provision, but it would open the door to possible abuses, which would intrench upon the traditional policy of this Government with reference to expatriation. Feeling that way about it, I went over to the Senator from Massachusetts shortly after the discussion upon this report began this morning and suggested to him that possibly under the circumstances it would be well to let the report go back to the conference committee in order that this subject might have further consideration.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Before the Senator takes his seat I wish to call his attention to another provision in this conference report, which enlarges the powers of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor with respect to the importation of contract labor. I think the provision may have escaped the attention of Senators on the other side.

Mr. SIMMONS. That matter was under discussion here on Saturday, when the Senator, I apprehend, was not present.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. This conference report was not up at that time.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I think the conference report was up then.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think the conference report has been called up to-day.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; but it was called up informally on Saturday and went over until to-day. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if I am not right about that? I interrogated the Senator from Massachusetts on Saturday with reference to the provision as to contract labor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I say to the Senator——

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, the provision to which the Senator refers was in the Senate bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand that.

Mr. LODGE. It has been reproduced here; but I think it makes no enlargement at all.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But oftentimes, Mr. President, bills which pass the Senate contain provisions not well understood by all Senators, and I desire simply to call the attention of the Senator, while he is on his feet, to one provision in this conference report. On page 4, as printed in pamphlet form, at the bottom of the page, the Senator will find this:

Provided further, That skilled labor, if otherwise admissible, may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country.

That is the existing law.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; so I understand.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The existing law is enlarged by the conference report to this extent—and I submit this for the consideration of Senators on that side and on this side:

And the question of the necessity of importing such skilled labor in any particular instance may be determined by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor upon the application of any person interested, such application to be made before such importation and such determination by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, to be reached after a full hearing and an investigation into the facts of the case.

This is new matter and modifies the existing law. It gives the Secretary of Commerce and Labor the right to say when skilled employees shall be imported into this country under a contract to labor in this country. He conducts the hearing. "After a full hearing," it is true, but he determines what constitutes a full hearing, and he conducts that hearing upon the application of any individual who is interested in having that contract labor imported into this country.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I should like to say, in explanation of that provision, that it was in the bill as adopted by the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am aware of that.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. There are a great many cases in the development of our industries in this country like one I have in mind that happened in Connecticut, where American citizens proposed to establish a manufactory of lace. They went abroad and purchased machinery for that purpose, the machinery being made under European patents and not procurable in this country. They brought it over here and established their mills, and then it became necessary to bring in foreign labor that was acquainted with that machinery in order to operate it.

There was no such skilled labor in this country as was required to operate that machinery. Under the present law all they could do was to go and make a contract to bring them over, which would be in violation of the law unless it was afterwards ratified by the American authorities. They had to bring them to Ellis Island, and then when objection was made to their coming in as contract laborers under the law they made their appeal to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and then he had to hear the question of whether skilled labor was necessary under the existing law and whether for that reason they ought to be admitted. It put these people to the expense, and to the risk as well, of bringing them over, with a possibility that they might be rejected if the decision was adverse.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to inquire right at that point why it would not have been well for the manufacturers seeking to bring in these foreign skilled laborers to have applied for permission to do so before going abroad?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Because the law gave the Secretary no authority; and this is to give the Secretary the authority to let them come and present their case in advance.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is perfectly true; but the law provided that they should have a hearing.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. But they could not have a hearing until after the persons had been imported, had been held up at Ellis Island, and the question was certified up.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is not proposed here to give them a hearing in advance.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes, it is.

Mr. LODGE. That is the point.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. That is the very point of the amendment and the only object of it.

Mr. LODGE. That is the object of it and that is all there is to it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I want to say this, Mr. President, if the Senator has concluded: I do not believe it should be left to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to have the final word on that subject without some provision for an appeal, and I want to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that the conferees could well incorporate in this connection a provision for an appeal on the part of any dissatisfied party.

We know perfectly well—and we may as well look this matter squarely in the face—that the manufacturers of this country desire to bring skilled labor and other labor into this country from abroad whenever they can, because they can get it cheaper there than they can here. That is the whole basis for our protective system and for our claim of the necessity of a protective tariff. I am in favor of their bringing in that labor if it can not be found in this country. I am not in favor of their bringing it in if it can be found in this country. I do not believe we should give to any single official the final word as to whether they shall have that authority or not. I would not leave the matter in any doubt.

I was going to say to the Senator from Massachusetts, in conclusion, that it is a very easy matter to add to that paragraph, and I would suggest adding that the decision of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall be subject to appeal.

Mr. LODGE. I think it is now, as a matter of fact; but it will do no harm to put it in.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There will not be any doubt about it if it is specified.

Mr. LODGE. Not the slightest. I am much in favor of such a course.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I should like to say, in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin, that there is no branch of the present immigration law which is enforced with greater strictness than the contract-labor provision. The department is exceedingly careful to see that the law is observed. The execution of the law in some instances seems to be rather drastic, and yet it is nothing to be criticized. I say that because I know the Senator desires to have it so executed; and I can assure him now that that class of immigration gets no sympathy from the department.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But I am sure the Senator from Vermont will agree with me that no matter of such tremendous importance should be left to the discretion of any individual. It may be well administered to-day, and it may be ill administered to-morrow.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think I have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina had the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I had about concluded what I had to say with reference to the resubmission of this report to the conferees. The Senator from Wisconsin, when he addressed the Senate on this question a little while ago, referred to the contract-labor provision. I stated then that this conference report had been up on Saturday. I think I was correct in that statement. I remember asking the Senator from Massachusetts for an explanation of that provision of the conference report. I distinctly recall asking for an explanation. I had examined it, and it was not quite satisfactory to me. I had somewhat the same objections that the Senator from Wisconsin has expressed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think perhaps I was in error in saying to the Senator from North Carolina that the conference report was not before the Senate on Saturday, although perhaps not technically in error. I believe it was not called up until this morning. The Senator from North Carolina may have interrogated the Senator from Massachusetts about it upon its coming into the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. The matter was somewhat discussed here on Saturday, and went over by unanimous consent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Perhaps it was.

Mr. SIMMONS. After the Senator from Massachusetts had made the statement on Saturday, it appeared to be the situation, so far as contract labor is concerned. We would, under this provision in the report, admit contract labor under certain conditions. Those conditions raised an issue of fact. Upon the determination of that fact the immigrant was to be admitted or he was to be denied admission, and, of course, somebody had to be vested with the authority to decide that question of fact. The only debatable question is whether the decision so rendered should be final.

There would be great force in what the Senator from Wisconsin suggests if there were no right of appeal from the decision of that officer. But my understanding is that under the present law there exists the right of appeal from the finding upon that question. That right, I understood, is provided in the existing law. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts whether I am right about that.

Mr. LODGE. I explained that fully on Saturday.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not understand the Senator from Massachusetts. There was some confusion at the time. There is the right to appeal, as I understand.

Mr. LODGE. There is the right to appeal. I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. I said I would have the same objections which the Senator from Wisconsin has urged unless I thought there was a right of appeal.

Mr. LODGE. The decision of the Secretary can not be final if it is in violation of law. The matter goes into court whenever that question is raised.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I just wanted to suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that if the conferees made it specific there could be no doubt about it.

Mr. SIMMONS. But, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I think that right is outside of the immigration bill. It is provided in other law, and therefore need not be repeated in the present one.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No harm can come from its repetition.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think any harm can come, but I think there is no necessity for duplicating the law.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I think we ought not to pass over the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts and accept it as correct that there is a right of appeal in cases of this kind. The Supreme Court of the United States has held directly the contrary in some cases.

Mr. LODGE. I spoke carelessly when I said "the right of appeal." I meant that the Secretary's decision does not estop suit being brought for violation of the law.

Mr. WORKS. Oh, certainly not; but the Supreme Court has directly held that the decision of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is conclusive upon that question.

Mr. LODGE. I was not aware of that. If that is the case, it shows the necessity of providing an appeal.

Mr. WORKS. I think the Senator will find that to be so.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, before this report goes back, if it does, to the conference committee, I should like very briefly to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts, who I suppose will be a member of the conference committee on the part of the Senate——

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I am chairman of the committee.

Mr. STONE. I should like to call his attention to one or two other provisions of this bill which seem to me to be objectionable, and which, if it goes to conference again, might receive consideration from the conferees.

There appears to me to be an inconsistency between one of the clauses of section 3 and one of the clauses of section 9 in the particular I shall state.

On page 4 of the report, as part of section 3, is the provision that all aliens over 16 years of age, and so forth, capable of reading may be admitted.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; the illiteracy test.

Mr. STONE. Then follows this proviso:

That any admissible alien or any alien heretofore or hereafter legally admitted, or any citizen of the United States, may bring in or send for his father or grandfather over 55 years of age, his wife, his mother, his grandmother, or his unmarried or widowed daughter, if otherwise admissible, whether such relative can read or not.

Of course, that plainly permits one living here—a naturalized citizen, for example—to send for the particular relatives named.

Mr. LODGE. It is not limited to naturalized citizens. It applies to any admitted alien.

Mr. STONE. I was using that simply as an illustration.

Section 9 provides that it shall be unlawful for any person, including any transportation company, and so on, to bring in people of certain descriptions—those having certain diseases, idiots, and so forth—without being subjected to an examination in advance, and without the master of the vessel, or one of the two officers immediately under him, making a statement on the manifest that the passengers have been legally admitted and that they are not subject to any of the objections particularly set forth in section 3. The particular clause to which I want to call the attention of the Senator is at the bottom of page 7:

It shall also be unlawful for any such person—

That is, any transportation company—

to bring to any port of the United States any alien who is unable to read or who can not become eligible under existing law.

And a penalty of $100 is prescribed if the officer does not comply with that provision of the bill.

I put this question to the Senator to think of it: Suppose a person who is here sends for his wife, mother, or father; how does the master of the vessel know, when the man or woman comes aboard, that he or she sustains that relationship? There must be some method of proof of it or else the master will not take the word of the individual and assume the risk of the imposition of the penalty.

Mr. LODGE. I see the force of the Senator's suggestion, that it might lead to a refusal on the part of the master. The exceptions ought to be expressed in the section.

Mr. STONE. Yes. I think it is sufficient to call the Senator's attention to it.

Mr. LODGE. I am obliged to the Senator for calling attention to it.

Mr. STONE. I do not know whether the Senator from Massachusetts or the conference committee will agree with me, but instead of the clause in section 3, at the top of page 3 of this report, which reads—

Persons who have committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude—

it seems to me it would be better to employ the language of the present law, which, as I understand, is that any person who has been convicted of or admits having committed a felony, crime, or other misdemeanor shall be excluded.

Mr. LODGE. The language here is the language of the Senate bill. It was very carefully considered. It is based on the recommendation of the Immigration Commission. We had a specific case brought to our attention at Messina, where a man had committed murder and escaped to this country, and under that law he could not be turned back.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. And yet the consul at that place knew the facts.

Mr. LODGE. The consul knew the facts and informed our Government; but we were unable to do anything about it, because he never had been convicted.

Mr. STONE. The language here is:

Persons who have committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude.

Who is to judge whether or not he has committed such an offense? How are we to know?

Mr. LODGE. That is a question of evidence, to be passed on by the Immigration Board, of course, as they pass on all these questions.

Mr. STONE. If some foreign official, acting for his Government, telegraphed to his consul in New York that A. B., an immigrant passenger on a certain ship, had committed a crime in his country, and asked that he be deported——

Mr. LODGE. Of course he could ask for extradition if he chose.

Mr. STONE. The offense might be extraditable, or it might not be.

Mr. LODGE. All felonies are extraditable.

Mr. STONE. Suppose he charges that he has committed a crime. Will the immigrant be tried here by the inspector, or will he be tried by a court, and will he not have the benefit of witnesses. He may never have had a trial or a hearing in his native country.

Mr. LODGE. All that is necessary for the immigration officials is to have it proved that he has committed a crime. Then they could exclude him. That is all.

Mr. STONE. Then is he to be tried here, before an administrative officer, with his witnesses in Europe?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly. He can appeal from the decision. That is done now. Cases of exclusion are constantly appealed.

Mr. STONE. Of course he can appeal from it, but I am talking about the difficulties that would confront a man, charged by some one in that indefinite way with having committed an offense, in proving that he had not committed it.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, the board will have to be satisfied by the evidence that he has committed the offense or he has confessed it.

Mr. STONE. But the present law is that if he has been convicted of committing an offense, or admits it, he shall not be permitted to land.

Mr. LODGE. This is enlarged, and was intentionally enlarged, in the bill that passed the Senate.

Mr. STONE. It seems to me that it places in the hands of foreign Governments a large power to retard the landing of people here upon a mere charge by a foreign Government that the person has committed an offense.

Mr. LODGE. We must have evidence of it, of course.

Mr. STONE. I do not see how it would be furnished if the man had not had a hearing or a trial.

Mr. LODGE. He could be extradited if they wished.

Mr. STONE. I simply desire to call attention to it at this time.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that the conference report be disagreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I now move that the Senate insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and ask a further conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. LODGE, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. PERCY the conferees on the part of the Senate.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to call up House bill 18787 for present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 18787) relating to the limitation of the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon a public work of the United States and of the District of Columbia, and of all persons employed in constructing, maintaining, or improving a river or harbor of the United States and of the District of Columbia, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Education and Labor with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 2, line 8, after the word "dredging," to strike out "snagging"; in line 11, after the word "shall," to strike out "terminate within nine hours from beginning of workday" and insert "be continuous, except for customary intervals for meals or rest"; in line 19, after the word "dredging," to strike out "snagging"; and in line 24, after the word "dredging," to strike out "snagging," so as to read:

That sections 1, 2, and 3 of an act entitled "An act relating to the limitation of the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon the public works of the United States and of the District of Columbia" be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1. That the service and employment of all laborers and mechanics who are now, or may hereafter be, employed by the Government of the United States or the District of Columbia, or by any contractor or subcontractor, upon a public work of the United States or of the District of Columbia, and of all persons who are now, or may hereafter be, employed by the Government of the United States or the District of Columbia, or any contractor or subcontractor, to perform services similar to those of laborers and mechanics in connection with dredging or rock excavation in any river or harbor of the United States or of the District of Columbia, is hereby limited and restricted to eight hours in any one calendar day, which eight hours shall be continuous except for customary intervals for meals or rest; and it shall be unlawful for any officer of the United States Government or of the District of Columbia, or any such contractor or subcontractor whose duty it shall be to employ, direct, or control the services of such laborers or mechanics or of such persons employed to perform services similar to those of laborers and mechanics in connection with dredging or rock excavation in any river or harbor of the United States or of the District of Columbia, to require or permit any such laborer or mechanic or any such person employed to perform services similar to those of laborers and mechanics in connection with dredging or rock excavation in any river or harbor of the United States or of the District of Columbia, to work more than eight hours in any calendar day, except in case of extraordinary emergency.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 5, after the word "persons," to strike out "performing directory, supervisory, or clerical duties, nor to masters, pilots, or mates," and insert "while not directly operating dredging or rock excavating machinery or tools," so as to read:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall apply or be construed to apply to persons while not directly operating dredging or rock excavating machinery or tools.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I move to amend the committee amendment by adding the words which I send to the desk. I will say in explanation of my action in offering the amendment that it is an exact copy of the exception contained in the eight-hour law, which was approved June 19, 1912. I thought that possibly some provision of this bill might operate to supersede that exception, and as it was thoroughly understood by the Senate that it would constitute an exception, I want to preserve that right by incorporating that feature now. I have presented it to the Senator from Indiana, who has charge of the bill, and if he has any objection he will indicate it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 7, after the amendment of the committee and before the period, add the following:

Nor to persons engaged in the construction or repair of levees or revetments necessary for protection against floods or overflow on the navigable rivers of the United States.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, the language of the proposed amendment to the amendment is substantially the same as that creating an exception in the eight-hour bill enacted last year. That exception was at the time of its adoption the subject of some discussion in the Senate. The exception here created is not as broad, however, as in that case. I have not had time in which to fully forecast in my own mind its scope and effect, but it seems to apply to dredge workers on certain work a rule applied under the existing eight-hour law to all the workers on Government work under the same circumstances. In any event while I do not give to the amendment to the amendment an unqualified indorsement, I still do not feel that any consequence attaching to it is such as to justify me in delaying expeditious action on the bill.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Education and Labor was, on page 3, line 17, after the word "dredging," to strike out "snagging," so as to read:

VIOLATION OF ACT BY OFFICER OR CONTRACTOR PUNISHABLE.

SEC. 2. That any officer or agent of the Government of the United States or of the District of Columbia, or any contractor or subcontractor whose duty it shall be to employ, direct, or control any laborer or mechanic employed upon a public work of the United States or of the District of Columbia, or any person employed to perform services similar to those of laborers and mechanics in connection with dredging or rock excavation in any river or harbor of the United States or of the District of Columbia, who shall intentionally violate any provision of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and for each and every such offense shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine not to exceed $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court having jurisdiction thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 8, after the word "dredging," to strike out "snagging"; and, in line 11, after the word "act," to insert "or may be entered into under the provisions of appropriation acts approved prior to the passage of this act," so as to read:

EXISTING CONTRACTS NOT AFFECTED BY ACT.

SEC. 3. That the provisions of this act shall not be so construed as to in any manner apply to or affect contractors or subcontractors, or to limit the hours of daily service of laborers or mechanics engaged upon a public work of the United States or of the District of Columbia, or persons employed to perform services similar to those of laborers and mechanics in connection with dredging or rock excavation in any river or harbor of the United States or of the District of Columbia, for which contracts have been entered into prior to the passing of this act or may be entered into under the provisions of appropriation acts approved prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 13, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 4. That this act shall become effective and be in force on and after January 1, 1913.

Mr. SHIVELY. On page 4, line 15, I move to amend the amendment by striking out "January" and inserting "March," so as to read:

That this act shall become effective and be in force on and after March 1, 1913.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SHIVELY. On page 2, line 11, there is evidently a typographical error. After the word "in" the word "and" should be "any." I move to strike out "and" and insert "any."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PROTECTION OF INTERSTATE SHIPMENTS.

Mr. SMOOT obtained the floor.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from Utah yield for a moment? I desire to submit a report from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SMOOT. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16450) to punish the unlawful breaking of seals of railroad cars containing interstate or foreign shipments, the unlawful entering of such cars, the stealing of freight and express packages or baggage or articles in process of transportation in interstate shipment, and the felonious asportation of such freight or express packages or baggage or articles therefrom into another district of the United States, and the felonious possession or reception of the same, to report it favorably with an amendment (S. Rept. 1132).

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It is quite important, and I believe there will be no opposition whatever to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks for the present consideration of the bill just reported. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object to the present consideration of the bill, I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. I understand the reason for this bill to be that it is difficult, in many cases impossible, to prove the venue.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the only reason for it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that is the only reason for it. Then, I should not object to the present consideration of the bill if it were so amended as to provide that in cases where the prosecution had been instituted, and there had been a failure to prove a venue, this should become the law; but in its present shape, it seems to me, it is obnoxious to objection, because, I think, it provides later on in the bill that nothing shall operate to prevent the exercise of the jurisdiction of the State in criminal cases of this sort, and that where one has been convicted before the State court he shall not be convicted before the Federal court. Yet, notwithstanding that, the practical operation of the bill would be this: The carriers interested in the execution of the law would invariably bring their prosecutions in the Federal court for two reasons—first, because it would be more convenient to them; and, secondly, because they have the idea at any rate that conviction would more certainly follow.

I will not object to the bill if the Senator will agree to amend it, and let the bill take effect only in cases where there has been a failure to prove the venue; but, in its present shape, I would object to its consideration at this time.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not feel that I have any authority to agree to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi. There is an amendment reported by the committee, namely, that where there is a judgment of conviction, or a judgment of acquittal, if the prosecution be in the Federal court that is a bar.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that it applies to either jurisdiction.

Mr. CUMMINS. If it is in the State court it is a bar in the Federal court.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that.

Mr. CUMMINS. But I do not feel that I could for the committee agree to an amendment which would make the prosecution in the Federal court conditioned upon the failure of the prosecution in the State court. The Senator from Mississippi may remember that this is a House bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; but, Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa will excuse me a moment, I do not want to make the prosecution in the Federal court conditional upon the failure of prosecution in the State court, or vice versa. What I want is that the condition upon which the Federal court shall take jurisdiction shall be the impossibility or difficulty of proving the venue; in other words, that there shall be an affidavit made to that effect as a foundation of the jurisdiction of the Federal court.

Mr. CUMMINS. An affidavit by whom?

Mr. WILLIAMS. By whoever is prosecuting the case.

Mr. CUMMINS. The district attorney oftener than otherwise is the prosecutor, of course.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that.

Mr. CUMMINS. And he might not be able to make an affidavit of that character.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the carrier would be able to find somebody to make the affidavit. There would be no trouble about making the affidavit and about that becoming a part of the indictment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course, if we have the bill up for consideration the Senator from Mississippi can very easily move that amendment. I do not know that I would oppose it at all, but I do not feel like agreeing for the committee to the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is a request for unanimous consent. It seems to me that the danger is so palpable and obvious that if the bill becomes a law it will take the jurisdiction of all offenses of this sort practically out of the State courts into the Federal courts, to the detriment, where a man is really innocent, of the arrested person, forcing him to go to a distant forum instead of one near home; and it will become so evident in the interest of the real prosecutors, the carriers, the express companies, to throw all these cases into the Federal court that it will substantially do away with the jurisdiction of the State courts upon questions of this sort.

So I am not willing to grant unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill until the committee has at least had an opportunity to consider that point and see if they can not amend the bill to meet the objection. I object to its present consideration.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Mississippi will withdraw the objection until I can say just a few words.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I withhold the objection.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The objection indicated by the Senator, if it is an objection, is a minor one. The fundamental objection to the bill is that it disregards one of the specific provisions of the Constitution of the United States. If there is a principle in our system of government which is fundamental, it is that the venue of a prosecution shall be established before a trial can take place. The system of dragging persons to distant points and to try them there for offenses went out of existence when the Constitution of the United States was adopted. The mere difficulty of proving the venue does not dispense with the necessity of doing it. It may be that the uncertainty was one of the possible means of escape that was contemplated when this system of government was established. It is no reason for dispensing with the necessary and fundamental principle of proving venue that it is difficult to prove it. There are a number of cases where that result has worked out. It would be better that the defendant should go free than that that fundamental principle of American citizenship should be violated.

I am not prepared to admit that because violence is practiced or crimes committed against property that is in transit in interstate commerce it shall constitute an offense against the National Government. It may be that in these times when that particular feature of our Constitution is growing all the time something has been said heretofore by courts or done by Congress that would make that a necessary extension of a doctrine already established and recognized. It is a close question, with the doubt in my mind against it; but I have no sort of doubt about the proposition that the mere uncertainty of the particular place where a certain crime is committed can not be made to dispense with the sixth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which says:

> In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district—

Not only the State but the district—

> wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course, the bill does not relieve the Government from the necessity of proving the venue of the crime.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It must prove it to be within the jurisdiction.

Mr. CUMMINS. The only difference is that when a case is prosecuted in the Federal court the crime must be proved to have been committed in the district, I assume, in which the prosecution is brought forward, whereas in the other case it generally must be proven to have occurred in the county in which the crime was committed.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. You can not prove that it occurred in a district without proving that it occurred in some county. It is no more difficult to prove that it occurred in a county than to prove that it occurred in a district, because the district is made up of counties.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is a little more difficult, because the county is smaller than the district.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The particular locus of the crime will be established in either event. But in addition to that very essential feature, I think the Senator from Iowa could enlighten some of us at least if he would give us the benefit of an explanation by him as to why he thinks that the simple fact that an interstate train has been burglarized—for it is burglary in Arkansas to break into a freight car that has been sealed—constitutes an offense against the National Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not introduce the bill.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I do not know anyone who is better able to sustain that position, if it is capable of being sustained, notwithstanding the Senator did not introduce the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I reported the bill at the command of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The committee owes it to the Senate to be able to demonstrate the legality or validity of the bills it presents. If the Senator is not able to do it, I do not know anyone on this floor who can do it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no real doubt about its validity if it passes. Of course, if it is passed it is passed by virtue of our power to regulate commerce among the States, because we have the right to protect and defend commodities in interstate commerce. The Senator from Arkansas is altogether too well versed in the judicial literature of that subject to need any further suggestion of mine.

Now, as to the necessity for such a bill, all that I can say is that it was represented and proven to us that there had been recently more than one miscarriage of justice because it had been found to be impossible to establish in the State courts the venue of the crime charged, and it was believed that this would enable prosecutions to be more effective. There is one case brought to our attention where a baggageman committed larceny upon a trunk coming up, I think, possibly from Jacksonville, through South Carolina, North Carolina, and Virginia, to Washington. He stole a large amount of jewelry from the trunk. It was found upon his person in the District of Columbia. He was prosecuted in the District of Columbia, and he was acquitted because he did not commit the larceny here and because there is no statute in the District of Columbia making it a crime to be found in the possession of stolen property. That is an instance of the inadequacy of the present law.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That is a defect in the legislation of the District. That does not tend to support the constitutional principle that the mere circumstance of property being transported in interstate commerce is immune, or rather so completely subjects it to the national authority that any interference with it constitutes an offense against the National Government. That matter can be carried a long way. If that were true, no one would dare to assault, except under pain of prosecution in a Federal court, an employee upon a railroad train hauling interstate freight; two passengers could not engage in a broil without subjecting themselves to prosecution in the Federal court. Felony or larceny or any other offense committed on a train engaged in interstate commerce would immediately cease to become a violation of the law of the particular State in which the transaction took place. That would become a national offense. The logic of the thing leads it beyond the doctrine for which the Senator is contending.

Now, I would suppose that when the Judiciary Committee proposed a measure that so radically interferes with the existing condition of affairs that committee would be able to sustain its position by some tangible reference to existing authority, and would not leave it to be assumed that it is because of the provision of the Constitution of the United States, which gives Congress the power to regulate commerce between the States, was a cure-all and a cover-all that embraces everything anybody chooses to say was within its jurisdiction.

As I caught the reading of the bill, the prosecution was not confined to any particular district. It seemed to be a kind of blanket proposition that if an interstate train was robbed from the time it started out anywhere along the route it would give jurisdiction to deal with the offender if they could find him anywhere.

The Senator from Iowa admits now that the territorial scope has been limited by the provision of the Constitution which I have just read, which brought it down as one of the districts in which the United States court served in the several States, and it would be necessary to establish the venue before the prosecution could take place. That, of course, limits the scope of the bill very much from what those who were so ardently interested in it deemed to be the case.

I think myself this is so radical a measure I believe the Senator from Iowa would be justified in taking a little time to prepare himself and see what has become of similar efforts to extend the national jurisdiction, if any such have ever been made, and see if the adjudicated cases would in the slightest degree justify this attempted extension of national authority.

I am not one of the cranks who think that the National Government has no powers. I think it ought to have ample power to carry out every duty imposed upon it. I am not a strict constructionist on any line any further than the rationale of the situation requires. When I make the suggestions I do it is not at all out of any special jealousy of the jurisdiction of the State courts. I express a preference in many respects for the measure and character of justice administered in the Federal courts. But what I have to say about it is prompted entirely by considerations from that view of it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I shall not enter upon any argument in regard to the bill now. I have no great interest in the bill. I presented it to the Senate because I was commanded to do so by the Judiciary Committee. I believed it was good legislation and I believe it is constitutional. But, at any rate, it would be idle to discuss the bill at this time inasmuch as it is not to be considered at this time. If hereafter it shall come before the Senate, I will be very glad to respond to some of the suggestions which have been made by the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi objects, and the bill goes to the calendar.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. POINDEXTER. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back favorably, with an amendment, the bill (S. 4545) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Ellensburg, in the State of Washington, and I also report back with amendments the bill (S. 4547) to provide a site and to erect a public building at Aberdeen, Wash.

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent that the two bills just reported may be put on their passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SMOOT. I do. I suppose it will not take any time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington asks for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4545) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Ellensburg, in the State of Washington. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committe of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the committee was, in line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "eighty-five," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected upon the site already acquired in the city of Ellensburg, Wash., a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post office in the said city of Ellensburg, Wash., the cost of said building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $85,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JONES. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4547.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4547) to provide a site and erect a public building at Aberdeen, Wash., reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 4, to strike out "purchase or acquire by condemnation of a site for and"; in line 5, after the word "erected," to strike out "thereon" and insert "upon the site already acquired"; in line 11, before the word "building," to strike out the words "site and"; and, in line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected upon the site already acquired a suitable and commodious building for the use and accommodation of the post office and other offices of the Government at Aberdeen, Wash

The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed, for the building complete, the sum of $120,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 80 feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for the purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JONES. I suggest that the title be amended by striking out the reference to a site. The site has already been purchased.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the erection of a public building at Aberdeen, in the State of Washington."

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 20, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Help us, O God, our heavenly Father, to take up the work of the week with joy and gladness, praise and gratitude; putting our minds and hearts into each task, great or small, that we may accomplish something for ourselves, for those we love, and our fellow men that will redound to the glory and honor of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

HOMESTEAD ALLOTMENTS OF CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIANS.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25507) to authorize certain changes in homestead allotments of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians in Oklahoma.

The bill was read in full.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to know what bill is up. Is it a bill from the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. MANN. A bill to authorize certain changes in Indian allotments.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I see the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] is present.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will consent, this is a bill of my colleague Mr. CARTER, who is ill in bed. I do not know anything about it, and I do not know if he were here he could explain away the objections of the gentleman from Illinois; but I ask that the bill remain on the calendar, without prejudice, on account of Mr. CARTER being absent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENLARGED HOMESTEADS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 23351) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead."

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, is the Clerk reading the original bill or the committee amendment, may I ask?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk is reading the original bill.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk report the substitute instead of the original bill. It is merely a matter of saving time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the Clerk read the substitute in lieu of the original bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That sections 3 and 4 of the act entitled 'An act to provide for an enlarged homestead,' approved February 19, 1909, and of an act entitled 'An act to provide for an enlarged homestead,' approved June 17, 1910, be, and the same are hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 3. That any homestead entryman of lands of the character herein described, upon which entry final proof has not been made, shall have the right to enter public lands, subject to the provisions of this act, contiguous to his former entry, which shall not, together with the original entry, exceed 320 acres.

"'SEC. 4. That at the time of making final proofs, as provided in section 2291 of the Revised Statutes, the entryman under this act shall, in addition to the proofs and affidavits required under said section, prove by two credible witnesses that at least one-sixteenth of the area embraced in such entry was continuously cultivated for agricultural crops other than native grasses beginning with the second year of the entry, and that at least one-eighth of the area embraced in the entry was so continuously cultivated beginning with the third year of the entry: Provided, That any qualified person who has heretofore made or hereafter makes additional entry under the provisions of section 3 of this act may be allowed to perfect title to his original entry by showing compliance with the provisions of section 2291 of the Revised Statutes respecting such original entry, and thereafter in making proof upon his additional entry shall be credited with residence maintained upon his original entry from the date of such original entry, but the cultivation required upon entries made under this act must be shown respecting such additional entry, which cultivation, while it may be made upon either the original or additional entry, or upon both entries, must be cultivation in addition to that relied upon and used in making proof upon the original entry; or, if he elects, his original and additional entries may be considered as one, with full credit for residence upon and improvements made under his original entry, in which event the amount of cultivation herein required shall apply to the total area of the combined entry, and proof may be made upon such combined entry whenever it can be shown that the cultivation required by this section has been performed; and to this end the time within which proof must be made upon such combined entry is hereby extended to seven years from the date of original entry: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to require residence upon the combined entry in excess of the period of residence, as required by section 2291 of the Revised Statutes.'"

During the reading.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask if it has not been the custom in submitting request for unanimous consent to first read the title of the bill? I can not see the necessity for reading a bill, especially a bill of some length, if there is going to be an objection.

The SPEAKER. There is no rule about that, but the Chair thinks the better practice is to read the bill, so that Members will be informed as to what it is. The title might convey no information at all. The Clerk will proceed with the reading.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the substitute.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish the gentleman would state just what this bill accomplishes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, prior to the enactment of the enlarged-homestead law of February 19, 1909 (35 Stat., 639), many homestead entrymen had made a filing upon 160 acres of land within the territory that was afterwards designated as dry-farming land, subject to entry under the enlarged 320-acre homestead law. Section 3 of that law as above set forth expressly authorizes any homestead entryman of land of the character therein described, who had not made final proof, to take 160 acres, or such an additional amount necessary, where there was contiguous vacant land, in order that he might have the benefits of the 320-acre homestead law, providing he made the requisite cultivation and complied with the law as to residence. In other words, that section of the law was intended to put the homestead entryman who had already located on the same basis as those who were thereafter permitted to locate, providing there was vacant adjoining or contiguous land which the original entryman could take. It was never intended that he should reside 10 years or any longer period on the land than the 320-acre entryman was required to do to secure title.

This bill is simply intended to carry out the object of section 3, and the purpose of Congress in enacting the enlarged homestead law and to correct the hardships which the adverse ruling referred to has inflicted upon a great many homestead entrymen. In fact, it is quite positively asserted by large numbers of the homestead entrymen that they never would have taken the additional 160 acres if they had had any intimation at that time that the Interior Department would ever require them to make a full additional period of residence upon their claims after the taking of such additional entry before they were permitted to prove up and obtain title to their additional entries.

This bill does not relieve them from making the necessary cultivation and improvements, nor from making the full residence, as required of all homestead entrymen; but it does relieve them from any additional residence requirements. The measure is looked upon as eminently fair and just, and the committee therefore recommends its adoption.

It may be suggested that unless the bill is passed in the very near future that those entrymen can not get the benefit of it, but will be compelled to submit to the inconveniences and hardships of the unjust additional residence before they can be permitted to obtain title to their land. The committee therefore deems it especially appropriate that Congress should act upon this measure as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Colorado yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I understand that under one law the homesteader holds 160 acres of land to which he may obtain title, and under another and subsequent law a homesteader takes 320 acres of land to which he may obtain title. There is that discrimination at present in the law?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. And it is only sought here to modify the law so as to give the former entryman and the subsequent entryman an equal show under the law, or to make the law apply to each the same? Is that the only difference?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is the only difference; and it applies only in the sections designated as dry or arid land by the Secretary of the Interior; only in portions of the country where dry farming 320-acre homesteads is applicable. That is all there is to the bill. The Secretary of the Interior states that in his judgment it is only fair and just to the original entryman, and approves of the measure.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next one.

EXCHANGE OF SCHOOL LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25738) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange lands for school sections within an Indian, military, national forest, or other reservation, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to make exchange of lands with the several States for those portions of the lands granted in aid of common schools, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, which lie within the exterior limits of any Indian, military, national forest, or other reservation, the said exchange to be made in the manner and form and subject to the limitations and conditions of sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by act of February 28, 1891 (26 Stat., p. 796), and any such exchange, whether heretofore or hereafter approved, shall restore full title in the United States to the base land without formal conveyance thereof by the State: Provided, That upon completion of the exchange the lands relinquished, reconveyed, or assigned as base lands shall immediately become a part of the reservation within which they are situate, and in case the same shall be found within the exterior limits of more than one reservation they shall become a part of that reservation which was first established: Provided further, That this act shall not be construed to authorize the approval of selections embracing lands withdrawn as mineral under the act of June 25, 1910, entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to make withdrawals of public lands in certain cases" (36 U. S. Stat. L., pp. 847–848), until such lands have been found to be nonmineral and for that reason restored, but nothing herein contained shall prevent a limited approval, when the lands are within only a coal withdrawal, excluding from the approval coal deposits.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] desire to pass this over again or not?

Mr. RAKER. I would like the House to take up the bill and act upon it, if possible, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, and I trust that he will not see his way clear to object.

Mr. MANN. I am afraid I do.

Mr. RAKER. I will state to the gentleman that the Senate bill, of which this is a counterpart, word for word, except the last paragraph, which provides that the act shall not apply to the State of Idaho, should be passed over. There is a Senate amendment put onto this bill, stating that it shall not apply to the State of Idaho at the instance of the late Senator Heyburn. Otherwise the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate, after fully considering the matter, unanimously passed it, and it passed the Senate. Now, the House Committee on Public Lands again took up this bill and recommended that the Senate bill be called up and for the House bill to be laid aside, and that the Senate bill be passed.

Mr. MANN. The Senate bill was on the calendar?

Mr. RAKER. That was before the Senate bill was referred to the committee. Two weeks ago, when the matter came up, the Speaker then referred the Senate bill to the Committee on Public Lands, since which time they have not had a meeting. But I am satisfied, if this bill passes, the Senate will see fit to pass the House bill, although it has already passed the Senate bill. Of course, as to the details of the matter, I am satisfied that the gentleman from Illinois is quite familiar with them.

Mr. MANN. More or less.

Mr. RAKER. Well, both more or less. I feel that it is a just bill, one that our people demand, and one that will actually bring good results.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman wherein and in what respect this bill, if it becomes a law, will change existing law, so far as concerns the right of a State to select lands in lieu of section 16 and section 36 within an Indian reservation?

Mr. RAKER. It will not change it in any way except that it will make it clear and it will obviate a decision of the Federal judge for the southern district of California relative to land in place. As to Indian reservations, it will make no change at all. The Department of the Interior have been holding that they could make the exchange and that the law was sufficient. Now, the district court of southern California held that a school section in place, surveyed, could not be exchanged. That decision stands and has been acted upon by our courts in California and many others, and it makes a conflict, whereas if this bill becomes a law it will permit the department immediately to take up the matter and make a full and thorough investigation of these school sections on the lands in the reserve and approve or disapprove them, as the case may be. In regard to California, the House last year put on an appropriation bill $28,000 for the purpose of investigating the lands in that State that were in these reserves, to determine whether or not they were mineral or nonmineral. That work has been practically all done. It is up now to the department to go over each case separately—that is, the lists that have been presented by the State of California—to determine whether or not any of them should be approved. With this bill enacted, the moment they approve them the question of title is eliminated and the parties obtain their title, and the Government of the United States will then have the land exchange complete, with its title free from all complications.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If we reenact existing law for exchanging lands in lieu of those in Indian reservations, I do not see that it will change the matter, so far as your court decision is concerned, if the court has held that the exchange can not be made.

Mr. RAKER. There is a question of interpretation there, and this act would provide that these lands in place are subject to exchange, and it will leave no question outstanding. In other words, it puts it in shape so that the matter can be fully disposed of.

Mr. ADAIR. Why is the State of Idaho excepted from this legislation?

Mr. RAKER. Senator Heyburn was one of the members of the Senate Committee on Public Lands. He made a brief statement in regard to the matter, and said he did not desire the department to have anything to do with the lands in Idaho, and therefore in order to obviate any question as to Idaho, the committee placed upon the bill a provision excluding the lands in that State.

Mr. ADAIR. If this legislation is good for California, why would it not be good for Idaho?

Mr. RAKER. It is, and the Committee on the Public Lands took it up, and there seemed to be no question about it from any section. Gentlemen on the committee who had had wide experience in these matters could see no detrimental effect, but, on the contrary, only a beneficial effect from the passage of this legislation. In other words, if the gentleman will examine the report of the Department of the Interior he will see that the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the Secretary of the Interior, the Assistant Secretary, and the attorney for the Department of the Interior have gone fully into this matter.

Mr. ADAIR. Does not the gentleman believe that the State of Idaho should be included, notwithstanding the fact that Senator Heyburn objected to it?

Mr. RAKER. If I had my personal way about it, knowing all the facts, I should say yes.

Mr. ADAIR. Do you not believe we should make it include Idaho, and that the House should pass it in that way?

Mr. RAKER. I do; yes.

Mr. ADAIR. In other words, there does not seem to be any just reason why any State should be discriminated against, or any State left out of this legislation.

Mr. RAKER. None at all.

Mr. ADAIR. If it is good for one State, it is good for any other.

Mr. RAKER. I think so.

Mr. ADAIR. If it is fair and just legislation, it should apply to all States alike.

Mr. RAKER. The Senator made no special objections.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois did reserve the right to object.

Mr. MANN. I should like to suggest to the gentleman that if a similar Senate bill is pending before the Committee on the Public Lands it would be a work of supererogation to pass this bill and send it to the Senate.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to appear overanxious or tenacious about these matters, but the matter has been up many times and has been gone over in all its phases before the Committee on the Public Lands at least four times. I began last fall to take it up personally with the authorities in California, and with such a general feeling on the part of the authorities of the State and the Land Department in relation to this matter it seemed as though the House ought to take up the bill and consider it and then pass the bill, or take any other course in relation to it. I think the bill as it stands fully and thoroughly covers the matter and that the parties are entitled to have it enacted into legislation. I trust the gentleman from Illinois will see his way clear not to object.

Mr. MANN. I examined the first bills on the subject in the House and at first I thought that they were bad bills. I know the gentleman from California maintains quite a different view. But if the bill is to be acted upon in the House at all naturally it would be the Senate bill which is now reposing in the hands of the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, while I am not a bit desirous of having any bill contain my name, it is a question of legislation and, out of deference to the gentleman from Illinois, who has the right to object, I would ask that this bill be passed for this call, so that we may take up the Senate bill if it is acted on by the Committee on the Public Lands the coming week.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TREATMENT OF JUVENILE AND FIRST OFFENDERS.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 21594) to appoint a commission to consider and report upon the general subject of the treatment of juvenile and first offenders, together with the best system of detention of Federal prisoners.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to appoint three commissioners, one of whom may be nominated by the Attorney General, who shall consider and report upon the general subject of the treatment of juvenile and first offenders, and in connection with the investigation the commissioners, under the direction of the Attorney General, may inquire into the conditions of jails and places of detention throughout the United States in which offenders against Federal statutes are confined, either before or after sentence, and then shall report to Congress at its next session its recommendations with respect to the best system of dealing with juvenile and first offenders and the best system of the detention of Federal prisoners while waiting trial and such other recommendations upon the subject as may seem to them expedient. For the expense of the commission there is hereby appropriated the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

With the following amendment recommended by the committee:

Page 1, lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "one of whom may be nominated by the Attorney General."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have a statement from the gentleman in charge of the bill as to what may be accomplished by it.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I think the object of this bill appears very plainly on the face of it. It is in response to a general demand all over the country for some method of treatment of juvenile offenders. A large number of charitable organizations and humane societies have manifested great interest in this subject as to the treatment of this class of offenders and looking into the matter of improving the handling of juvenile offenders. It is admitted that there is no system for treating these offenders that has been satisfactory and sufficient and that there is great need for an improvement in any method so far adopted or suggested.

For that reason, under the limitation of $20,000, the committee thought it right and appropriate to have a commission of three appointed to investigate the entire subject, also to include in the investigation the best method of detention of Federal prisoners awaiting trial. I say that the expenditure of this amount of money, $20,000, would be justified and, it is believed, would furnish the information to Congress that would be very valuable for providing a method for the treatment of these young offenders.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we have an International Prison Congress which has had a number of meetings both in this country and abroad for the purpose of studying and devising the manner of treatment of offenders, and now does the gentleman believe that the appointment of three gentlemen to report at the next session of Congress on the subject of the treatment of juvenile offenders would enlighten us much?

Mr. HOUSTON. In reply to that, I will say that the very congress referred to by the gentleman has discussed this subject and asked or suggested that Congress should legislate on the subject. They have not pointed out or designed a method or plan, but have appealed to the Attorney General of the United States, and the Attorney General, as the hearings in the case show, states that this bill is a very proper one, and he favors the appointment of a commission, recognizing the fact that it is better for Congress to investigate before a measure is proposed. The suggestion comes from him as well as the international congress referred to by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. The bill also provides that the commission shall investigate the conditions of the jail and places of detention throughout the United States in which offenders against Federal statutes are confined either before or after sentence. Does not that practically provide for an investigation of State penitentiaries, of county jails, and of many municipal places of confinement? Is it the intention to have three commissioner appointed by the President make a report as to these jails throughout the country, and if so, what purpose is there in that?

Mr. HOUSTON. The limitation on the appropriation providing for the commission would limit the amount of work they could do. As a matter of course, they could not investigate all the jails, but they could make many investigations in different sections of the country of the different conditions from which we could get some idea, and it is thought by the Attorney General a sufficient amount of information to formulate legislation that is much needed and that is called for by the humane organizations throughout the country. The spirit of the age is to devise a more humane system and one that will reform rather than demoralize the youth of the country that fall into this class. The comment has been made that the mode of treating juvenile offenders now in practice in this country makes more criminals than all our reformatory institutions reform.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman will remember that while the bill carries an appropriation of $20,000, when that is exhausted it would be in order in the House to make an additional appropriation, because there is no limitation in this bill, except that the commission shall report at the next session of Congress. Whether that would be at the special session that we are about to hold, I do not know, but I am quite certain that the commission would not be able to report at that time.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the necessity requiring the commission to report at the next session of Congress necessarily limits the amount of work to be done, and furthermore in the case of a somewhat similar commission it filed a report, and experience showed that it did not take a great length of time, and that some very valuable help was the result of that.

Under leave to print, I append herewith the following:

[House Report No. 919, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

TREATMENT OF JUVENILE AND FIRST OFFENDERS.

Mr. HOUSTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report to accompany H. R. 21594:

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration House bill 21594, report the same back with the following amendment, and recommend that the bill as amended do pass.

Page 1, lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "one of whom may be nominated by the Attorney General."

The Hon. George W. Wickersham, Attorney General of the United States, appeared by invitation of the committee and was requested to give the purpose and scope of this bill and also such reasons as appeared to furnish a necessity for the enactment of this measure. He informed the committee that the bill grew out of suggestions made at the meeting of the International Prison Association last fall, and suggestions made in a letter from Paul U. Kellogg, one of the active participants in the Associated Charities in New York, to Senator ROOT, which had been transmitted to the Attorney General with a view that it should be taken up by the Department of Justice.

In this letter appears the following paragraph:

"There were several things which the visit to this country of the international leaders in prison reform brought out clearly: First, that to the minds of the great prison men of Europe our county jails are breeding places of crime, and ought to be wiped out. Second, that our plan of iron-bar interior cells, even with more than one person in a cell, is a moral and sanitary anachronism. For two generations prison architects have been copying the cell scheme which was built into Auburn, but of which such men as Maj. Rogers, of the English prison system; J. S. Gibbons, of the Irish prison board; Dr. Vambery, of Hungary, and others, were unsparing in their private comment. Third, that our system of handling minor offenders in the petty courts and jails probably produces more criminals than our world-famous reformatories reform. Fourth, that the prison industries in the different States present a wide range of good and evil, calling for a thorough overhauling of the whole question."

It is claimed further that—

"We have no criminal statistics worth anything, either to reveal our errors and mistakes or to prove the excellencies of our reformatory institutions."

The Attorney General insists that great difficulty arises constantly in the treatment of juvenile offenders and calls attention to the fact that there are two Federal institutions to which juvenile offenders can be sent; that for boys is the National Training School for Boys, and the maximum age there is 16 years. There is an institution in the District for colored girls; there is no place for white girls. In the case of juvenile offenders over 16 years of age we are dependent wholly on State institutions. He further states that—

"At the present time I believe there is only one institution to which we can now send Federal prisoners over 16 years of age and under 21."—

That is, within the reform-school age—

"and that is the Elmira Reformatory, for the reason that in almost all of the States they have adopted the indeterminate sentence plan and they will not receive a Federal prisoner who is not subjected to the complete discipline of the State, which does not involve dealing on the indeterminate sentence basis; and, of course, I have no power under the law to subject a Federal prisoner to an indeterminate sentence by State authority."

He also states that many complaints are made as to the condition of jails to which Federal prisoners have to be sent, who are awaiting trial and can not give bail.

The Attorney General calls attention to the fact that in 1908 an act was passed by Congress (35 Stat., 303) authorizing the President to appoint three commissioners to investigate the condition of the jails of the District of Columbia and, in connection with this investigation, other similar institutions of the United States and report to the President; also, to make such recommendations as seemed to them expedient. As a result of this investigation a report was transmitted to Congress (Doc. 648, 60th Cong., 2d sess.), after which Congress enacted the Federal parole law, applying to persons who are sentenced to the penitentiary for more than one year; a probation law for the District of Columbia; a law for the establishment of the workhouse, which has been erected at Occoquan, and which the Attorney General regards as a model institution of its kind.

The committee regards the subject of this inquiry sufficiently important to authorize the expenditure within the limits proposed in this measure. It is believed that the treatment of juvenile offenders and short-term prisoners should call for careful investigation with the purpose in view of improving, by legislation, the conditions now existing.

The care of juvenile offenders is entitled to the most serious consideration in order that reformation may be effected rather than demoralization by the conditions surrounding their custody.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 18, 1912.

The committee this day met, Hon. HENRY D. CLAYTON (chairman) presiding.

Hon. George W. Wickersham, Attorney General of the United States, appeared by invitation of the committee and was heard on H. R. 21594, which is as follows:

"[H. R. 21594, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

"A bill to appoint a commission to consider and report upon the general subject of the treatment of juvenile and first offenders, together with the best system of detention of Federal prisoners.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to appoint three commissioners, one of whom may be nominated by the Attorney General, who shall consider and report upon the general subject of the treatment of juvenile and first offenders, and in connection with the investigation the commissioners, under the direction of the Attorney General, may inquire into the conditions of jails and places of detention throughout the United States in which offenders against Federal statutes are confined, either before or after sentence, and then shall report to Congress at its next session its recommendations with respect to the best system of dealing with juvenile and first offenders, and the best system of the detention of Federal prisoners while waiting trial, and such other recommendations upon the subject as may seem to them expedient. For the expense of the commission there is hereby appropriated the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Attorney General, the committee has invited you to come and give the purpose and scope of H. R. 21594 and the reason for its enactment, and any views that you may think proper in respect thereto. We will be glad to hear you.

STATEMENT OF THE HON. GEORGE W. WICKERSHAM, ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this bill grew out of a suggestion made to me at the time of the meeting of the International Prison Association here a year ago last fall. At that time I received a letter from Paul U. Kellogg, who is one of the most active people in the Associated Charities in New York, who wrote to me that he had sent a suggestion to Senator ROOT which, at the suggestion of Senator ROOT, he transmitted to me, the Senator thinking that that had better be taken up through the Department of Justice than in any other way.

In his letter to Senator ROOT he said [reading]:

"There were several things which the visit to this country of the international leaders in prison reform brought out clearly: First, that to the minds of the great prison men of Europe our county jails are breeding places of crime and ought to be wiped out; second, that our plan of iron-bar interior cells, even with more than one person in a cell, is a moral and sanitary anachronism. For two generations prison architects have been copying the cell scheme which was built into Auburn, but of which such men as Maj. Rogers, of the English prison system; J. S. Gibbons, of the Irish prison board; Dr. Vambery, of Hungary, and others were unsparing in their private comment; third, that our system of handling minor offenders in the petty courts and jails probably produces more criminals than our world-famous reformatories reform; fourth, that the prison industries in the different States present a wide range of good and evil, calling for a thorough overhauling of the whole question.

"And finally, to quote Sir Evelyn Ruggles-Brise, the head of the British prison commission, we have no criminal statistics worth anything either to reveal our errors and mistakes or to prove the excellencies of our reformatory institutions.

"These delegates came to this country anticipating great things. They were not altogether disappointed, and stated that American theory and practice, notably the probation system, indeterminate sentences, and the reformatory methods, would influence legislation and procedure in every country of Europe. At the same time their presence here afforded a means for stock taking on the part of Americans, and it strikes me that the congress which met in Washington at the invitation of this Government might be made the occasion for pressing forward for a nation-wide reformation in this field. Mr. Taft's repeated expressions with respect to the law's delays makes me think that he would be responsive to a program of constructive reform in this complementary field. The American member of the International Prison Commission is, as you will remember, in Dr. Barrow's case, officially responsible to the Department of State. Would it be possible, through that department or through the Attorney General's office, to institute such a commission or inquiry as could make a general presentation of the whole situation? I have in mind something as thorough as the United States Industrial Commission of 1900 or the recent poor-law commission in England, which has presented a remarkable report to Parliament within the last two years.

"It may be that a congressional commission would be more effective. The matter is one of which you, as a former Cabinet member and a present Member of the Senate, are in an especially favorable position to judge."

That being transmitted to me, of course I could not see at once that there was much involved in the suggestion which was hardly within the practical cognizance of the Federal Government; but there was also a great deal that was a proper subject of Federal consideration.

A great difficulty arises constantly in the treatment of juvenile offenders. There are two Federal institutions to which juvenile offenders can be sent—that for boys is the National Training School for Boys and the maximum age there is 17 years. There is an institution for colored girls only—that is the Girls' Reform School in the District of Columbia, which has a maximum capacity of about 100. There is no place for white girls. Therefore, in the case of all juvenile offenders over 17 we are dependent wholly on State institutions. At the present time I believe there is only one institution to which we can now send Federal prisoners over 17 years of age and under 21 (that is, within the reform-school age) and that is the Elmira Reformatory, for the reason that in almost all of the States they have adopted the indeterminate-sentence plan, and they will not receive a Federal prisoner who is not subjected to the complete discipline of the State which does not involve dealing on the indeterminate-sentence basis, and, of course, I have no power under the law to subject a Federal prisoner to an indeterminate sentence by State authority.

We have also constant complaints with respect to the conditions of the jails to which Federal prisoners have to be sent who are detained awaiting trial and who can not get bail. The condition of many of these jails is worthy of the Middle Ages rather than of modern times. My attention was called to this by Mr. Kellogg; I determined to see what had been done by Congress along this line. I found that in 1908 the act of May 26 was passed (35 Stats., 303) which authorized the President to appoint three commissioners to investigate the condition of the jail of the District of Columbia, the workhouse, and other buildings adjacent to the jail, and in connection with the investigation to visit and investigate similar institutions of the United States, and to report to the President on the conditions of the buildings so as to secure suitable facilities, and also to make such other recommendations on the subject as may seem to them expedient.

Now, that commission studied the conditions, practically, of adult offenders, both in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and made a report which was transmitted to Congress on January 20, 1909, which is printed as Document No. 648, Sixtieth Congress, second session, as a result of which Congress has enacted the Federal parole law, applying to persons who are sentenced to the penitentiary for more than one year; a probation law for the District of Columbia; a law for the establishment of the District workhouse, which has been erected at Occoquan, Va., and which is a model institution of its kind—one that I think everyone interested in prisoners, and especially short-term offenders, ought to visit; and it provided for a reformatory, the progress of which has been checked owing to the objections that were raised to it being established within a few miles of Mount Vernon.

It seems to me that a similar inquiry should take in that class of persons, which is not a very large but is still sufficiently numerous to be taken cognizance of by Congress—I speak of juvenile and first offenders—and also to investigate the conditions under which offenders against the Federal law are detained in jails and prisons, held awaiting trial. I should also say that as a result of the investigation referred to and of the legislation that Congress subsequently enacted a year or two later, the jail of the District of Columbia, instead of being a disgrace to civilization as it was two years ago, has become a decent, sanitary, and respectable place. The control of the jail has been turned over to the Commissioners of the District as a result of legislation which was recommended both by the commissioners and by the Department of Justice; and to complete the work which the Federal Government has begun on this great subject I have drafted and ventured to recommend the passage of this bill, which will deal with the subject of juvenile or first offenders and the place of detention of Federal prisoners awaiting trial and under short sentences.

That, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, is the outline of the plan. In this connection I might say that perhaps one of the most useful things that could be considered by a commission appointed under such a bill as this would be the extension of the indeterminate sentence to Federal prisoners, and particularly to juvenile and first offenders. It seems to be the consensus of opinion of all the most advanced of modern penologists that that is the best way to deal with first offenders. The system has been adopted in a great many of the States, and the Federal Government ought not to be laggard in the careful consideration of this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you think this is proper and necessary as a part of the general scheme for the reform, or a movement that is world-wide to-day?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. Absolutely.

The CHAIRMAN. Humanity seems to demand it?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. Yes, sir. I attended the International Prison Congress, which was held here a year ago last fall, and I also attended the last meeting of the American Prison Association at Omaha, and on both of those occasions this subject of the treatment of juvenile offenders, and the subject of the indeterminate sentence, were among those that were pressed most earnestly.

Mr. WEBB. Is it your idea that this commission will have to actually visit the jails of the country?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. Well, they can not visit them all. They will do as this last commission did; that is, visit some of them. Of course, we have a great deal of information in the Department of Justice and we can suggest typical institutions which they can visit. They could not, of course, visit them all.

Mr. WEBB. How long do you think it would take them to complete the work?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. Well, this commission appointed under the act of May 26, 1908, reported to the President on January 11, 1909; that is, they were about six months in doing their work.

Mr. WEBB. Do you think it could be done for $40,000,

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. Yes; I think it could be done for less.

My attention has been called, Mr. Chairman, to the language of the bill as drafted, which provides that the President is authorized to appoint three commissioners, one of whom may be nominated by the Attorney General, etc. I may say that in drafting the bill in that language I merely adopted the language employed by Congress in the act of May 26, 1908, authorizing the appointment of the commission investigating the workhouse and reformatory system, but I am entirely willing that the committee shall make such modifications of that as it sees fit. I have no personal desire to appoint one of the commissioners; I only followed that language as a precedent which had been set.

Mr. RUCKER. May I ask a question?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER. What do you mean, exactly, by "indeterminate sentence"?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. The indeterminate sentence is a sentence of imprisonment for not less than a certain time, or not more than a certain time, with the right of probation and parole. They can discharge the prisoner at any time between those dates, upon such terms as they may see fit to impose.

Mr. RUCKER. You mean the court fixes the punishment at not less than 1 year nor more than 10 years, for instance?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. Yes, sir. Sometimes, in grave cases, it is for "not less than," so that it may be for life.

Mr. RUCKER. Now, I am familiar with the practice in many of our States—many of our statutes run that way. Some of them say "not less than" a certain time or "not more than" a certain time, but they generally fix some time between those terms, say three years, don't they?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The object being to work a reform in the criminal himself.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. That is it, exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. The inducement is held out to him: "If you don't behave yourself, then you will get the maximum of your sentence," say 10 years?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. "But if you give evidence of your real determination to become a good citizen——"

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. "You may get off with a shorter sentence, as a parole board may determine?"

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. Yes, sir.

Mr. RUCKER. In some States the law provides that for good behavior the executive may pardon.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. You get it under the Federal parole law. If a prisoner has served not les than one-third of the sentence, he is eligible to parole, and if the board recommends his parole and that recommendation is approved by the Attorney General, he may be paroled under such terms as may be fixed by the Attorney General, but he is subject to be taken back at any time if he violates his parole.

Mr. RUCKER. Well, I have not been a graduate in law, but I thought it was that if he conducts himself properly he is eligible for a parole.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. Well, that is the theory, and it is peculiarly so in the case of juvenile offenders. Take a boy who has committed a crime. The probability is that his crime was committed in a spirit of youthful bravado or was the result of bad home surroundings; the possibility is that if he is taken away from his bad surroundings and placed in a good position he may be made into a law-abiding citizen.

Mr. RUCKER. My recollection is that the late Gov. Taylor immediately issued a pardon for every minor under 16 years of age until the State established a reform school, but he would not send them to the penitentiary.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to say that this Federal parole law has done good, and it will do much more good. Some years ago we enacted a parole law in my State—Alabama—and I think there has been no wiser enactment in the history of the State.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. I think we have, Mr. Chairman—I know I was speaking accurately three or four months ago, and I do not think it has been changed since—we have but one instance of a Federal prisoner violating his parole since that law was put into operation. Our universal experience is that prisoners, when liberated upon parole, obey their paroles, and the theory is that during that period they will get restored into a normal position in the community; then they go out of the path of lawbreakers into the path of law keepers.

Mr. RUCKER. I used to think it was putting it into the power of the judiciary to discriminate, show favoritism, but in the course of a great many years I have come in contact with a great many of the criminals, and I think it is a very wise law.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. I think the very large preponderance of opinion among the judges of to-day is in favor of that theory.

Mr. RUCKER. Down in my State a man was paroled about three years ago. I am convinced now that it was one of the best things that could be done, because that man was one of the most violent men before and he is now a very good citizen, one of the best men in his town.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. The House of Representatives has passed at this session a bill which I very earnestly recommended, applying the parole law to life prisoners.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a bill introduced by Representative HOWARD, of Georgia?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. Yes, sir; he introduced it at my request. I think that embodies the view of the most able penologists of to-day.

Mr. GRAHAM. Is it the experience of European countries that they effect reforms of practiced criminals?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. Well, there is a good deal of difference of opinion as to this, but I think there is a class of criminals who are always beyond reform.

Mr. GRAHAM. The nature of the crime has a great deal to do with it?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM. A man who gets into prison for a crime of violence might never commit another?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM. But the man who is a professional thief—that would not follow, of course?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. Yes; but criminologists say that while you may cure for a while, you may palliate, there is a residuum that you can not cure. They are devoting more and more time to juvenile offenders and to first offenders. The theory is that if you can take him away from his bad environment you can save him. Personally my interest is far keener in these first offenders than in any others. I recollect a very distinguished specialist in children's diseases whom I met in New York. On one occasion I asked him what led him to that specialty. He said, "Oh, I got so tired of patching up old human hulks that I took up this specialty, where the saving of children may mean the saving of human souls for the Nation."

The CHAIRMAN. Very much obliged to you.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL. Much obliged to you for giving me this hearing.

WESTBORO, MASS., June 10, 1912.

CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the National Conference on the Education of Backward, Truant, Delinquent, and Dependent Children that was held in Cleveland, Ohio, on Monday, June 10, the following resolution was passed:

Resolved by the National Conference on the Education of Backward, Truant, Delinquent, and Dependent Children, That we respectfully recommend to the favorable attention of the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States House of Representatives the bill to provide a commission to investigate and propose reforms in the system of jails throughout the United States in which Federal prisoners may be confined.

Respectfully, yours,

ELMER L. COFFEEN,
Secretary and Treasurer.

JUVENILE PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION,
Chicago, November 18, 1912.

The Hon. HENRY D. CLAYTON,
Chairman Committee on the Judiciary,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: The Juvenile Protective Association of Chicago is very much interested in the number of young boys—many of them first offenders—held in the county jail and police stations of Chicago awaiting trial.

In an investigation just concluded our association found that last year 1,328 boys between the ages of 17 and 21 were confined in the county jail, and that 599 of these boys were first offenders. While the conditions in the county jail are fairly good, no vocational training is given, nor is any employment provided for the boys. They get very little exercise; they are not kept busy, and the result is that they very quickly deteriorate. The police stations of Chicago, where large numbers of young men and women are held awaiting their preliminary hearings, are in a very terrible condition, and young people held there are in danger of not only moral but physical deterioration through the insanitary surroundings.

I understand that House bill 21594, to appoint a commission to consider and report upon the general subject of the treatment of juvenile and first offenders, has been favorably reported on by the Committee on the Judiciary, but has not yet been called up in the House. Our association feels that the passage of this bill is of the utmost importance, and we therefore respectfully urge you to use your best endeavors to bring this about. We feel sure that an investigation which shall inquire into the conditions in jails and places of detention throughout the United States will result in lasting good, and in recommendations by the Government for better methods in dealing with the young and for improved places of detention while awaiting trial.

Sincerely, yours,

Mrs. JOSEPH TILTON BOWEN, President.

WOMAN'S CITY CLUB OF CHICAGO,
December 3, 1912.

Hon. HENRY D. CLAYTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the board of directors of the Woman's City Club of Chicago held yesterday, December 2, it was unanimously voted that you be urged to use your influence in support of bill H. R. 21594, which will come before the House of Representatives some time this month.

The Woman's City Club believes the provisions of the bill, that the Federal Government make an appropriation sufficient for the investigation of police stations and jails where first offenders are held awaiting trial, to be wise and just and in accordance with the policy of conserving what is good in the youth of our land.

We respectfully solicit your earnest interest in the passage of this bill.

Very truly, yours,

CAROLINE S. P. WILD,
Secretary.

CHICAGO POLITICAL EQUALITY LEAGUE,
December 11, 1912.

Hon. HENRY D. CLAYTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Chicago Political Equality League emphatically urges the passage of House bill 21594 and put themselves on record as indorsing this bill as a step toward protecting boys from the association of hardened criminals.

We hope you will use every influence to further this bill.

Yours, respectfully,

THE CHICAGO POLITICAL EQUALITY LEAGUE,
Per Mrs. A. H. SCHWEIZER,
Corresponding Secretary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object, although I think the appointment of these commissioners on matters of this sort is not the proper way of getting information in preparation for legislation.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

COAL MINING COMPANIES, OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3843) granting to the coal mining companies in the State of Oklahoma the right to acquire additional acreage adjoining their mine leases, and for other purposes.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 3843, now before the House, be passed over without prejudice, for the reason that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] is sick.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to pass this bill over without prejudice, on the ground of the sickness of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INTERSTATE TRANSPORTATION OF IMMATURE CALVES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 24927) to regulate the interstate transportation of immature calves.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no person, firm, or corporation shall ship or deliver for shipment, nor shall any common carrier nor the receiver, trustee, or lessee thereof, receive for transportation or transport from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia into or through another State or Territory or the District of Columbia any live calf not accompanied by its mother unless the same is six weeks old or over: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture may make rules and regulations permitting, in cases of emergency only, the shipment in interstate commerce of live calves less than six weeks old; and the Secretary of Agriculture may also permit, under such restrictions as he may deem proper, one shipment in interstate commerce of live calves less than six weeks old and over three weeks old when the entire time consumed in such interstate shipment to final destination, including time of loading and unloading, does not exceed 12 hours.

SEC. 2. That any person, firm, or corporation, or any common carrier or the receiver, trustee, or lessee thereof, who shall violate any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not less than $20 nor more than $50 for each calf offered for shipment, shipped, or received for transportation or transported in violation of any of the provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object if the gentleman from Michigan wishes to use a little time.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, it is very kind of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL] to reserve his objection. I only wish that he might continue his kindness by not objecting to the consideration of the bill after he has heard a statement that I desire to make.

This bill was reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It has the support of the Department of Agriculture and the support of every humane society in the United States, because its purpose is to stop a traffic which is cruel to animals, dangerous to public health, and disgusting in its revelation of cheap and nasty cupidity.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, let me suggest to the gentleman that he address his remarks to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL], who seems to have some doubt as to the wisdom of this legislation.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York is listening, and possibly I may be able to induce him not to object. My attention was first attracted to this cruel and disgusting practice by a shipper of stock living in my own State. He told me it was the custom of stock shippers to take little calves from their mothers before they had learned to eat or drink, put them in these slat cars, expose them to all kinds of temperature, keep them three or four days on the road without nourishment—a process of slow starvation—and if they survive, then kill them for human food. I thereupon started an inquiry through the Bureau of Animal Industry, which resulted in this bill.

Gentlemen may want to know to what extent this cruel business is carried on. Dr. Francis H. Rowley, of Boston, who in appearing before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce represented all of the humane societies of the United States, testified that on May 2 and May 3, 1910, 790 calves arrived at Brighton, a suburb of Boston, and out of these 790 calves 183 arrived dead—starved to death. Their stomachs were examined by experienced veterinarians, and were found to be as dry as a powder horn. Those that were still alive were killed for human food. He further testified that in six days on which an account was kept 1,690 of these calves were shipped to the Boston market, and in one week 6,056, and that numbers of these poor little calves were starved to death or trampled to death by larger cattle with which they were shipped.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. MURRAY. May I inquire of the gentleman from Michigan whether or not an attempt was made to regulate this matter in Massachusetts?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY. Through the activities of Dr. Rowley and the humane societies, and that regulation could not be had, and they were forced to come to this Congress for this legislation.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. That is true. We have meat-inspection laws, and, so far as possible, the Federal inspectors protect the public from this nefarious traffic; but the testimony is that in Massachusetts they have accommodating State officials who are not exacting as to State inspection.

Why do men go into this business, Mr. Speaker? The testimony is that there are men who hang around dairy farms and positively know when a cow is about to have a calf. They buy the calf when it is a day old or a week old or two weeks old, and they buy it as cheaply as they can, and the owners of these calves are willing to sell when the calf is young, because they want to sell the milk the calf would require. They tie its legs, they put it in a wagon, and they carry it off to the railroad station, and when they have accumulated enough of these poor little unfortunate calves they start them off for Boston or Buffalo or some other market.

Why do these dairymen sell these very young calves? It was frankly admitted by some of the dairymen who came before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that it does not pay to teach a calf to drink and that the milk a calf would drink is more valuable than the calf, and so they are willing to connive at this cruel traffic. But if this suffering does not appeal to men, then I appeal to them on the ground that the public health is involved and on the ground that their own health is involved.

What do these shippers of calves make out of this business? Why, they buy a calf from one of these dairy farms for a dollar and a half. They sell the sweetbreads for 50 cents out of one of these calves; they sell the liver for 60 cents; they sell the stomach for 15 cents; they sell the hide for a dollar or a dollar and a half; and they sell the carcass for from $3 to $6. What do they do with the carcass?

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. In just a moment; I want to emphasize this. What do they do with the carcass? They bone it off, so the witnesses testified, and make canned chicken out of it. Do you gentlemen like canned chicken?

Mr. BUTLER. Not canned chicken?

Mr. FOSTER. Is not that a violation of the pure-food law?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. They do it.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman must remember that is under a Republican administration. We propose to enforce the law, and there will be no danger of that kind when the Democrats get in.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. This is a calf question; it is not a political question at all. [Laughter and applause.] Mr. Speaker, they make sausage out of this meat.

Mr. GARNER. Pig sausage?

Mr. SISSON. Hog sausage?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Yes; I suppose so.

Mr. FOSTER. Country sausage?

Mr. HAMLIN. Did not the evidence show that they canned a good deal of this stuff and it was sold as canned chicken?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Yes; I stated that at the outset. That is one of the important facts developed.

Mr. GARNER. Is not that in violation of the law?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Yes. They are violating the law not only in this respect, but in other respects.

Mr. GARNER. Why have not they been prosecuted and made to obey the law?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I will tell the gentleman as I go along; there are several phases I want to develop.

Mr. MURRAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY. May I inquire whether it is a fact that attempts were made to reach these people under the interstate-commerce law by the forces that the gentleman has mentioned in Massachusetts and it was found that this legislation was needed to reach the violators?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. It is true. Now I will depart a little from the order in which I desired to present this to the House, and say that they have in the State of New York a law which prevents, or is supposed to prevent, the shipment of calves under 4 weeks old unless they are accompanied by their mothers and are for breeding purposes. Now, what do they do? They collect these calves around these dairy farms, and they put three or four old cows that have not given milk for a generation [laughter] with the little calves, and they arrive at their destination with the cows' teats lacerated, because the little chaps have been tugging at those dry sources of theoretical supply. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAY. Why does not the gentleman go on and try to pass the bill?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. There is a gentleman talking about objecting to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to object, but I want to say a word before we get through.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER]?

Mr. FOSTER. I want the gentleman to proceed with the explanation of his bill.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to call for the regular order. I want to give each gentleman an opportunity to explain his bill, so that any other Member in the House may intelligently know whether he wants to object; but I doubt the advisability of taking up the entire unanimous-consent day by a long speech on a bill that we know is going to be objected to in the end.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right at any time to demand the regular order. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] may proceed.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] if he will submit to an inquiry?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Yes. I want to say before replying that I promise not to continue much longer.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If we pass this bill, how would it affect the condition that there is still in the State of New York; that is, assuming that these calves are shipped within the State?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. This bill prohibits the shipment of calves in interstate commerce under 6 weeks old. And I may say—and I say it looking at my friend from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL]—that every witness who appeared before the committee admitted that the traffic was cruel, and admitted that it was dangerous to health, and the only objection finally that any of them made was that the age limit should be reduced to 4 weeks.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield to a question there?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Yes; in a moment. The difficulty about reducing the age to 4 weeks is—and I have considered it carefully, because I am anxious to get this bill on the statute books, and have conferred with the Agricultural Department in relation to it—the difficulty about reducing the age limit to 4 weeks is that if you do that these men will put calves into these cars that are much under 4 weeks. If you put the age limit at 6 weeks you may get a good many 4-weeks-old calves, but you will not be so likely to get calves a day old. The testimony is that calves are started out for Boston and other markets when they can scarcely stand on their legs and are not 24 hours old.

Now, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL].

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. The gentleman has substantially answered one of the questions. Is it not true that all the references to the cruelty practiced on these calves applied to calves that were very young—from a day to a week old?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I can scarcely answer the gentleman as his question implies he would like to have me answer him.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Answer according to the truth, whether I like it or not.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. All right. The testimony is that they ship calves that are incapable of taking nourishment. I have the testimony here, but I have not the time to read it——

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. You ought to know the laws on that subject.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The State law is being evaded. I have a letter of no later date than December 26 last, from an inspector of the Bureau of Animal Industry, setting forth that the custom still prevails of shipping these young calves, and it is not alone the calves that are very young that suffer en route. Few, if any, of these calves have been taught to eat or drink. It is probable, of course——

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Is there any reference in the whole record to a calf over 2 weeks old?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Why, the testimony is that the dairymen of New York—and I can cite the gentleman to the exact page—say they do not think it is worth while to teach calves to drink.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. That does not answer the question.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. They say the milk is worth more than the calf. If the milk is worth more than the calf, then the testimony is that they get rid of the calf.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. The testimony is if they keep a calf six weeks it would not pay, but if they keep it four weeks it would pay.

Mr. SISSON. In answer to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE], I believe reference was made to intrastate shipments. Your bill would not affect those shipments, would it?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. It would not.

Mr. SISSON. And could not do that under the Constitution, could it?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. No; and, further than that, let me say this in relation to cattle in the Southwest: When I first drew the bill, or when it was first drawn for me, in part, in the Bureau of Animal Industry, it was not known that sometimes it becomes necessary in the plains country, in case the pasture grows short and in case the grass is destroyed by fire, or otherwise, to move the cattle over a State line, and so a provision was incorporated in the bill susbequently to permit emergency removals.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Is it not a fact——

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. To the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Is it not a fact that the statute of the State of New York fixes the age limit at four weeks?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I have so stated.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. And in the State of Pennsylvania I believe that is about the same limit?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I understand so.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. In how many States of the Union does the law make a greater limit than four weeks?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I do not know the laws of all the States, but my judgment is that in most of the States there is no limit whatever. I doubt if there is a limit in the Western States at all.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Now, in the State of New York it is possible under the statutes of that State to ship calves four weeks old from Buffalo all the way down to Montauk Point, is it not?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. In the State of New York?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes; in the State of New York.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. How far is it from Buffalo down to Montauk Point?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. It is less than 500 miles.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. How long do they keep them in transit?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. That I do not know exactly.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The time in transit is important, as the gentleman from New York will recognize, and the testimony is that they keep them all the way from two days to six days under the existing conditions. There should be some time limit, and there should be an age limit. They tried in Massachusetts to fix a limit according to weight.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has had 20 minutes, and I want to talk 5 minutes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I would not have talked so long, Mr. Speaker, if I had not been interrupted.

I want to state one other thing, and I want the Members of the House to hear me. Dr. Eliot, former president of Harvard, discussing this abhorrent traffic, says that when an animal is subjected to suffering, such as these calves are subjected to, it sets up toxic processes and make the meat dangerous to human health.

In addition to this, the testimony of experts in the Bureau of Animal Industry is to the effect that the meat of these calves is water-soaked; that it is dropsical; that it is the best kind of a medium for the deposit of germs of disease; that it enables the formation of ptomaine poisons and bacterial toxins; and the doctors who have testified have made statements to the effect that there are many cases of death by reason of eating this poisoned, dropsical, disgusting food.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to quote Dr. Eliot, former president of Harvard University?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MANN. He qualifies, no doubt, as an expert on immature calves because he was former president of Harvard University? [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman seeks to be facetious.

Mr. MANN. I am very serious about it.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. No; the gentleman is not serious. I stated that Dr. Eliot said this because I thought that the opinion of a man like Dr. Eliot, who carefully weighs his words, might have weight. That is why I quoted him.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may have permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I do not care to do so, except that I would like to have unanimous consent to print my report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] have the privilege of extending his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. By permission of the House, I will print as part of my remarks the report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce accompanying this bill.

The report is as follows:

[House Report No. 837, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

INTERSTATE TRANSPORTATION OF IMMATURE CALVES.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 24927:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 24927) to regulate the interstate transportation of immature calves, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

This bill is designed to prevent a cruel, disgusting, and dangerous traffic—cruel to animals, dangerous to human health, and disgusting in its revelation of cheap and nasty cupidity in perpetrating upon unsuspecting consumers food unfit for human consumption.

Dr. Francis H. Rowley, of Boston, who appeared before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, as he said, "in behalf of all the humane societies in the United States, that are a unit in their indorsement of this bill and their hope that the bill may become a law," and also "in behalf of the one society in the United States that has put up the hardest fight for the past two years that has been put up by any organization in this country to prevent the horrible abuses connected with the shipment of immature calves," said:

"This meat (of immature calves) is boned off and made up into sausages and sold to the poor. (Hearings, p. 7.) There are men—and I want you to understand, gentlemen, everything I say to you here to-day I can substantiate by facts and figures secured by our agents, and for which we are willing to take our oath—there are men in New York State and in Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont, knowing the dates when the cows are to calf, and they are there the days the calves are dropped.

"In many instances the calves are taken that day. Their legs are tied together, and in many cases they are thrown under the boot of a wagon.

"They get a carload and then ship them.

"The farmer gets from a dollar to a dollar and a half for this little calf.

"Now, you know that the Holstein and other breeds will weigh, the day of birth, 50, 60, or 70 pounds dressed, and quite frequently 80 pounds the day when born.

"That is a pretty good calf, especially when you blow it up with compressed air.

"If they can get this calf through to market, then they get, say, a dollar or a dollar and a half for the hide.

"If they can get some inspector to pass it, 60 cents for the liver, 50 cents for the sweetbreads, and from three to six dollars for the carcass.

"First, a little return to the farmer of 80 cents or a dollar for the calf, and then one, five, or six dollars to the butcher." (Hearings, p. 9.)

Continuing, Dr. Rowley said:

"On May 2 and 3, 1910, there arrived at Brighton 790 calves in carloads in those two days, of which 183 were dead; dead from starvation; dead from utter exhaustion. We had one of the best veterinarians in Boston examine the stomachs, and the inside of the stomach was as dry as the palm of your hand; they had simply starved to death." (Statement Dr. Rowley, Hearings, p. 10.)

Further on he says:

"These are simply samples of reports handed me by our agents. I just brought a few of the most notable. Here is another: In six days 1,690 calves were brought over from the State of New York.

"Here is a record of one week of 6,056 calves shipped to the New England Dressed Meat & Wool Co. Three hundred of the calves were thrown out by the Federal inspectors as unfit for food.

"That Massachusetts is not the only State that has suffered from this is evidenced by a letter I have from the secretary of the Humane Society of Detroit, Mich. He says that:

"'The practice of taking young calves from their mothers in warm stables, driving them several miles through frost and snow, allowing them to stand shivering in the snow for half a day before loading them on the train, is a very cruel practice. Many of these calves are thus exposed in shipping from 30 to 90 hours. Outside of the matter of cruelty, such meat is unquestionably unfit for food.'

"Then there is also a similar statement from the president of the Connecticut Humane Society. As we began to make it unprofitable to these butchers, they began to turn them into Connecticut, and this is what the president of their humane society writes. He says:

"'On April 25 a carload of about 120 calves was received. They were thin, eyes sunken, and apparently a number of them were dead. On being taken from the car, some revived. These calves were shipped without crates. We had an examination made of two dead calves, and nothing was found in their stomachs. Out of the entire number it is believed that 75 per cent were bobs.'

"Now, you say, why can not this be stopped by State legislation? The attorney general of New York says:

"'I find no authority in this provision of law or elsewhere that would justify the commissioner of agriculture to seize shipments of calves destined to a point without the State, under the conditions mentioned in your letter. The above section is intended to prohibit the offering or exposing for sale in the market of calves under 4 weeks of age or when they are not in healthy condition. The shipping therein referred to must be construed as meaning shipping for the purpose of killing within the State and can not refer to the shipping of calves without the State, as the legislature has no authority to prohibit such shipments.'

"These calves were shipped according to the laws of New York State to 'John Smith,' a little butcher in Connecticut, Rhode Island, or Massachusetts, as a 'dairyman.'

"Mr. DRISCOLL. Does not this law require that they be shipped in crates or accompanied by their mothers?

"Dr. ROWLEY. They are shipped there in crates, or are supposed to go with their mothers if not crated. The attorney general of New York can not stop it, because they go out to our State in conformity with the law. We can not do anything in Massachusetts except to cooperate with the Federal inspectors and such local inspectors as we can scare into destroying these calves and not allow them to get on the market as food. In many cases we have driven many of these butchers out of this business.

"Last Sunday a man came through from New York State following one of these carloads of calves. There is an attempt to evade the law by claiming that they are shipping the dams with these calves, because if they ship the dam with the calf they are complying with the law, even if they are only 1 or 2 days old. They take along old, worn-out, dried-up milch cows that are to be made into bologna sausage. They put them into the car with 60 or 70 calves. Capt. Walsh was with us—they unloaded 99 calves and 4 old cows. When these cows come out of the car with the calves they will walk away, with no more thought of the calf than you have of the child walking in the streets of New Orleans now. I have found the teats of these cows raw from the continual sucking of the calves put in with them." (Hearings, p. 13.)

Mr. Benedict, superintendent Stevens-Swan Humane Society, of Utica, N. Y., says:

"The skins are worth $1.15 and the stomach is worth 15 cents, making $1.30." (Hearings, p. 6.)

Mr. Benedict followed a shipment of calves from New Berlin, N. Y., to Brighton, Mass.

He says:

"Fifty-seven bob calves, none claimed to be over 1 week of age, were brought for shipment at New Berlin and 10 of them were so exceedingly youthful and weak that they were not placed in the car, and they simply placed 47 in the car."

One of the calves brought for shipment was so young that it could hardly stand, and the man who brought it stated that it had "only come last night."

The car started from New Berlin at 11.15 in the morning, and it is fair to assume that these calves had been separated from their mothers up to the time of starting—from two to five hours.

The car stopped at Leonardsville, and 17 more "bob-veal" calves were loaded, and at Bridgewater 15 more were brought in a wagon.

A bob-veal calf is defined to be a calf from 1 day to 1 week old.

The car left Bridgewater at 1.30 p. m.

"It was placed in the yard at Utica at 6.50 p. m., and remained there until 1.11 the morning of the 30th, when it was conveyed by a New York Central engine to the New York Central tracks."

The car left Utica at 4.30 that morning and arrived at New Albany at 5.31.

Inasmuch as the shipment was being watched by humane officers, a pretense was made of trying to feed these 78 calves in an hour and a half—between the arrival and departure of the car.

"They had two quart dippers and two funnels and pieces of hose attached to the ends of the funnels, so that if any calves could not eat from the pail and the dipper they would raise up their heads and put the rubber hose in their mouths and pour some of the mixture down their throats."

The pails and dippers were perfectly new, and it was apparent that they were going through the cruel farce of pretending to feed these calves—all of them too young to take other nourishment than milk from their mothers—because they were being watched.

It was claimed that the stuff in the pails was composed of milk and water. There were in all 9 pails of this stuff for 78 calves.

Mr. Benedict's testimony was corroborated in detail by Mr. Murray, field secretary of the American Humane Association. (Hearings, p. 32.)

The car left by way of the Boston & Albany Railroad for Brighton yard, a stockyard near Boston, and arrived there at 8.47 p. m. Sunday night, March 31.

At 9.55 that night the calves were unloaded at J. J. Kelly & Co.'s abattoir to be killed, having been more than 58 hours en route without nourishment, unless the pretense of feeding them at West Albany be called nourishment.

Twelve of them were so weak that they could not stand, and had been trampled upon. They were still alive and were carried to wagons, which transported them and the rest of the carload to a merciful death.

These calves, according to the testimony, arrived in better condition than calves ordinarily arrive because the shipment was being watched and because, at the outset, 11 calves were rejected as being no more than a day old.

These shipments are constantly occurring, and the attorney general of the State of New York held, on request for construction of the New York law entitled "Shipping, slaughtering, and selling veal for food," that there is "no authority in the provision of the law or elsewhere that could justify the commissioner of agriculture seizing shipments of calves destined to a point outside the State."

"The shipment there referred to must be construed as meaning shipping for the purpose of killing within the State, and can not refer to the shipping of calves without the State, as the legislature has no authority to prohibit such shipments."

Mr. Jefferson Butler, president of the Michigan Humane Association, of Detroit, Mich., in the course of his testimony, said:

"Now, this last winter some organization that was perfected there took up the question and went down and they found two carloads of young calves frozen to death on the Pere Marquette Railroad—the cows got through all right—and they asked the reason from experts, and they said it was simply because they were not in a fit condition. They were not old enough to stand that severe weather. I saw a shipment of young calves billed from Kalamazoo to East Buffalo. They were put in one end of a car, and they were not able to lie down; there was simply room to stand up, and when I was there it was 9° above zero. We followed that shipment, as best we could, and they were over three days getting from Kalamazoo to East Buffalo. We followed another shipment, and they were six days in that kind of weather, going through in these slat cars where it was only about 12 or 13 above zero." (Hearings, p. 82.)

It is unnecessary to multiply instances in this report.

The traffic is not local.

Dr. A. D. Melvin, Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, of the Department of Agriculture, states in a memorandum, supplementing what he said before the committee, that "the shipment for slaughter of very young calves in interstate commerce has grown into a practice. The reports of department agents and officials of State sanitary live-stock boards, and of the State and National live-stock humane associations, show that shippers of live stock take young calves, not yet weaned and therefore incapable of taking any other kind of nourishment than milk, separate them from their mothers, and ship them to distant points in interstate commerce. At the time of slaughter these young animals have often been separated from their mothers for three or four days, or more."

In his memorandum, Dr. Melvin refers to reports of department agents, some of which are as follows:

"The opinion of Mr. Frank Burke, of Niles, Mich., a well-informed stockman, who expresses the hope that something will be done to put a stop to the cruelty practiced in the shipment of young calves in interstate commerce, is typical of the position of a great many other shippers.

"Another well-informed shipper cites a not uncommon case, in referring to a shipment of calves 3 weeks old from southwestern Michigan to Buffalo. These calves could take no food except from their mothers, and were separated from the cows and sent on the journey, which took 48 hours or longer. They reached their destination nearly dead. The following quotation from a letter from Dr. Francis H. Rowley, president of the American Humane Education Society, to the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, describes the cruelties incident to the shipment of very young calves:

"'The difficulty is that these many thousands of young calves which have been shipped into Massachusetts in crates from New York State, where they can only be shipped to be used for dairy purposes, are shipped here to some of our most disreputable butchers and consigned to them as dairy companies. It seems to me that this shipping of them under false pretenses must be a flagrant violation of interstate regulations at least. They are brought from New York State into Massachusetts under an absolutely false pretense, shipped, for example, to the Tom Keenan Dairy Co., when Tom Keenan is as innocent of any purpose connected with them, except to slaughter them, as possible.'

"The following quotations from reports of inspectors of the department regarding the shipment of very young calves are also pertinent in this connection:

"Under date of January 3, 1911, Dr. B. F. Wende, inspector in charge, Buffalo, N. Y., says:

"'Such animals are not given any more consideration with respect to feed, water, and rest than other animals, and have often been confined in cars without feed, water, and rest from 38 to 45 hours when unloaded at these yards.'

"Dr. James S. Kelly, inspector in charge, Cleveland, Ohio, under date of April 4, 1911, writes as follows:

"'On yesterday, April 3, there were several mixed shipments of live stock at the Cleveland Union Stockyards from points in Michigan. Among these shipments were a number of very young veal calves. The Cleveland city inspectors tagged out some 40 or 50 which apparently ranged in age from 8 to 14 days, and which were too young to slaughter under the city code. Not being able to slaughter these calves in Cleveland, they were bunched together with others, by Bower & Bower, live-stock commission men, for shipment to Armour & Co., Pittsburgh, Pa.'

"In this connection it should be stated that the establishment at Pittsburgh to which the calves were shipped was not under inspection by the Department of Agriculture."

Here is a letter which Dr. Melvin read to the committee:

"This is a letter written by our inspectors at Worcester, Mass. It is addressed to me.

"'For your information I wish to advise you that N. Y. C. car No. 26297, containing approximately 140 calves, 5 cows, and a bull, shipped March 23, 1912, from New York, consigned to J. Malone, Providence, R. I., in care of New York Central and B. & R. R., 28-hour limitation, was reported as fed and watered at Albany March 25 at 2 p. m., and arrived at Worcester at 11.30 a. m., March 26, and was transferred to N. Y., N. H. & H. yards at 12.30 p. m. on March 26. There was from March 23, 1912, to March 26, noon, and it was unloaded and fed and watered at 1.30 p. m. At the time of unloading we found 17 calves in one cow bin. Many calves were in a semiexhausted condition and, in my judgment, many calves were not over 10 days old, and the cows were in a very poood condition and were nearly exhausted from being nursed by so many calves. The stock was unloaded in the N. Y., N. H. & H. yards and fed, and the dead ones removed. Ten cans, containing 85 quarts of milk, was given to the calves, some of which were too young to drink. The calves were reloaded at 6.30 p. m. at Providence, the remaining four cows and the bull were loaded into a separate car and shipped also.'

"I could have brought up a large number of letters similar to that; but I do not think it is necessary. There is a very great cruelty that ought to be abated in some way. If the States will not do it, the Federal Government ought to do it. That is about all the testimony that I care to give."

Dr. Melvin mentions many other instances, and closes his memorandum with this recommendation:

"From consideration of the whole subject it is apparent that the enactment of a statute prohibiting the shipment of immature calves in interstate commerce is needed in order to prevent the excessive cruelty which is now being practiced. The department is unable to recommend prosecution unless the stock are confined in transit beyond 28 hours without water, feed, or rest, or unless an attempt is made to slaughter immature calves at any packing establishment where Federal inspection is maintained. While both these statutes in respect to immature calves are being enforced rigidly by the department, it is clear that additional legislation is needed in order to prevent the cruelty which is still being practiced."

As bearing upon time in transit, Dr. Melvin testified (hearings, p. 18):

"This applies to the time that they are in transit. There is possibly half a day to a day before the calves are loaded, and that much time elapses, perhaps, after they are unloaded, so that even when you get the 28-hour proposition, that can be extended to 36 on the written request of the shipper. Then add this additional time before loading and after loading to that 36 hours and you have got two or three days where the animals are absolutely without anything to eat. They want to eat and can not eat, because they haven't learned how to eat, and that pretense that they go through of feeding them is a mere farce."

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.

As to the danger to the public health from the eating of the meat of these calves, we quote Dr. Rowley, as follows:

"I have here a letter from Dr. Butler, of the Suffolk District Medical Society. This is the leading medical society of Boston. He says:

"'Our committee believes that the weight of evidence is in favor of an age limit for the sale of veal, and not a weight limit, as we favor legislation along these lines.'

"To defeat the law, some of the butchers want to make it a weight limit of the calf and not an age limit.

"Dr. A. T. Cabot, of Boston, writes me:

"'I am quite willing, in view of the authorities that you cite, to express my conviction that "bob veal" is unsuited for human food.'

"Dr. Herbert Clapp is certainly one of the leading physicians of Boston, and he says:

"'During the years of my practice I have seen quite a number of cases of sickness produced by eating veal from immature calves, and some of them were very severe. I think there should be very stringent laws against slaughtering for food calves during the first few weeks of life (no matter what they weigh), not only because their flesh may be poisonous, but also because to most people who know anything about it the very idea is repulsive.'

"Dr. Eliot, the former president of Harvard College, when he heard of our contention, wrote me:

"'The bill introduced into the Massachusetts Legislature to allow the sale of any calf that will weigh 40 pounds dressed gives no security against the abominable cruelty of taking a newborn calf away from its mother, depriving it of all food, shipping it on long railroad journeys in crowded cars exposed to any extremes of heat or cold, and selling it for human food in this starved and agonized condition. Independently of the question of the wholesomeness of such meat, I think a civilized community has a right to prevent any buying and selling for a money profit which involves such cruelty. Moreover, I can not but think that consumers ought to be protected against all chance of eating the meat of any animal which has been in torment for many hours before the moment of killing. Man is by no means the only animal in which suffering and terror set up toxic processes. The fact that thorough cooking may destroy the germs or poisons in a raw food does not invalidate the instinctive and reasonable objection to food which was noxious when raw. We all vastly prefer as food milk, meats, cereals, vegetables, and fruits which are pure and sound, and always have been, to the same materials in which impurity and rottenness have been artificially corrected or rendered imperceptible; and this preference is wise.'

"Mr. Esch. Do the medical authorities find that the eating of 'bob' veal leads to ptomain poisoning?

"Dr. Rowley. Yes; the sickness that results could be so called. May I quote to you a paragraph or two from the Department of Agriculture, which has been sending to me articles on this very question. This is on the health condition—on the quality of this food as food or unfit for eating:

"'"Bob veal," or the flesh of immature calves, is objectionable on esthetic grounds and prohibitive from a hygienic standpoint. It is repulsive in appearance, owing to the water-soaked condition of the flesh and fat. This condition is due partly to the abundance of water, producing a dropsical condition of the connective tissue constituents, and partly to the presence of certain metabolic products in the tissues which are produced in the fetus as the result of tissue changes or metabolism, and which are cleared away and carried off some time after birth, owing to the purgative properties of the colostrum in the milk of the mother.

"'Besides reducing its nutritive value, the presence of the greatest amount of water acts also as a good media or fertile soil for germs, and not only lessens the keeping quality of such meat but actually enables the formation of ptomaine poisons, bacterial toxins, tox-albumins, and toxigenic substances which the unsuspecting purchaser of such meat can not detect. As a consequence of eating such flesh profuse and sometimes fatal diarrhea may develop in the consumer, as has been shown in literature. Meat-poisoning bacilli find a ready media for luxuriant growth in "bob-veal" carcasses even at low temperature.'

"Now, at the time I published this in a Boston paper a Boston physician came into my office and said:

"'Last night a patient of mine died. I am perfectly convinced, from eating "bob veal." She ate very heartily, and at 10 o'clock she became very ill, and she died before morning.'

"There are a number of other quotations here to the same effect. I have also a translation from a distinguished German authority, in which bears out the same statement—that the flesh of these prematurely born calves comes under the head of 'spoiled foods' and is not to be eaten."

The following statement bears upon the methods by which this meat enters into human consumption:

"The following are two instances which I quote from a report given me by the New York State department of agriculture: On March 29, 1911, 90 carcasses of calves and 5 barrels of parts of calves, head, liver, etc., were seized. This consignment was made by one George May. Also, April 8, 1911, the department seized 15 boxes and 4 barrels containing boned-out meat of immature calves. These boxes weighed 50 pounds apiece. The consignment was made by T. Morey, Middleville, N. Y.

"The absolute truthfulness of the following I can not vouch for, but a friend of mine asked a large dairyman how he got rid of his newborn calves. The answer was: 'Why, there is a chicken-canning factory not far from my farm.' I can vouch for the statement that many small boxes have been seen by our agents carried away from places where it has been known these little calves were slaughtered. While we had no right to open the boxes, we were morally certain they contained the carcasses of these little calves boned out." (Hearings, p. 87.)

It appears that the meat of these calves is "blown up with compressed air" to deceive the public.

The hide is sold for a dollar or a dollar and a half.

The liver is sold for about 60 cents.

The sweetbreads for about 50 cents.

The stomach for about 15 cents.

And that when the meat is not sold openly as fit for food it is "boned out" and sold for sausage and canned chicken.

TRAFFIC CRUEL AND MEAT UNFIT FOR FOOD.

The issue upon this bill is not as to the cruelty of the traffic.

All the witnesses who appeared before the committee agreed that the traffic is cruel.

The issue is not as to the unwholesomeness of the meat and its danger to the public health.

All the witnesses who appeared before the committee admit that the meat is dangerous to health, and all admit that the traffic is disgusting.

Mr. Boshart, who appeared against the bill, said:

"I am not here to argue anything about the immature—this so-called immature bob veal.

"Mr. Hamilton. You do not defend that?

"Mr. Boshart. I won't defend that in any way. I am here to defend an honest industry that not only exists in New York State but in every State surrounding it. I know this traffic has gone on, and I am not here to defend it. I am against it.

"Mr. Hamilton. I am glad to hear you say that.

"Mr. Boshart. They are virtually helpless in the State of Massachusetts to stop the transportation of these immature calves. I will tell you just what it is.

"Mr. Driscoll. What is that?

"Mr. Boshart. I do not know much about these conditions, but the bill is all right if it will stop it. I should stop it, and if you people here in Washington deem it proper that this system should be stopped you will stop it, and you will stop it with the four weeks' limitation carried on the statute books." (Hearings, pp. 44–45.)

Mr. Vary, who appeared against the bill, said:

"Now, so far as I know, none of the men who are here with me stand for shipping immature veal. We are against it, but we do believe veals are mature and fit for food and that they are at the same time better veals at 4 weeks of age than they are at 6." (Hearings, p. 46.)

"Mr. Hamilton. Isn't it customary in certain parts of your State, as well as other States—this practice isn't confined to one State—to let the cow have the calf primarily for the production of milk, the object being to get rid of the calf as soon as possible?

"Mr. Vary. The sooner you can get rid of the calf under those circumstances the more profit there is in it.

"Mr. Hamilton. Isn't it true that in many parts of the country they sell the calf very soon because the calf is in the way, and what they want the cow for is to have a supply of milk?

"Mr. Vary. That is, in different sections some do that.

"Mr. Hamilton. Isn't it from that very very custom that this cruel custom of shipping immature calves arises?

"Mr. Vary. I am not defending that custom at all. That may be. We are against the shipment of immature calves. We are always against it. I speak for the New York State Grange, and also for the department of agriculture in our State. We are against that, and favorable to any reasonable proposition that tends to do away with it. All we ask is that you fix the age limit at 4 weeks instead of 6, and we will be perfectly satisfied." (Hearings, p. 48.)

Senator Cobb, of New York, who appeared against the bill, declared against the traffic.

"Mr. Hamilton. As bearing upon your reply to Mr. Martin, I hold in my hand a letter from Hon. James Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture, and I would like to have you state whether you agree with his conclusion.

"Mr. Cobb. I have heard that read. I am just as much against it as you are.

"Mr. Hamilton. I understood you to say that you were able to take care of the cruelty end of it, if I quote you correctly? You agree with that, then?

"Mr. Cobb. There is no one who would do more to prevent abuses than we would.

"Mr. Goeke. I would be glad if Mr. Hamilton would read the whole letter.

"Mr. Cobb. I do not want to rest here and have it understood for a minute that we feel that the Secretary is in favor of permitting cruelty in shipments, or anything of the kind. He wants to do everything he can to stop it, the same as we do.

"Mr. Sims. It is a cruelty to the people who eat these calves more than the cruelty to the animals. I do not want to eat the immature things. If they are sold people will buy them and eat them. The public health is what I am considering more than anything else." (Hearings, p. 59.)

Mr. Gerow, of Washingtonville, N. J., who appeared against the bill, said:

"Mr. Gerow. Of course I think that I voice the sentiment of the farmers, and I think that New York State has been foremost in advocating a pure-food law and doing everything they can to hold the consumer in that way. I think that is the past record of the New York organization of farmers. We want to sell no goods that are objectionable.

"Mr. Hamlin. I got that impression from the testimony before this committee, that a great many calves shipped to New York and Boston were not taught to eat, did not know how, and they came into Boston or New York in a starved condition, absolutely unfit for food.

"Mr. Hamilton. And several of them died.

"Mr. Driscoll. They were very young calves.

"Mr. Gerow. They were bob veals, were they not?

"Mr. Hamlin. I presume they were.

"Mr. Gerow. We are not asking to ship bob veals.

"Mr. Hamilton. I understand you are not in favor of that?

"Mr. Gerow. We do not like it."

Mr. J. G. Curtis, Union Stock Yards, New York, who runs a dairy farm and is also engaged in the live-stock commission business, testified as follows:

"Mr. Hamilton. You do not bother to teach the calves to drink? I suppose on your farm there are produced—about how many calves will there be produced by the 1st of June?

"Mr. Curtis. Forty or fifty.

"Mr. Hamilton. Forty or fifty calves. It would be quite a job to teach them to drink.

"Mr. Curtis. We do not attempt it.

"Mr. Hamilton. So, after all, it comes to a commercial proposition; you dispose of those calves as soon as you can. They are not taugh to drink?"

Mr. Saunders, a live-stock commission merchant, of Jersey City, N. J., who appeared against the bill, testified as follows:

"Mr. Saunders. Some claim 2 weeks old. You can get a calf 2 weeks old heavier than one 3 weeks old.

"Mr. Hamilton. Are you prepared to argue that a calf a week old, if it should be shipped from some point in Michigan to Cleveland, being obviously unable to take any nourishment, and should be held in Cleveland without any nourishment, and finally shipped down to Armour & Co., at Pittsburgh, Pa., and there slaughtered—are you prepared to say that the flesh of that calf is fit for human consumption? Even if you are unwilling to take into consideration the suffering of these poor animals, are you willing to say it is fit for human consumption?

"Mr. SAUNDERS. I am willing to say it is not.

"Mr. HAMILTON. Are you willing to say it is not cruel? You would say it was cruel to the calf, would you not?

"Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes; certainly, to a week-old calf.

"Mr. HAMILTON. To a 2-weeks-old calf?

"Mr. SAUNDERS. It would be cruel; you know what I mean, it is cruel to load any of these cattle in a car. It is cruel the minute you take these cattle away from their homes, for that matter, whether they are 2 weeks old, 2 years old, or 4 years old. It is cruel the moment you take any of these cattle or sheep and put them in the car, and I am not trying to make you people believe it is not cruel to crowd these cattle in the cars; but I do tell you gentlemen the improvements in this business the last two years have been so great that one not in the business would not believe it."

It is clear from the testimony that if 24 hours in transit were permitted, the entire time between the separation of the calf from its mother and its slaughter would be not less than 30 hours, and would probably be nearer 36 hours, because of the time consumed in getting the calf from the farm to the place of loading and the time consumed at destination after unloading and before slaughter.

After the testimony upon the bill as originally introduced had been heard, the first section was changed by adding at the end of the section these words:

"Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture may make rules and regulations permitting, in cases of emergency only, the shipment in interstate commerce of live calves less than 6 weeks old; and the Secretary of Agriculture may also permit, under such restrictions as he may deem proper, one shipment in interstate commerce of live calves less than 6 weeks old, and over 3 weeks old when the entire time consumed in such interstate shipment to final destination, including time of loading and unloading, does not exceed 12 hours."

After making this change, the bill was ordered by the committee to be reintroduced and reported favorably.

Mr. McConnell, secretary of the Tri-State Live Stock Association, which covers northern Indiana and Ohio and southern Michigan, testified as follows (hearings, p. 76):

"Mr. MCCONNELL. Our calves there are usually held about five weeks. I personally and our shippers there will not buy anything unless it is first-class veal; in fact, not 1 veal out of 50 I ship but sells at the top of the market. Most of the farmers in Hilldale market and through there prefer to make a calf prime before they let it go, and that takes four or five weeks; they do not like to hold them over five weeks; but they hold them from four to five weeks and make the calf weight 150 to 180 pounds in that time, where they have grade mothers; that is home weight; a Jersey cow will not do it.

"Mr. HAMILTON. Then, if this bill prescribed that calves should not be shipped under 4 weeks old, it would conform to your views, would it not?

"Mr. MCCONNELL. It would; yes, sir.

"Mr. HAMILTON. What would you say about five weeks?

"Mr. MCCONNELL. It would not be so much of a hardship with us, although here is a question to decide. Gentlemen, I confess I think a calf 3 to 3½ weeks old, 3 weeks old more particularly, could be distinguished quite readily; after they got up much beyond 3 weeks, I think it would be hard for anybody to tell their age up to a certain point."

The issue is not as to the cruelty of the traffic or as to its danger to health. It is admitted by everybody that the traffic is cruel and that the meat is unwholesome, but it is claimed that the age limit should be 4 weeks instead of 6 weeks, and that the time of transit should be at least 24 hours.

The case is summed up in a letter of Dr. W. O. Stillman, president of the American Humane Association, printed on pages 87 and 88 of the hearings, as follows:

THE AMERICAN HUMANE ASSOCIATION,
Albany, N. Y., April 24, 1912.

Hon. EDWARD L. HAMILTON,
Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. HAMILTON: I understand that a hearing was given before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on April 16, 1912, in regard to the "bob-veal" bill, H. R. 17222. I am also informed that representatives of dairy farmers from New York, Indiana, and Michigan appeared against the bill.

The contentions of those appearing against the bill, it is said, were—

First. That a 6-weeks age limit would be unreasonable, and that 4 weeks would be sufficient.

Second. That the practice of shipping immature calves is a local matter and confined largely to New York State and Massachusetts, and that the conditions complained of should be cared for in each State and regulated only by local laws.

Third. That immature calves do not suffer greatly in being shipped to market, and that there is a very small loss from either injury or death.

In reply to these claims this association respectfully submits—

First. That where the 4-weeks age limit holds large numbers of calves are shipped much under that age and anywhere from 1 to 2 weeks old, or even younger. The constant tendency seems to be, according to the experience of our anticruelty societies, to evade the 4-weeks limit and send the calves to market as soon as possible, for obvious reasons.

From our experience with the 4-weeks limit we are convinced that a 6-weeks limit is positively required and would practically result in large numbers of calves being shipped at considerably under the 6-weeks limit, making the age in actual practice much nearer 4 weeks than 6. In other words, it is desirable to have the limit at least 6 weeks in order to prevent the shipment of calves much under 4 weeks of age.

We claim that a 6-weeks limit is not unreasonable, as the shipment of younger calves is much more likely to be injurious for human consumption, and, furthermore, that it is constantly found in practice that it is the younger calves which are apt to die during transit from starvation and weakness. We submit that this is only reasonable and self-evident.

Second. In regard to the second point we submit that the shipment of immature calves is not a local matter, confined to any one section, but that it is an abuse which exists everywhere that dairy farming is practiced, as a natural result of the desire to sell the cows' milk as promptly as possible for the increased profit which accrues. Many States have failed to pass laws satisfactorily regulating the shipment and sale of bob veal, and if they did have such laws they would not reach the interstate-shipment abuses. The contention that such cruelty should be controlled under State laws does not work out satisfactorily, even where the State laws are considered efficient.

For instance, under the New York agricultural law, chapter 1, section 106, entitled "Shipping, slaughtering, and selling veal for food," calves under the age of 4 weeks "can not be shipped or killed for food even when they are accompanied by their dams to the point of destination." There is, therefore, an absolute prohibition to the sale of bob veal. An energetic attempt having been made to invoke this law to prevent an interstate shipment of bob veal, the case was submitted to the attorney general of New York, whose opinion was, in part, as follows: "I find no authority in this provision of the law or elsewhere that would justify the commissioner of agriculture seizing shipments of calves destined to a point outside the State. * * * The shipment there referred to must be construed as meaning shipping for the purpose of killing within the State, and can not refer to the shipping of calves without the State, as the legislature has no authority to prohibit such shipments."

If the allegation is true that this is only a local abuse, peculiar to New York and Massachusetts, why should farmers be present from Indiana and Michigan in opposition to this bill, and why should the American Humane Association receive complaints from many remote sections of the United States concerning such abuses?

Third. In regard to the allegation that the shipment of immature calves to market is not associated with any great suffering on their part, I must say that an experience of nearly 20 years in enforcing anticruelty laws, of which about 7 have been connected with the American Humane Association, goes to show that such shipments are attended with frightful cruelty. I note that the evidence brought out during the farmers' hearing in opposition to the bill showed that calves, in interstate shipments, sometimes went as long as 40 hours without food or water. Is this not sufficient evidence that young and unweaned calves should be absolutely excluded from interstate shipment for market, and that the calves should be allowed to reach an age when they are stronger and have more resisting power? The constant tendency has seemed to be, on the part of shippers of veal, to try to crowd under the age limit just as far as possible without detection and punishment, although in some instances, particularly in the West, much older calves are frequently shipped.

In conclusion, the American Humane Association would respectfully urge that the shipment of unweaned calves and those under 6 weeks of age must necessarily be fraught with great cruelty and suffering; that the use of the flesh of such calves for human consumption carries with it serious danger; that this abuse is found in every State where extensive dairy farming is carried on, and that it will spread with the development of the country; that in order to supply the enormous amount of veal consumed in large cities, amounting, it is claimed, to 215,000 calves per year in New York City alone, that such calves must necessarily come from long distances, and therefore be subject to interstate-traffic regulation, if regulated at all; that there are no Federal laws at present which may be invoked to prevent this cruel and dangerous traffic; and that with Congress lies the power and the responsibility to relieve the condition which has become at once dangerous and intolerable.

Earnestly soliciting your support of this bill, I am,
Very truly, yours,

W. O. STILLMAN, President.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I wrote the views of the minority on this bill, and if you will give me your attention for about five minutes I will tell you why we were opposed to it.

In the first place, it was not necessary for the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] to harrow your feelings or turn your stomachs on the "bob veal" part of this proposition, because it does not apply; because all the evidence before the committee applied to very young calves, a day old or less than a week old; and we agree with the gentlemen that a law should be enacted to prevent the transportation of that class of calves.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I prefer not to yield at this time.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman has made a broad statement.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. If you will allow me to talk five minutes first, then I will yield.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman is mistaken in his statement, that is all.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Why do we object to this bill? We said to these gentlemen before the committee, and I have said time and again to the gentleman from Michigan, that if he would consent to an amendment making it four weeks instead of six weeks the farmers of New York, the grazing people of New York, would all be with him for the enactment of this law.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I am willing the gentleman should offer his amendment reducing the time to four weeks and let the House determine.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Here is the situation with reference to the State of New York: The Vermont law provides that calves 4 weeks old are fit for veal. The law of Massachusetts makes the same provision. The law of Connecticut has the same provision, that calves 4 weeks old or older are fit for food. The law of New Jersey makes the limit three weeks. The United States Department of Agriculture puts its stamp of approval on veal of calves 3 weeks old or over.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Where?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. It allows that veal to go into interstate commerce.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Where?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I object to these interruptions for the moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan will not interrupt the gentleman from New York without his consent.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. As I say, the limit in New York is four weeks. Now, what is the result? The New York Central Railroad tracks run easterly and westerly through the State of New York from Albany to Buffalo and down to the city of New York east of the Hudson without crossing any other State line. Therefore the farmers of New York who ship their calves to New York City by the New York Central road can send them there at 4 weeks of age, but the man from the western or southern part of the State who wants to send his calves to New York by the West Shore, the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western, the Erie, or the Pennsylvania, all of which cross State lines into either New Jersey or Pennsylvania, and therefore shipments over those lines go into interstate commerce, can not ship them under 6 weeks of age.

The man east of the Hudson or between Buffalo and Albany can ship his calves into New York City at 4 weeks of age. The man who ships them by the West Shore road can not ship them under 6 weeks. Is that fair to the farmers of New York? Is it fair that the man from one section may send his calves to New York City at 4 weeks while the man from another section can not send them at less than 6 weeks? We say it is not uniform, we say it is not fair, we say that the 4-weeks' law accomplishes just what the humane society wants. Dr. Rowley, of Boston, and Mr. Coleman, and the others all said that if the calves were 4 weeks of age there would be no complaint, because a calf which is well fed on sweet milk until it is 4 weeks of age becomes prime veal, whereas if they try to feed it sweet milk until it is 6 weeks old it is more expensive. The value of the milk it drinks is greater than the value of the flesh it puts on in those intervening two weeks. Therefore it does not pay to feed a calf all the sweet milk it will drink until it is 6 weeks old, as compared with feeding it until it is 4 weeks old and then butchering it. It is the best veal and it is the most profitable way to dispose of the calves. These humanitarians said that if calves were four weeks old before they were shipped there would be no complaint. They said that so far as they knew a calf 6 weeks of age would suffer as much as a calf 4 weeks of age. Therefore, in order to satisfy these people on this technicality, you want to change the law and make it different from the laws of all the States of the Union and put a part of New York State under one law and a part under another law with two weeks' difference in the age limit. The representatives of the humane society said that if the law providing that a calf should be 4 weeks old were enforced, they would be satisfied, but because they thought it might not be strictly enforced they wanted to make it 6 weeks in order to have two weeks' leeway.

I stand here demanding equality for all the farmers of New York. I stand here opposed to a law which will let the New York Central ship calves to New York City at the age of 4 weeks, when the West Shore, the Erie, the Pennsylvania, and other roads can not ship calves to New York at less than 6 weeks of age.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I understand the gentleman from Michigan is willing to have the bill amended.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. If the gentleman will consent to a change from 6 weeks to 4 weeks we will not oppose the passage of the bill.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman permit an answer?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. The gentleman can answer that yes or no.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. But I am not prepared to permit the gentleman from New York to direct how I shall answer.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman is not willing to have the bill amended, I object.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Pennsylvania object, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I will print as a part of my remarks the views of the minority.

The views of the minority are as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The undersigned members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 24927) to regulate the interstate transportation of immature calves, which bill has been reported favorably, beg leave to submit herewith our views in opposition to the enactment of said bill into law in its present form.

The report raises and accentuates an issue which does not exist between the majority and minority members of the committee, or between the humane societies and the agricultural organizations. We wish to make it clear at the outset that we favor the bill if the age limit of "6 weeks" is changed to "4 weeks," and we hope that those who read the report and the minority's views will constantly bear this in mind.

The report says:

"This bill is designed to prevent cruel, disgusting, and dangerous traffic—cruel to animals, dangerous to human health, and disgusting in its revelation of cheap and nasty cupidity in perpetrating upon unsuspecting consumers food unfit for human consumption."

About half of the report is given to prove that very young calves have been shipped in interstate commerce in a cruel manner. That is principally made up of extracts from the hearings, some direct statements and some hearsay, but all tending to show that very young calves have been subjected to cruel treatment in transportation. All this could as well have been omitted from the report; for, while we do not know whether or not these statements are true, we do not deny them, and are ready to join hands with the majority in preventing such practices in the future.

Practically all the balance of the report is given to proof that "bob veal" is unwholesome and unfit for food. Again we agree with the majority, and all the men who appeared at the hearings in opposition to this bill in its present form agreed with the humane societies that the veal of immature calves should not be sold for food. The majority report quotes from the evidence of Mr. Boshart, Mr. Vary, Senator Cobb, Mr. Gerow, Mr. Curtis, Mr. Saunders, and Mr. McConnell, all of whom appeared in opposition to the 6 weeks limit in this bill, and all of whom condemned the practice of selling for food the meat of immature calves, and all of whom stated that calves well fed on sweet milk to the age of 4 weeks make prime veal, which brings the highest price in the market because it is the best veal.

There was no real contention on the facts between those who advocated and those who opposed this bill in its present form. Both groups of men—those who represented the humane societies and those who represented the agricultural organizations—asserted that very young calves should not be permitted to enter interstate commerce or any other commerce. Both asserted that the meat of such calves is unfit for food, and both agreed that the practice should be stopped, to avoid unnecessary suffering of calves and to protect the public from unwholesome and dangerous "bob veal."

In view of this agreement and mutual desire to accomplish the same end, all of the report except the Stillman letter is entirely immaterial so far as the real issue here is concerned, unless the intention is to harrow the feelings and turn the stomachs of those who read it, prejudice their minds, and unfit them to give the bill and the proposed amendment fair and impartial consideration.

What is the difference between the humane societies and the practical dairymen on the question of this proposed legislation? It is two weeks in the age of calves. The humane societies say that calves should be 6 weeks old before they are admitted to interstate commerce, and the dairymen say that calves 4 weeks old or older should be admitted to such commerce. Which view is the reasonable and practicable one and the one which should be enacted into law? Read the report and the hearings so far as they bear on the question of cruelty, and you will find that practically all the cases cited and all the evidence refer to very young calves, from 1 day to 1 week old. One or two references are made to calves from 1 to 2 weeks old, but not one case is cited of cruelty to a calf 3 weeks old or older. Then read the report and the hearings and you will not find one word or suggestion that the meat products of well-fed calves 4 weeks old are not palatable and wholesome food.

No point was made in the hearings that calves 4 weeks of age suffer more in transportation than do calves 6 weeks of age. In the transportation of live animals of any kind suffering can not be avoided. When a calf is taken from its dam both suffer. When a calf of any age is taken from the farm, put into a jolting wagon, thence into a jolting freight car and transported many miles, it suffers pain and privation. Every animal that is slaughtered suffers pain and death; and yet butchers are not held to be guilty of cruelty to animals. According to the law of creation and existence the weaker animals furnish food for the stronger ones, and all the lower animals, directly or indirectly, contribute toward the comfort, enjoyment, convenience, and support of man.

The primary definition of "cruel," according to the dictionaries, is:

"Disposed to hurt or to take pleasure in the hurt of others; inhuman, unfeeling, hard-hearted; void of pity or feeling for others; savage."

And the primary definition of "cruelty" is:

"A cruel disposition or temper; a disposition to take pleasure in inflicting pain or hurt on others, or in looking at the pain of others."

If the humane societies are opposed to inflicting pain and suffering on animals, then, to be consistent, they should not only preach but also practice strict vegetarianism.

We submit, therefore, that the bill, with the proposed amendment changing "6 weeks" to "4 weeks," will accomplish all that the humane societies demand to protect very young calves from unnecessary suffering and to protect the public from the consumption of unwholesome veal.

Most of the evidence before the committee was directed against the practice of shipping very young calves from the State of New York to the State of Massachusetts, where they were butchered and the content sold for food. A few references were made to this practice in other parts of the country, but the real grievance was based upon the interstate commerce in those calves between New York and Massachusetts.

Dr. Francis H. Rowley, of Boston, who had charge of the bill in behalf of the humane societies, admitted that if such a law as is here proposed by the agricultural organizations of the country were enforced it would accomplish all that he demanded or expected in the protection of very young calves from cruel treatment and in the protection of the public from "bob veal." He said (hearings, p. 12):

"We have a law in Massachusetts that I think would control it if we could enforce it. We have two statutes on our books. One says, 'No calf shall be sold for food under 4 weeks of age,' and we have another that says that 'if a calf when dressed will weigh 40 pounds, with 2 pounds allowed for shrinkage overnight'—that is, 38 pounds—'it may pass inspection.'"

It is manifest that, if those provisions of the Massachusetts law could be enforced, Dr. Rowley would not come to Congress for Federal legislation; that he has applied to Congress for this legislation because he admits that Massachusetts is unable to enforce its law.

When pressed for an explanation why he came to Congress instead of protecting the calves and the people of Massachusetts by State legislation, he said (p. 12 of the hearings):

"I am sorry to answer that Massachusetts is not up to New York State. For two years, in the public press and in every possible way,

I have tried to force upon the Boston Board of Health and the State board of health the necessity for action, and it can not be done at the present time. Massachusetts is behind, sadly behind, in its legislation in this matter."

Again he said (p. 12 of the hearings):

"The local inspectors in our 400 little slaughterhouses will act on the 38-pound law—when the calf is dressed—and if you try to enforce it on the 4-weeks law they fall back on the statute which says 'if it weighs 38 pounds,' and the local inspector can be induced to put his stamp on it. If we could only stir up the State of Massachusetts to realize this situation, we could do a great deal."

As bearing on our contention that this bill was conceived and drafted, not to stop the sale of calves 4 weeks old, which make prime veal, but to stop the transportation of very young calves under a week old, which would suffer greatly and which are not wholesome food, and to show what was in the mind of Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan, who introduced the bill, conducted the hearings before the committee, and wrote the report, we refer to the hearings, pages 43 and 44.

After the first witness for the agricultural societies of New York, Mr. Boshart, had stated that he was against the sale of very young calves and was in favor of the strict enforcement of the New York law, which provides that calves under "4 weeks" of age shall not be slaughtered and sold for food, the following colloquy occurred:

"Mr. DRISCOLL. Now, Mr. HAMILTON, can't we agree on four weeks, and not take any more time here? I do not think that anybody will ask for a higher age limit really on the merits. Can't we agree here on four weeks and not consume any more time in this matter?

"Mr. HAMILTON. I want to ask this gentleman a few questions, but perhaps it isn't important to do that.

"Mr. DRISCOLL. A man who is as fair as he is, and wants to do what is fair——

"Mr. BOSHART. We are here to protect an honest and legitimate industry.

"Mr. HAMILTON. The primary purpose of this bill was to prevent, I will say (and I think every member of the committee who has heard the testimony understands it), the cruel and inhuman practice which has grown up of taking calves less than 1 week old, as shown by the testimony, and often as young as a day, and shipping them to Boston, for illustration—that is generally the objective point. Many of them die en route, and some of them arrive at their destination with their stomachs as dry as a powderhorn. The Federal inspection, as this gentleman has said, is recoghized to be good and adequate, but the local inspection of Massachusetts is understood to be defective. These calves are consigned under the law of New York for, I have forgotten the term, for agricultural purposes, for farming purposes to Richard Roe or John Doe

"Mr. DRISCOLL. For breeding purposes?

"Mr. HAMILTON. For breeding purposes; but, as a matter of fact, John Doe, or Richard Roe, is a butcher, and the calves pass inspection, and the livers are sold for about 60 cents and the sweetbreads for something like that, and the hides for something, and the carcasses are then boned and sold for chicken. The testimony is that the meat is unfit for human consumption, and it has produced ptomaine poison, it is said, in some instances. This abuse is not trivial, but runs up into the hundreds of thousands. That is what this bill was introduced to reach."

This statement of Mr. Hamilton clearly indicates what he had in mind when he introduced the bill, and we submit that the bill as modified by changing "6 weeks" to "4 weeks" would accomplish all that he and the advocates of the bill expected or intended to accomplish by it.

The only statement in the hearings that squints toward an argument in favor of the "6 weeks" limit is contained in a letter from W. O. Stillman, president of the American Humane Association, to Mr. Hamilton, dated April 24, 1912, after the close of the hearings before the committee. In considering his letter due allowance must be given to the fact that it is not verified and he was not subjected to cross-examination. It says (pp. 87 and 88):

"That where the 4 weeks age limit holds large numbers of calves are shipped much under that age and anywhere from 1 to 2 weeks old, or even younger. The constant tendency seems to be, according to the experience of our anticruelty societies, to evade the 4 weeks limit and send the calves to market as soon as possible for obvious reasons.

"From our expperience with the 4 weeks limit we are convinced that a 6 weeks limit is positively required and would practically result in large numbers of calves being shipped at considerably under the 6 weeks limit, making the age in actual practice much nearer 4 weeks than 6. In other words, it is desirable to have the limit at least 6 weeks, in order to prevent the shipment of calves much under 4 weeks of age."

Mr. Stillman admits that if a law making the age limit "4 weeks" were enforced, it would be satisfactory to the humane societies and accomplish what they want. He urges a "6 weeks" limit in order to have 2 weeks leeway on the theory that the law will be violated and that a "6 weeks" limit loosely enforced will not accomplish any more or even as much as a law with a "4 weeks" limit strictly enforced. We doubt if that is a sound principle on which to base legislation. A provision should not be placed in the statutes unless there is a public sentiment back of it which will insist on its enforcement and approve severe penalties for its violation. We submit that his letter is really an indorsement of our contention for a "4 weeks" limit, severe penalties, and rigid enforcement.

We now submit the reasons why this bill should be amended by changing "6 weeks" to "4 weeks," as urged by the agricultural and dairy associations.

It would tend toward uniformity of law, which always tends toward obedience to the law and uniformity in practice under it.

New York State has a statute which provides that calves under the age of "4 weeks" shall not be slaughtered and sold for food. Massachusetts, Vermont, and Connecticut have statutes to the same effect. New Jersey has a law providing that calves under the age of 3 weeks shall not be slaughtered and sold for food. The Federal regulation provides that the veal of calves of 3 weeks of age or older is fit for food, and puts the stamp of the Federal Government on such product and permits it to go into interstate commerce.

A Federal statute providing that calves under the age of "4 weeks" shall not be admitted to interstate commerce would conform to the laws of the States where the practice of shipping in interstate commerce immature calves has mostly prevailed, according to the hearings, and could be more effectively administered and enforced because of its harmony with the laws which now exist in those States.

Greater New York and the surrounding cities and towns are the great consuming center of the East, and should be given fair consideration in the enactment of all food laws, particularly those which affect the surrounding States. Since none of the States in that part of the country requires that a calf shall be over 4 weeks of age when it may be slaughtered and sold for food, a Federal statute prohibiting a calf under 6 weeks of age from interstate commerce would be very difficult of administration and enforcement because of its conflict with the State laws; and if it were enforced its effect would be to raise the price of food, which is now very high.

This bill with the "6-weeks" limit would be unfair to New York City consumers, and would discriminate unfairly between the farmers in different sections of the State. To illustrate: All farmers in the eastern and northeastern parts of the State could ship their calves to New York City at the age of "4 weeks," because they would go by way of the New York Central and not enter interstate commerce; while all farmers in the southern and southwestern parts of the State could not ship their calves to New York under 6 weeks of age, because they would enter that city by way of the West Shore, Delaware, Lackawanna & Western, the Erie, or Pennsylvania Railroad, and would of necessity pass through Pennsylvania or New Jersey, or both, and would therefore constitute interstate commerce. The Hudson River would be the dividing line. One the east side of that river the law would permit farmers to send calves 4 weeks of age to New York City for food. On the west side of that river they could not send calves of less than 6 weeks of age to New York. Such a law would be manifestly so unfair and unreasonable that the average man might feel justified in violating it. It would not only be unfair, but useless and unnecessary either to protect very young calves from cruelty or to protect the public from unwholesome veal. In that event Mr. Stillman's assumption would perhaps be realized, that the 2-weeks part of the Federal law would become dead and inactive and the "4-weeks" law of New York and all the surrounding States would be respected and enforced.

Representatives of humane societies and societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals may be suspicious because in a multitude of transactions they have discovered some violations of law. Yet we believe that the great majority of men are honest and disposed to obey the law, especially when that law is fair and reasonable and not discriminatory.

It appeared in the hearings, without contradiction, that a farmer would make more money by feeding a calf well on sweet milk till the age of 4 weeks than he would if required to keep it until the age of 6 weeks. Indeed, it was stated that he would lose money on it if required to keep it till 6 weeks of age; that it would consume as much milk during the two weeks from 4 to 6 as during the first four weeks, and that it would not increase in weight accordingly. Further, that it would be apt to lose in quality and selling price. That it would require 40 pounds of milk a day to properly nourish it from the age of 4 to 6 weeks, and that if it did not get all it could drink the veal would become stringy and not as palatable or desirable as if well fed to the age of 4 weeks and then slaughtered. It was also strongly urged before the committee that if farmers were not permitted to sell their calves for food until 6 weeks of age it would raise the cost of food.

In conclusion we submit that this bill with the amendment proposed by the farmers' associations will, if enacted into law and strictly enforced, accomplish all that the humane societies demand, and it will fully protect the public from dangerous and unwholesome "bob veal." We therefore recommend that the bill as reported should not pass, but that it should be amended by changing the limit of "6 weeks" to "4 weeks," and as so amended be enacted into law.

STATEMENT OF HON. H. M. GOLDFOGLE.

Believing that if the limit were fixed at 4 weeks, as it is in the New York statute, and the law strictly and properly enforced, the purposes the framers of the bill have in view would be met, I concur in the recommendation to amend the bill by making the limit 4 weeks.

STATEMENT OF HON. A. J. SABATH.

I am in favor of the principle underlying this bill, as I have always favored, and favor now, humane treatment for our dumb animals. I regret the inhuman treatment that is being accorded to young calves 1 and 2 weeks old during transportation; but I am of the opinion that to prohibit the transportation of calves under 6 weeks old is unreasonable. That, I believe, would preclude the possibility of calves being transported in interstate commerce at all, as no farmer will keep a calf for 6 weeks with profit, unless, of course, he does so for raising purposes. Four weeks would seem to be the proper limitation. With 6 weeks as the earliest period after birth upon which calves could be permitted to be transported in interstate commerce, it would be cheaper for the farmer to kill when a calf was only a few days old and thereby preventing the large centers from securing any veal and also which would also tend to further increase the already high price of meats.

The city of Chicago being the largest center of the meat industry, and one of the largest consumers, would necessarily suffer more than any other city in the Union, for the reason that 90 per cent of the calves that are shipped to that city come from other States, and these shipments would therefore be affected by this act.

A. J. SABATH.

STANDARD BARREL FOR FRUITS AND VEGETABLES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 23113) to fix the standard barrel for fruits and vegetables.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF MEAT-INSPECTION LAW.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 26329) to amend proviso in meat-inspection law concerning products prepared according to directions of foreign purchasers.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 26329) to amend proviso in meat-inspection law concerning products prepared according to directions of foreign purchasers.

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907," approved June 30, 1906, which reads as follows: "Provided, That, subject to the rules and regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, the provisions hereof in regard to preservatives shall not apply to meat-food products for export to any foreign country and which are prepared or packed according to the specifications or directions of the foreign purchaser, when no substance is used in the preparation or packing thereof in conflict with the laws of the foreign country to which said article is to be exported; but if said article shall be in fact manufactured, sold, or offered for sale for domestic use or consumption, then this proviso shall not exempt said article from the operation of all the other provisions of this act," be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting after the word "preservatives" the words "and coloring matter," so that said proviso as amended shall read as follows: "Provided, That, subject to the rules and regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, the provisions hereof in regard to preservatives and coloring matter shall not apply to meat-food products for export to any foreign country and which are prepared or packed according to the specifications or directions of the foreign purchaser, when no substance is used in the preparation or packing thereof in conflict with the laws of the foreign country to which said article is to be exported; but if said article shall be in fact sold or offered for sale for domestic use or consumption, then this proviso shall not exempt said article from the operation of all the other provisions of this act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the author of the bill if it is not a fact that in coloring oleomargarine a chemical is used?

Mr. MANN. This bill, if passed, would permit a mineral chemical to be used in coloring oleomargarine where it was so ordered by the foreign purchaser, but it could not be used in oleomargarine manufactured and sold in the United States and could not be used if forbidden by the country to which it was exported.

Mr. FOWLER. Can the gentleman give any reason why the United States refused to permit a chemical to be used in the coloring of butter or oleomargarine in this country?

Mr. MANN. I understand the department holds that the use of chemical dyes is deleterious to health.

Mr. FOWLER. In the gentleman's opinion, is the dye deleterious to health which will be necessary to color the oleomargarine provided for in this bill?

Mr. MANN. I do not think that it is.

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman does not agree, then, with the pure-food authorities of this country?

Mr. MANN. Well, there is a wide difference of opinion; some chemical dyes are supposed to be deleterious to health and some are not. When we passed the pure-food law we made special provisions giving authority to use coloring matters which were not deleterious to health, and in some cases they allowed chemical dyes to be used in food.

Mr. FOWLER. I understand in talking with Members interested in this bill that a reddish color is desired to be produced in oleomargarine sold to some islanders.

Mr. MANN. That is correct.

Mr. FOWLER. What chemical could be used to produce a reddish color that would not be deleterious to health?

Mr. MANN. They have a reddish chemical dye which it is claimed by many people is not deleterious to health; and, as a matter of fact, in some of the Lesser Antilles, such as Barbados, they used to purchase from the United States a reddish-colored butter and oleomargarine. That continued, I believe, until about a year ago, when the department made a ruling that they could not use that chemical dye for the coloring of such substances. Since that time we have lost that trade, but they still use the articles purchased in Europe.

Mr. FOWLER. Does not the gentleman think it would be better for the United States to lose the trade which this bill seeks to secure than to authorize the use of chemicals which are deleterious to health?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, when we passed the pure-food law I suppose that no matter was more thoroughly discussed than was this. We inserted this proviso in the pure-food law:

Provided, That no article shall be deemed misbranded or adulterated within the provisions of this act when intended for export to any foreign country and prepared or packed according to specifications or directions of the foreign purchaser when no substance is used in the preparation or packing thereof in conflict with the laws of the foreign country to which said article is intended to be shipped.

As a matter of fact, there were various meat articles then being prepared by the use of a preservative which the English purchasers insisted upon and which the English law recognized as proper. It was not intended to permit those articles to be used in the United States, there being a difference of opinion between the scientists of this country and the scientists of England. So we put in a provision that so long as the articles used were not contrary to the laws of the country to which they were shipped and were ordered to be inserted by the purchaser, that that might be done. It leaves it to that country to determine, and the provision in the pending bill would be in the same way. There is a difference of opinion in reference to these things. Besides that, while all preservatives, in my judgment, are in a way deleterious to health, yet in some cases it is far better to preserve food than it is to let it spoil and take the chance of eating it when it is partly spoiled. The use of red coloring matter, chemical dyes, in the Tropics, where they desire red coloring matter, is probably less deleterious to health than the use of putrid butter.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, these products are sent from Europe now and are colored with this aniline coloring matter, to meet the demand of the trade in the West Indies.

Mr. MANN. They are.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does the gentleman know whether there has been any ill effect from the use of those dyes?

Mr. MANN. Oh, they have been using this chemically dyed butter and oleomargarine for years down there. I saw them using it when I was there. I do not know whether it is injurious to them or not. They have not as much vitality as some people in the United States.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Perhaps they are still wrestling with the hookworm.

Mr. MANN. Possibly so. There is no complaint there with reference to that, and without the use of the chemical dyes they can not obtain what they want, so they claim. At any rate, they buy that same product from Europe instead of from the United States.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, remembering the yeomen service that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] rendered in getting passed that very desirable piece of legislation known as the pure-food law, more properly a truthful labor law, I am almost ready to follow the gentleman blindly in matters of this kind.

Mr. MANN. I never have proposed anything to this body that I thought would put bad food or improperly labeled food upon anyone.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am quite certain of that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, still reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman if he is willing to commit America to a commercial policy which would be detrimental to the health of the people who buy our products?

Mr. MANN. I would not be, I will say to the gentleman very frankly.

Mr. FOWLER. Then, if this aniline dye, or whatever is used for coloring this butter, is deleterious to health, does the gentleman believe it is wise for us to pass such a bill in order to gain the trade of a few negroes in a few of the islands?

Mr. MANN. I do not believe it is deleterious to health. I do not think anyone claims as a matter of fact that it is deleterious to health.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and one Members present; not a quorum.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

INTERSTATE TRANSPORTATION OF IMMATURE CALVES.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, before we get too far away from the dead-calf question I want to make a request. I desire permission to extend my remarks on the subject, in order to show that if the people up there can not protect themselves against these dead calves we ought to make beef cheaper——

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. Then I will put it in; I will say it anyhow [laughter]—by prohibiting the slaughter, shipment, and sale in interstate commerce of calves before they are large enough to make beef. It will not do to say the people of Boston and New York ought to have more sense than to eat dead calves, for everybody knows that all Boston people are highbrows and have more culture and literary attainments than anybody else since Adam, while it is equally notorious that the people of New York have more financial sense and know more about fiscal legerdemain and practice it more than anybody since Shylock. Neither is it proper to say they ought to have better taste. Taste is not debatable, therefore I will not say that they ought to have better taste than to eat dead calves; but if any of them had been here to-day to hear the revolting details of that traffic as stated by the eloquent and able gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON], which caused me to cancel my order for lunch, they certainly would have been moved by some sort of qualms of conscience, stomach, or brain to abstain from eating veals, sweetbreads, and liver forever. The liver of any sort of an animal is the scavenger of the system, and, of course, introduces that much poison into the stomach which receives the liver. Veal is not fit to eat, and it is a waste to kill the calf before it has an opportunity to grow into palatable beef.

If babies were treated as cupidity permits the dairyman and townfolk to treat calves there would not be enough people on earth to elect one Congressman. It would be more deplorable than the slaughter of the first born in Egpyt, or the wholesale order of Herod for the destruction of all children. Too parsimonious to sustain the calf until he can eat grass and other food, the people who keep milch cows give the calves over to the butcher more for the sake of getting rid of the calf than for the price they receive for him. I shall go to work to study out a plan which will enable us by amendment of the interstate-commerce law to prevent animals of the cattle kind from being slaughtered, shipped, and sold in interstate commerce until they are large enough to make palatable beef. There is no doubt on earth that that will reduce the price of beef, and I ask some of my philanthropic friends from Boston, who are always talking about humanitarianism and trying to improve the practices and morals of other people, why they do not establish a foundling asylum for calves and save from death the innocents discarded by their owners and doomed to destruction before they have an opportunity to grow into usefulness? And right here I will suggest that any man would find it profitable if, having a few acres of land in the vicinity of any town where there are many cows, he would collect up the calves and keep them for a year or two until they are fit for beef. On this subject I ask the reading of the following abstracts from a current newspaper, which contains some wise suggestions and wholesome statements of facts:

IN THE ARGENTINE YOU CAN NOT KILL A COW LESS THAN 7 YEARS OLD, IT'S AGAINST THE LAW—WE SHOULD HAVE SOME SUCH LAW IN AMERICA—STOP THE KILLING OF YOUNG CALVES, WE SHALL BE SHORT OF MEAT VERY SOON.

Mr. M. J. Sulzberger, vice president of the big packing concern that bears his name, sat philosophizing in his solid mahogany office in Chicago.

"When my father first went into the business," said he, "you could buy a steer for about the price that you pay now for a hog.

"People complain about the cost of meat. They don't complain any more than the packers complain, and not as much.

"It would surprise the public—and it would be absolutely true—if the statement were made that there is no profit in the beef business. There is an actual loss on every steer slaughtered so far as the beef goes. If it were not for the by-products and the extreme economies of the packing business it would be a business entirely impossible."

Every day the problem becomes more difficult. It is rather startling to say that you once could buy a steer for the price that you pay now for a hog. But figures are remorseless. With ranch lands vanishing, farms cut up, population increasing, it is not as ridiculous as it sounds to say that unless something is done we shall some day have the hog that costs the price of the steer, followed by the chicken that costs the former price of a hog.

Of course, the necessary thing will be done. For human intelligence always meets emergencies as they arise. But it is time for human intelligence to get to work, think over the beef problem, realize that we can no longer export a pound of beef to England—except the few head that are sent over alive to be killed on the other side. It is time to realize that the Argentine is to supply the beef of the world, and that this country, which once proudly talked of itself as the Nation feeding all nations, is getting rapidly to a condition where it won't be able to feed itself.

Mr. Sulzberger, in describing the great development of beef production in the Argentine and other South American countries, mentioned casually the fact that in the Argentine the killing of a cow under 7 years of age is forbidden. The idea is to compel development of the beef industry by forbidding the slaughter of cows that produce the calves and the beef.

Long ago this newspaper suggested that a law might be passed here preventing the constant wasteful slaughter of young calves.

Out of a thousand beef cattle born in the United States, except on the big ranches, only a very small number are actually brought to maturity.

And, worst of all, in the big dairies the calf is killed as soon as it is born. The mother never sees it. And the carcass, unfit for food, is thrown away.

That is a criminal waste. And with all due respect for the vested rights of property and the proud privilege of knocking calves on the head, the Government should interest itself in the matter.

Naturally the milk supply is important. The dairyman, looking at the matter from a cash standpoint, is hardly to be blamed, under modern conditions of competition, when he knocks his young calves on the head the hour they are born or when he makes up his mind that it is cheaper to "burn a cow up," as the expression goes, and kill her at the end of two years of maximum milk production.

The Government and the people, taking a broader view, realizing that the price of beef can not rise forever, understanding what it means when the people pay for a hog what they used to pay for a steer, should make provision for a continued supply of beef, as the German Government, for instance, in its wonderfully wise forestry makes provision for continued supplies of lumber.

The young calves should be protected. A premium should be put upon the raising of calves or a punishment upon their destruction.

We might borrow an idea from the Argentine, that insists upon keeping cows alive until they should have had a reasonable number of years in which to make good the havoc wrought by the slaughterhouses.

There will, of course, be wise men to tell you that supply and demand rule all these things, but intelligence could rule.

When five children out of seven died of preventable disease, they used to say that it was the will of God. But it wasn't.

It was the stupidity and the brutality of man. Clean streets, decent plumbing, boards of education, vaccination, scientific institutions have protected the lives of children and lengthened the lives of human beings.

The Government might in one way or another protect the lives of calves and let them stretch out into beef for the benefit of the race.

The great problem to-day is feeding. Science might supply to the calf after a few weeks inexpensive substitutes for the mother's milk—one that would supply bone and a good quality of beef.

At all events, it ought to be somebody's business to think about it. With pork selling at $8.15 a hundred pounds and good beef entirely beyond the reach of poor people and with tens of thousands of calves being knocked on the head annually—every one of them unfit for food, for veal is not fit to eat—it is time to think about the beef supply.

Here is a chance for those whose favorite topic is conservation of national resources.

When you see a little newborn calf staggering on its thin, weak legs in the field, you see in front of you the possibility of 1,400 pounds of good meat. But the calf is killed, and in place of 1,400 pounds of good meat two years from now you have a few pounds of bad veal, not fit to eat.

Wise gentlemen at Washington in and out of the Department of Agriculture, please think about this.

BRIDGE ACROSS NORTH RIVER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4978) to supplement and amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate the North River Bridge Co. and to authorize the construction of a bridge and approaches at New York City across the Hudson River, to regulate commerce in and over such bridge between the States of New York and New Jersey, and to establish such bridge a military and post road," approved July 11, 1890.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I ask to have the bill passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks leave to pass this bill over without prejudice, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserves the right to object. Is there any objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] to pass this bill over without prejudice?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I received a telegram advising me that the mayor of the city and the board of estimates and apportionment have under consideration, in the way of hearings or in some other way, the proposition embodied in this bill, and therefore I ask that until this matter is disposed of this bill be passed over.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to passing this bill over without prejudice? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER, Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, and Mr. MANN reserved the right to object.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON], who is in charge of the bill, as to the reason for bringing in a bill authorizing large appropriations to be considered on the Unanimous Consent Calendar? Is not it unusual?

Mr. COVINGTON. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] that it is unusual to bring in a bill authorizing appropriations of large sums of public money and place that bill upon the Calendar for Unanimous Consent. But it will be recalled by all of the Members of this House that at the last session of Congress the general lighthouse bill was reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and placed upon the calendar, carrying about the usual number of authorizations for urgently needed public works in the Lighthouse Service, and that the stress of that session and the peculiar situation existing between the Senate and the House caused that bill to be stripped down to the point where it was denominated as "an emergency lighthouse bill," carrying only three or four hundred thousand dollars in authorization for the most immediate and urgent needs. At that time it was generally understood that in lieu of that bill there would be introduced, considered, and reported for passage at this session of Congress a lighthouse bill carrying authorization for all such works as are really needed for the proper maintenance of the Lighthouse Service. When this bill was reported to the House after full hearings in the committee it was found that the situation of the call of committees on Calendar Wednesday is such that there is practically no possibility for the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to be reached in that call during the present Congress. Having regard, therefore, for the fact that there had been no general lighthouse bill in the last Congress, and that all of the works reported in this bill are needed for the proper maintenance of the Lighthouse Service, the committee thought it was proper that this rather unusual course should be pursued and the bill placed on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman put it entirely on the ground of the urgency of the work provided for?

Mr. COVINGTON. The gentleman puts it on the ground of urgency and necessity for the passage of a lighthouse bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There has been a great deal of damage along the Atlantic coast during the winter as the result of very heavy storms. I observe some matters that have been before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee are not incorporated in this bill, but that very large appropriations are made to certain other sections of the country, where perhaps the same emergency may not have arisen. We had great floods on the Mississippi River last year, about which we heard a great deal, and very heavy appropriations have been made for the purposes of navigation and for reconstruction of levees along the banks of that river, and I notice this bill carries over $300,000 for aids to navigation along the lower Mississippi. I wanted to know if this bill is so urgent, or these aids to navigation are so urgent, that it is advisable to put a bill of this character where we may not have an opportunity to amend it—on the Unanimous-Consent Calendar?

Mr. COVINGTON. I will state to the gentleman that in framing this bill the committee had before it the Commissioner of Lighthouses, and in order to determine which were the more urgent projects, it considered them all, and in the end took less than half of the items that are embodied in the report of 1912 as necessary by the Commissioner of Lighthouses himself. I do not now recall any particular items along the Atlantic seaboard that the commissioner urged as of immediate necessity that were not included.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question right there?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. COVINGTON. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Did not the subcommittee also take into consideration every bill and every project submitted by any Member of this House and consider each one of them in preparing this bill?

Mr. COVINGTON. I will state to the gentleman from Minnesota, who was with me as a member of the subcommittee, that it is a fact that the subcommittee took into consideration every bill introduced by a Member of Congress and every Senate bill which had been passed and had come to the House of Representatives and been referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in addition to the recommendations of the Commissioner of Lighthouses; and in formulating that bill I may say it was made up with due regard for what were considered the more urgent projects, having in view not merely the commissioner's report, but the bills introduced by Members and the bills that had been passed by the Senate. The hearings were, in fact, quite exhaustive, and the bill was afterwards considered thoroughly in the full committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman about the Atchafalaya Channel, which comes in the eighth lighthouse district? Is that an approach to the Passes of the Mississippi?

Mr. COVINGTON. That is not, I will say to the gentleman, an approach to the Passes of the Mississippi River. The "Chaffellaya" River, as I believe they call it—and I was not aware of that peculiar and remarkable pronunciation myself until I was told of it by Members of the Louisiana delegation—is a river to the westward of the Mississippi River, and it carries a somewhat large and important commerce. That river has been improved at a considerable expense, and the lights therefor are in line with the channel and river and harbor improvements made thereto in recent years.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In the report accompanying the bill, if the gentleman will allow me, reference is made to "the completion of the channel now being dredged in the Atchafalaya to the 20-foot contour in the Gulf of Mexico."

Mr. COVINGTON. That is true. The channel from the Atchafalaya to the 20-foot contour in the Gulf of Mexico has been completed. This is a direct channel in the Atchafalaya River. That has no connection with the Mississippi River, and it leads into a portion of Louisiana that has a large and important commerce.

Now, it is stated in the report of the Commissioner of Lighthouses that that channel is important enough to warrant Congress in including it in an urgent list of places where additional aids to navigation ought to be constructed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wanted to ask the gentleman whether the committee was influenced by the amount of commerce that is transported upon this Atchafalaya entrance channel?

Mr. COVINGTON. I will state to the gentleman that the committee did not attempt to draw exact comparisons of commerce in providing the projects in the present bill, nor did it attempt to have the Commissioner of Lighthouses arrive at what were the comparative volumes of commerce on waterways to be benefited by additional navigation aids.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maryland yield?

Mr. COVINGTON. I do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] is recognized.

Mr. ADAMSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maryland, in charge of the bill, if it is not entirely competent for the House, in the consideration of the bill, in the event the House grants unanimous consent to consider it, to amend it on the motion of any Member by striking out any project that it deems improper or by inserting any other that it wishes to insert?

Mr. COVINGTON. I understand, if it comes up without objection and is to be considered in the House, that as a matter of right under the rules it would be open to amendment under the five-minute rule. I would not have placed it on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent if such were not the case.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is what I wanted to bring out.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] still wish to propound his parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes. Mr. Speaker, my inquiry is as to what order we are proceeding under?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Under unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON] is trying to get unanimous consent.

Mr. MONDELL. This discussion is quite interesting if we are going into the merits of the bill, but it is rather apparent that there is such a wide diversity of opinion as regards the merits that a great deal of time is being consumed before we know whether or not there is to be an objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the point. Here is an appropriation bill, brought in on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and we are supposed to pass it without consideration, unless a gentleman arises and offends the rest of the Members of the House by proposing to take up a little time to discuss it.

The SPEAKER. This is a proposal to get unanimous consent to consider the bill. If unanimous consent is given the bill will come under the general rule.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not want to object to the consideration of the bill, Mr. Speaker. If the bill is to be considered section by section, I am satisfied. But I do want to ask the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON] one more question before we proceed, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. COVINGTON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to ask the gentleman from Maryland whether it has been the policy of the committee he represents, in considering these authorizations, to take up the question of commerce and obtain a statement as to whether commerce in the vicinity warrants the expenditure contemplated by the Government?

Mr. COVINGTON. I will state to the gentleman that I sent to the clerk of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and asked him to take from the various reports of the Chief of Engineers for channel improvement as best he could the statement relative to the amount of commerce on the various waterways for which we have provided aids to navigation. That was the only practical method, it has occurred to me, that we could take to arrive at the question of the amount or volume of commerce on rivers and other waters where aids to navigation are either to be improved or newly established. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was satisfied that the water commerce at all places covered by the present bill is of such volume as to make the proposed projects a real necessity.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman whether the salaries of the lighthouse inspectors are now $2,400 a year, outside of the one in the third district?

Mr. COVINGTON. They are.

Mr. MANN. This proposes to increase the average to $2,700.

Mr. COVINGTON. That is about the purpose of the new legislation in the final paragraph of this bill. I think that the gentleman from Illinois ought to understand—and by reason of his long and unusually capable service as chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce he probably does understand—that the duties of the various inspectors of lighthouse districts of the United States vary both in the volume of work that they have to perform and in the quality of service that the inspectors must give. In the present situation they get $2,400 a year each, without regard to whether they are in a relatively unimportant district in the less traversed waters of the country or in a metropolitan district having great and important aids to navigation. That seemed to the committee to be a sufficient reason why there should be some latitude in the Commissioner of Lighthouses in the Department of Commerce and Labor in apportioning the salaries of the inspectors.

The gentleman knows full well that some years ago—I think while he was a member of the committee—it was necessary to give to the inspector of lighthouses for the New York district a salary of $3,600 because his services were of such a character that a competent man could not be obtained for less money. The present item only pushes that principle a little further. Some districts are of such a character that a $2,400 man may adequately perform the service. There are other districts where a $2,400 man is not the kind of man who can properly perform the work.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the third lighthouse district is the general depot for lighthouses of the United States. That is the reason why that salary was made higher. The man there has a great deal more work and responsibility than simply the inspection service.

Mr. COVINGTON. That is true.

Mr. MANN. In the reorganization law we authorize a rearrangement of the districts. Now, where are the districts in which we are to pay salaries of $2,400 as compared with the $3,000 salary in another district? Is it the New England district, or the New York district, or the Pennsylvania and Maryland district, or the Carolina district? Is it the Florida district, or the Gulf district, or either one of the Pacific coast districts? Where would you make this discrimination, so as to pay $3,000 and yet make only an average of $2,700? It seems to me quite certain that if you pay one of these superintendents $3,000 in the end you will have to pay all the others $3,000. Perhaps that is proper. I doubt whether it is proper to put the lighthouse superintendent under the pressure of having one inspector of one district seeking to have his salary raised at the expense of the inspector of another district.

Mr. COVINGTON. I can only say to the gentleman in reply that that is a pressure to which the commissioner of lighthouses himself seemed to be willing to be subjected, for he stated that the districts did have that disparity of service in them which made it possible and proper that there should be an unequal apportionment of salaries. I can give you a concrete instance. I do not propose to discuss those districts where the service is not of an important character, but the gentleman well knows that in the great lighthouse district at Baltimore, which takes in the entire area of the Chesapeake Bay and the Virginia capes, and the hundreds of lights and other aids to navigation, from the mouth of the Susquehanna River down to the Atlantic Ocean, there are several times the amount of work to perform that there are in several other districts of the United States.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman speaks of one district where probably he has greater knowledge than he has of other districts. On the contrary, I should say that the Lake Michigan district, with which I have had close connection, is of much more importance than the Maryland district. Every gentleman will say that about the district which he knows the most about. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him another question?

Mr. COVINGTON. First let me say that when the gentleman says that every Member will say that about the district he knows the most about the gentleman is speaking in regard to the district in which he lives, and I speak of the district in which I do not live.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; the gentleman lives in the Maryland district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

WESTERN AVENUE NW., DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16319) to extend and widen Western Avenue NW., in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

FIFTH-THIRD NATIONAL BANK OF CINCINNATI, OHIO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 26279) granting the Fifth-Third National Bank of Cincinnati, Ohio, the right to use original charter No. 20.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller of the Currency be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the Fifth-Third National Bank, of Cincinnati, Ohio, charter No. 20 in lieu of their present charter No. 2798, said charter No. 20 being the original charter number of the Third National Bank, of Cincinnati, Ohio, which bank was merged and consolidated with the Fifth National Bank, of Cincinnati, Ohio, in the year 1908, under the name of the Fifth-Third National Bank, of Cincinnati, Ohio, said consolidated bank having succeeded to all the assets, good will, rights, privileges, and emoluments of the said Third National Bank, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, unless some Member desires me to make a further explanation other than what the report shows, I do not care to say anything. I ask for its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALLEN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS ROCK RIVER, ILL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 27157) granting an extension of time to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Rock River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois, by the counties of Henry and Rock Island, in the State of Illinois, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois," approved August 19, 1911, is hereby extended to one year from the date of the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. That the construction, maintenance, and operation of the bridge and approaches thereto therein authorized by the aforesaid act shall be in all respects in accordance with and subject to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the bill needs to be amended, and I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, by striking out all of line 3, after the second word "the," and lines 4, 5, 6, 7, and line 8 up to and including the word "of," and insert in lieu thereof the words "commencement of the bridge authorized," so that it will read: "that the time for the commencement of the bridge authorized by the act entitled," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COVINGTON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PURCHASE OF MOTOR BOAT FOR CUSTOMS SERVICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 26549) to provide for the construction or purchase of motor boat for customs service.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to construct or purchase one gasoline motor boat for service in the Corpus Christi collector's district at a cost not to exceed the sum of $6,000.

With the following amendment recommended by the committee:

In line 5, page 1, strike out the words "Corpus Christi collector's district" and insert in lieu thereof the words "customs collection district of Corpus Christi, Tex."

And add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may use this boat elsewhere than at Corpus Christi, as the exigencies of the service may require."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COVINGTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LIEN FOR TAXES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25780) to amend section 3186 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3186 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3186. If any person liable to pay any tax neglects or refuses to pay the same after demand, the amount shall be a lien in favor of the United States from the time it was due until paid, with the interest, penalties, and costs that may accrue in addition thereto upon all property and rights to property belonging to such person: Provided, however, That such lien shall not be valid as against any mortgagee, purchaser, or judgment creditor until notice of such lien shall be filed by the collector in the office of the registrar or recorder of deeds of the county or counties or parish or parishes in the State of Louisiana within which the property subject to such lien is situated: Provided further, That the provision herein relating to the filing of notice shall be applicable whenever, and only whenever, the laws of the State wherein the property is situated shall authorize the filing of such notice in the office of the registrar or recorder of deeds as provided herein."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the author of the bill to explain the purposes of this change or amendment to existing law.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to amend section 3186 of the Revised Statutes. That section relates to liens for delinquent taxes, and in order that the House may know just what is sought to be done in the matter I will read section 3186:

SEC. 3186. If any person liable to pay any tax neglects or refuses to pay the same after demand, the amount shall be a lien in favor of the United States from the time when the assessment list was received by the collector, except when otherwise provided, until paid, with the interest, penalties, and costs that may accrue in addition thereto upon all property and rights to property belonging to such person.

Under that provision of the statute, whenever any internal revenue in the way of whisky tax or tobacco tax or corporation tax becomes due, it becomes a lien on all the property of the delinquent, wherever it may be situated in the United States, and there is no provision in the law for the protection of innocent purchasers or mortgagees or judgment creditors without notice.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a further question. One of the differences between the existing law and this amendment, as I understand it, is that the existing law makes a tax assessment a lien from the date of the assessment, and this makes it a lien from the date of demand for its collection?

Mr. STERLING. No; the gentleman is not exactly correct about that. But I want to say this: When this bill was prepared the law was copied from the statute of 1874. That statute provides that it shall be a lien from the time it was due, and continuing until it is paid. I have an amendment to offer here in reference to that. A little later the Forty-fifth Congress amended the statute of 1874 by providing that the lien should begin from the time the assessment list was filed with the collector until it was paid. After the bill was introduced I discovered that mistake in quoting the statute. That is, the old statute was quoted instead of the statute now in force, and I have an amendment here correcting that, leaving the language in that regard just the same as it is in the present statute, substituting for the three words in the ninth line, "it was due," the words now in the statute, as follows: "when the assessment list was received by the collector, except when otherwise provided." I shall offer that amendment and ask that it be adopted.

I will say in regard to the purpose of the bill, it simply provides that notice may be given to purchasers or mortgagees of property on which there is any possibility of a lien of this kind by requiring the collector to file notice of the lien in the office of the recorder of deeds or the registrar of deeds in any county in the United States in which the delinquent happened to have property.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit another question there?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. Is that a requirement to be fulfilled when the tax is levied or only when it becomes delinquent?

Mr. STERLING. When it becomes a lien, and that is the time when the assessment list is placed in the hands of the revenue collector. Then it will be his duty, if he desires to preserve the lien as against innocent purchasers or mortgagees without notice, to file this notice in the office of the recorder of deeds.

Mr. CULLOP. That is, where a mortgage is given between the time of the assessment list accruing and the delinquency, in order to get ahead of the mortgage creditor, the lien must be filed by the collector in the county in which the land is situated.

Mr. STERLING. That is the idea, and I will say further that it becomes applicable only when the States adopt legislation providing for the filing of these notices. It is left entirely with the States as to whether or not they will undertake to protect their citizens who in good faith purchase property in a way that they can purchase it without taking the chance of liens of this character.

Mr. CULLOP. Does the gentleman mean that if no legislation is passed in States requiring notice of existing tax lien to be filed that this law will not be applicable?

Mr. STERLING. I would not say that the States ought to adopt legislation requiring notice to be filed, but rather permitting it to be filed in the records of the county where the property is situated. Without such legislation a notice of that kind, I think, would be of no avail. Let me suggest to the gentleman this: That provision is identical with the provision in the United States statute which allows the judgment of the Federal court to be indexed or recorded in the several counties. That only takes effect when the States adopt legislation providing for it, and this provision is identical with that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by striking out the words "it was due," in the ninth line, page 1, of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "When the assessment list was received by the collector, except when otherwise provided."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is suggested that in lines 3 and 4, page 2 of the bill, that a comma should be inserted after the word "counties" in the third line, and after the word "Louisiana" in the fourth line, which I think is proper, and I ask that that amendment be made to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 3, insert after the word "counties" a comma, and in line 4, after the word "Louisiana," insert a comma.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STERLING, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STATE SELECTION OF PHOSPHATE AND OIL LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 26812) to provide for State selection of phosphate and oil lands.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act unreserved public lands of the United States in the State of Idaho which have been withdrawn or classified as phosphate or oil lands, or are valuable for phosphates or oil, shall be subject to selection by the State of Idaho under indemnity and other land grants made to it by Congress whenever such selections shall be made with a view of obtaining or passing title, with a reservation to the United States of the phosphates and oil in such lands, and of the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same.

SEC. 2. That the State of Idaho, when applying to select lands classified as phosphate or oil lands, or valuable for phosphates or oil, with a view to securing or passing title to the same in accordance with the provisions of the indemnity and other granting acts, shall state in the application for selection that same is made in accordance with and subject to the provisions and reservations of this act.

SEC. 3. That upon satisfactory proof of full compliance with the provisions of the laws under which selection is made and this act the State shall be entitled to a patent to the lands selected by it, which patent shall contain a reservation to the United States of all the phosphates and oil in the land so patented, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same upon rendering compensation to the patentee for all damages that may be caused by prospecting for and removing such phosphates or oil. The reserved phosphate and oil deposits in such lands shall be disposed of only as shall be hereafter expressly directed by law.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 6, after the word "shall," by inserting "if otherwise available under existing law."

Amend, page 2, by striking out all of section 3 and inserting in lieu thereof a section reading as follows:

"SEC. 3. That upon satisfactory proof of full compliance with the provisions of the laws under which selection is made and this act, the State shall, upon approval of the selection by the Secretary of the Interior, be entitled to have the lands certified to it, with a reservation to the United States of all the phosphates and oil in the land so certified, together with the right in the United States, or persons authorized by them, to prospect for, mine, and remove the same; but before any person shall be entitled to enter upon the lands certified for the purpose of prospecting, mining, or removing phosphates or oil therefrom he shall furnish, subject to approval by the Secretary of the Interior, a bond or undertaking as security for the payment of all damages to the crops and improvements on said lands by reason of such prospecting for and removal of phosphates or oil. The reserved phosphate and oil deposits in approved selections under this act shall not be subject to exploration or entry other than by the United States, except as hereinafter authorized by Congress."

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I take it that this permission to settle on the oil and phosphate lands does not permit any exploration to be made except by the United States Government.

Mr. FRENCH. That is all, except under laws that may hereafter be passed by the Congress.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it the gentleman's idea that, while we provide for damages to the person owning the surface of the land in case an exploration is made, there ought not to be such an exploration on public lands?

Mr. FRENCH. That point is covered by an amendment which I propose to offer and which has been submitted to the department and meets with the department's approval.

Mr. MANN. What was the gentleman's question?

Mr. FOSTER. That this permits no exploration except that done by the Government of the United States.

Mr. MANN. The bill so provides.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes. Then I want to know, when we provide for damages to be paid to the owner of the surface land, that in case anyone prospected there we should limit it to the United States Government.

Mr. FRENCH. That is a matter that can be taken up later on if Congress wants so to provide, and the difference between this bill and the law that it follows to some extent is that the existing law provides for the acquisition of certain coal lands, while there is no general law providing for the disposition of such lands as these, and it is with that in view that the language is a little bit different here from that provided in the bill authorizing the selection to be made of coal lands.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to the gentleman in prospecting, for instance, for oil it does not injure the farm very much in doing that work, and I do not see the necessity of providing in a bill of this kind, if you safeguard the owner of the surface, that you should confine it to the United States Government.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman understands that the bill authorizes the State of Idaho to select the surface of certain lands?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course, in passing that limited title to the State it is essential that all the rights of the United States or any of its grantees ought to be fully reserved in the patent issued to the State, and it is for the purpose of preserving those rights of entry and those rights of allowing others to enter that these provisions are contained in the bill. Of course, at the end of the bill there is a provision to the effect that until Congress shall act upon these particular lands there shall be no right granted to any individual to go upon them. But when Congress does act, then the State will have its limited act with all necessary reservations under which the Federal Government can act.

Mr. FOSTER. As I understand, the United States Government has now proposed to permit the State of Idaho to take the surface of these lands; reserving the phosphate and oil that may be under the surface. It is proposed here that no one shall have the right to prospect except the United States Government itself.

Mr. MANN. At present.

Mr. FOSTER. At present; yes; unless other laws are passed. Now, then, if we should provide that the owner of the surface has ample bond for any damage that may occur to him on account of prospecting for oil—and I will say that it does not hurt the land very much to prospect for oil—why should we limit it?

Mr. MANN. They are not permitted to prospect anywhere on these lands that are reserved at present, and will not be until Congress legislates. This simply maintains the status quo.

Mr. FOSTER. As to all public lands.

Mr. MANN. As to all the lands that will be withdrawn because of these deposits, from entry.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that.

Mr. LENROOT. As the bill now stands, the United States itself can not prospect without paying something.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly. I understand that. The United States under the bill would have to give bond to prospect.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has an amendment which I understand he is to offer in order to make it complete, if that does make it complete, in reference to prospecting hereafter when the Government does allow it, so that if the State makes a selection now and patents the land, it patents it with the conditions that hereafter if Congress allows prospecting it may add "and damages paid for."

Mr. FOSTER. Does not my colleague think this is a little different state of affairs than that in which the Government owns all the surface and all beneath the surface? Here is a case where you are giving away the surface of the land and the Government is retaining all the oil and phosphate that may be under that surface. And does not the gentleman think it a little different case than where the Government has retained both the surface and what is beneath it?

Mr. MANN. The Government has withdrawn this land from entry on the ground that it is oil and phosphate land. Now no one can take it or do anything with it. We have passed a law in reference to coal on some other lands, and permit people to take the land up for agricultural purposes without having the right to the deposits under the land. This extends to the State of Idaho that privilege as to these oil and phosphate lands. There is no reason why you should take those deposits out on the same terms that control the deposits on other lands where the Government retains both above and underneath. The Government does not desire to give the right to take the surface in order to have somebody get hold of the deposits until further legislation is had.

Mr. FRENCH. And the Government desires to protect itself in the future in different grants it may make by laws under which mining or exploration for phosphate or oil may be carried on, and reserves to itself the complete authority to determine under what terms mining and exploration may be conducted.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to have several amendments that I propose to offer read at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

First. Amend, page 3, line 1, by striking out "them" and inserting "it."

Second. Amend, page 3, line 3, by striking out the comma after the word "prospecting," together with the words "mining, or removing," and insert in lieu thereof the word "for."

Third. Amend, page 3, line 4, by striking out the word "therefrom."

Fourth. Amend, page 3, line 8, by striking out the words "and removal of."

Fifth. Amend, page 3, line 8, by inserting the following sentences after the sentence ending with the word "oil": "Any person who has acquired from the United States the oil or phosphate deposits in any such land, or the right to mine or remove the same, may reenter and occupy so much of the surface thereof as may be required for all purposes reasonably incident to the mining and removal of the oil or phosphate therefrom and mine and remove the oil or phosphate upon payment of the damages caused thereby to the owner thereof, or upon giving a good and sufficient bond or undertaking in an action instituted in any competent court to ascertain and fix said damages: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be held to deny or abridge the right of the State of Idaho to present and have prompt consideration of applications to select lands, which have been classified as oil or phosphate lands, with a view to disproving such classification and securing a certificate without reservation."

Sixth. Amend, line 8, page 3, by inserting before the word "The" as a part of the sentence to which the word belongs the following words: "And provided further, That."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Just a moment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. I just wanted to say to the gentleman from Idaho that, from listening to the reading of his amendments, it appears that the State of Idaho would have the right to determine whether or not there was any oil or phosphate underneath this land.

Mr. FRENCH. Oh, no. As the gentleman may probably be aware, all of this land is now under a blanket reservation. It has not been sufficiently explored to enable anybody to know whether or not it contains oil or phosphate. If it should be developed that some of the land does not contain oil or phosphate, the Government does not care to include it within the area to which the phosphate law may apply. The provision to which the gentleman refers seeks to give the State the privilege of making that representation to the Government if it can do so.

Mr. FOSTER. Do I understand from the gentleman from Idaho that he or anybody can tell without exploration whether there is oil or phosphate underneath this land?

Mr. FRENCH. Oh, no. The final determination rests with the Federal Government, not with the State of Idaho. We only have the privilege, under the amendments read, of making application to remove these restrictions, and if it is shown to the satisfaction of the Government that there is no oil or phosphate there, the Government may eliminate those parts from the reservation. It can eliminate that part which does not contain oil or phosphate from the withdrawal.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Idaho yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise, as a member of the committee having this matter in charge, simply to say that these amendments which the gentleman from Idaho presents are designed to meet the objections that were made when the bill was before the House a couple of weeks ago. Some of us believe that these amendments cure such defects as may have been in the bill heretofore, and that they meet objections such as those made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and others, who at that time made objection. I believe that in its amended form the bill will meet those objections and ought to pass.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, in addition to what has been suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY], I want to say that the committee in the first instance reported the bill precisely as the Secretary of the Interior recommended, putting in each and every amendment that he suggested. Objection was made on the floor two weeks ago owing to the fact that the legislation was not uniform with the other surface land legislation that had been enacted before. We now have the additional amendment that the Secretary wants in order to make the legislation uniform, and each one is offered so that in any event the bill is fully satisfactory to the Secretary and the department which has given it attention. It has been presented to the Secretary twice.

Mr. FOSTER. This complies with recent acts in reference to surface land and the reservation of oil and coal?

Mr. FERRIS. Precisely. The gentleman will remember that we had quite an extended debate a couple of years ago—in 1910, I think it was—on surface and coal land legislation.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. It was thought that we ought to make it uniform. It was carried back to the Secretary to enable him to examine it, in order to reach that uniformity, and these amendments that have been read at the desk were suggested in order to meet each one of those objections.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. There is just one question that I have any doubt about. I want to ask the gentleman from Idaho if he thinks the United States should be compelled to furnish an indemnity bond to a private individual? That is required under the bill as it stands now.

Mr. FRENCH. I imagine that that provision is in the bill in order that the Government of the United States might be fully authorized to impose such a provision upon a private individual, should legislation along that line be deemed advisable later on.

Mr. LENROOT. Very true; but if the bill passes in the present form the Government of the United States could not enter upon that land without furnishing such a bond.

Mr. MANN. What makes the gentleman from Wisconsin think that?

Mr. LENROOT. Line 2, page 3, contains the clause, "Before any person shall enter upon the land," and so forth.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that includes the Government?

Mr. LENROOT. It says, "Before any person shall enter upon the land a bond must be furnished." My suggestion would be to change it so that it would read, "Before any person not employed by or acting for the Government of the United States shall enter upon the land a bond must be furnished."

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman think that the United States, in making this grant to the State of Idaho, should reserve to itself the right to send its agents there to acquire all the surface it may need for its operations, to do all that may be necessary, without paying anything?

Mr. LENROOT. This only applies to the prospecting. I would not raise to actual occupation the objection that I now raise to prospecting.

Mr. MONDELL. Without further examination, I must say that my thought has been that so far as the prospecting was concerned it would not apply.

Mr. LENROOT. It ought not to, and yet clearly the bill reads in that way.

Mr. FRENCH. The Government must necessarily reserve to itself the right to determine the phosphate or oil character of the lands. Suppose the State should apply to have parts of it eliminated, I think the Government ought to have the right to send its agents to make such an examination. If there is any question about it, I would be very glad to have those words included.

Mr. MONDELL. I make this suggestion to the gentleman: My thought is that originally this would not apply to the Government. There is a question as to the character of the land in the first instance. The Government, claiming the mineral, would have the right to do any such prospecting as was necessary to determine whether the mineral was there or not.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, up to that point there could be no possible damages, because there would be no private entering.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; as to the private entering——

Mr. LENROOT. That is after the Government has made the determination that the gentleman speaks of.

Mr. MONDELL. If that were true, the worst that could happen would be that the Secretary of the Interior would file with himself a formal bond.

Mr. LENROOT. That would raise the question whether there is any authorization for him to furnish such a bond.

Mr. FRENCH. I should be glad to see incorporated the words that the gentleman proposes.

Mr. LENROOT. There could not have been any intention on the part of the committee that this should apply to the Government.

Mr. FRENCH. I do not think so.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Possibly the gentleman from Wisconsin has overlooked the final clause in the act, which provides that—

The reserved phosphate and oil deposits in approved selections under this act shall not be subject to exploration or entry, other than by the United States, except as hereinafter authorized by Congress.

Mr. LENROOT. That is not at all inconsistent with the idea of the United States furnishing a bond. If the United States furnishes a bond, it can explore as much as it pleases.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman that it hardly seems to me that the word "person" could possibly apply to the Government of the United States. It is true that when a person goes on the land, in one sense it would apply to any individual; but in the legal sense it means the person for whom the entry is being made, and if it is made by some person for the United States, it is the United States entering upon the land and not the person himself.

Mr. LENROOT. I think possibly that might be, but it is certainly not without doubt; and if that is so, there ought not to be the slightest objection to changing the language.

Mr. FRENCH. I have no objection to that.

Mr. FERRIS. I rather think if the gentleman had before him the fifth amendment suggested by the Interior Department in its last draft this objection would not lie. The fifth amendment proposed by the Secretary reads like this:

Amend, page 3, line 8, by inserting the following sentences after the sentence ending with the word "oil."

"Any person who has acquired from the United States the oil or phosphate deposits in any such land, or the right to mine and remove the same, may reenter and occupy"—

And so forth.

Mr. LENROOT. That certainly removes any question as far as operation is concerned, but the part of the bill I am now directing my attention to relates to prospecting only, and this amendment does not. It relates to operation. I have no objection to the operaing part.

Mr. FERRIS. The genleman's idea was that the one relating to prospecting should be the same as the one relating to operation?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. I think the language the gentleman proposes is what we have tried to incorporate in the bill, and I should be very glad to agree to the amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not see any objection to it, as it certainly was not intended to exclude the Federal Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk, reading the bill for amendment, read as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act unreserved public lands of the United States in the State of Idaho which have been withdrawn or classified as phosphate or oil lands, or are valuable for phosphates or oil, shall be subject to selection by the State of Idaho under indemnity and other land grants made to it by Congress whenever such selections shall be made with a view of obtaining or passing title, with a reservation to the United States of the phosphates and oil in such lands, and of the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same.

With the following amendment recommended by the committee:

In line 6, page 1, after the word "shall," insert the words "if otherwise available under existing law."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That upon satisfactory proof of full compliance with the provisions of the laws under which selection is made and this act, the State shall be entitled to a patent to the lands selected by it, which patent shall contain a reservation to the United States of all the phosphates and oil in the land so patented, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same upon rendering compensation to the patentee for all damages that may be caused by prospecting for and removing such phosphates or oil. The reserved phosphate and oil deposits in such lands shall be disposed of only as shall be hereafter expressly directed by law.

With the following amendment recommended by the committee:

Strike out all of section 3 and insert the following:

"SEC. 3. That upon satisfactory proof of full compliance with the provisions of the laws under which selection is made and this act, the State shall, upon approval of the selection by the Secretary of the Interior, be entitled to have the lands certified to it, with a reservation to the United States of all the phosphates and oil in the land so certified, together with the right in the United States, or persons authorized by them, to prospect for, mine, and remove the same; but before any person shall be entitled to enter upon the lands certified for the purpose of prospecting, mining, or removing phosphates or oil therefrom he shall furnish, subject to approval by the Secretary of the Interior, a bond or undertaking as security for the payment of all damages to the crops and improvements on said lands by reason of such prospecting for and removal of phosphates or oil. The reserved phosphate and oil deposits in approved selections under this act shall not be subject to exploration or entry, other than by the United States, except as hereinafter authorized by Congress."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONDELL. The committee has offered an amendment to strike out section 3 and insert a new section. The amendments that the gentleman from Idaho proposes to offer are amendments to the amendment of the committee?

Mr. FRENCH. That is correct; and I offer the first amendment now.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out, on page 3, in line 1, the word "them" and insert in lieu thereof the word "it."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer my amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. LENROOT. It is.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 3, line 2, by inserting after the word "person" the following: "not employed by or acting for the United States."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if it would not be better to make it "not representing the United States." In other words, if a man employed by the United States took up an entry himself, you would not have it refer to him. You might use the words "not acting for the United States."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I ask to modify the amendment by inserting after the word "person" the words "not acting for the United States."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by inserting after the word "person," in line 2, page 3, the words "not acting for the United States."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I have several amendments, which I have sent to the desk.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to know the status of my amendment now.

The SPEAKER. The status is this: That the committee offered an amendment or a substitute to section 3, and the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin was an amendment to that amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask to have the Clerk report the amendment as agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 3, line 2, by inserting after the word "person" the following: "Not acting for the United States."

Mr. LENROOT. And the record shows that that was the amendment adopted?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. FRENCH. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendments to section 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 3, line 3, by striking out the comma after the word "prospecting," together with the words "mining or removing," and insert in lieu thereof the word "for."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 3, line 4, by striking out the word "therefrom."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 3, line 8, by striking out the words "and removal of."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 3, line 8, by inserting the following sentences after the sentence ending with the word "oil":

"Any person who has acquired from the United States the oil or phosphate deposits in any such land, or the right to mine or remove the same, may reenter and occupy so much of the surface thereof as may be required for all purposes reasonably incident to the mining and removal of the oil or phosphate therefrom and mine and remove the oil or phosphate upon payment of the damages caused thereby to the owner thereof, or upon giving a good and sufficient bond or undertaking in an action instituted in any competent court to ascertain and fix said damages: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be held to deny or abridge the right of the State of Idaho to present and have prompt consideration of applications to select lands, which have been classified as oil or phosphate lands, with a view to disproving such classification and securing a certificate without reservation."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 8, page 3, by inserting before the word "the," as a part of the sentence to which the word belongs, the following words: "And provided further, That."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment of the third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the title be amended by striking out the word "State" and inserting, after the word "selection," the words "by the State of Idaho."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended in accordance with the statement of the gentleman from Idaho.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. FRENCH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL.

By unanimous consent, Mr. LAMB, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, at the direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 28283) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and, with the accompanying report (No. 1348), ordered printed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois reserves all points of order.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. MCCOY, for three days, on account of important business.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH, for one week, on account of important business.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, this being unanimous-consent day, the Chair will lay before the House the bill (H. R. 26680) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take the bill from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not prefer that request at this time, but will prefer a request to have the bill printed with the Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Very well. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed with the Senate amendments properly numbered, and I shall make the other request later.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to have the bill printed with the Senate amendments thereto properly numbered. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

HOMESTEADERS ON COEUR D'ALENE RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was H. J. Res. 326, providing for extending provisions of the act authorizing extension of payments to homesteaders on the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, Idaho.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of an act of Congress approved April 15, 1912, authorizing the extension of time within which to make payments of certain moneys by homestead entrymen upon the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, in the State of Idaho, be extended and held to apply to payments that became due prior to the passage of the act under the same conditions that apply to payments becoming due subsequent to the passage of the law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will ask how many entrymen would be affected by this proposition?

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, the department reports about 96, and 96, I think, is the accurate figure.

Mr. MANN. Are these people still on the land, or where are they? Have they lost their rights?

Mr. FRENCH. Of course they have lost their rights unless this resolution be passed, and I would say that these entrymen forfeited their rights prior to the passage of the act. I assume a large number of them are living upon their lands, because the demand has been made or the request has been taken up with me that the legislation be extended. I am also advised that the department has not taken adverse action in the way of canceling the entry in any case.

Mr. MANN. Nobody else has made application?

Mr. FRENCH. I would say with respect to that, that in the original bill we have this language:

That nothing herein contained shall affect any valid adverse claim initiated prior to the passage of this act.

The question has been raised whether or not the resolution is broad enough to prevent a conflict on that score, and this amendment has been suggested, "that nothing herein contained shall affect any valid adverse claim initiated prior to the passage of this resolution." That amendment I propose to offer at the proper time, because I desire, of course, to head off any difficulty in that regard.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman for what reason that provision was not put in when the bill was considered by the committee? I was not present.

Mr. FRENCH. The provision is in the act itself, and as I drafted the resolution I did not think it necessary to restate it in the resolution, and apparently the department did not think it necessary, and the matter was not raised in the committee, and I assume no member of the committee thought it was necessary, but I see there is that possibility.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. One further question. These acts that are passed granting extensions of time, I supposed always extended the time as to any entry subject to the provisions which the gentleman now proposes, and how does it happen there were 96 who did not come under the provisions of the act passed at the last session?

Mr. FRENCH. Because they had forfeited their entries prior to the passage of the law.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Well, did not the law provide——

Mr. FRENCH. No; the law did not reach back and take care of the 96.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. This is one time when the gentleman from Idaho was not as careful of his constituents as he usually is.

Mr. FRENCH. I overlooked a point that time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This resolution is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I have this amendment to offer, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. To which section?

Mr. FRENCH. There is only one section.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of an act of Congress approved April 15, 1912, authorizing the extension of time within which to make payments of certain moneys by homestead entrymen upon the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, in the State of Idaho, be extended and held to apply to payments that became due prior to the passage of the act under the same conditions that apply to payments becoming due subsequent to the passage of the law.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of line 10 the following: "That nothing herein contained shall affect any valid adverse claim initiated prior to the passage of this resolution."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FRENCH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

DONATION OF OLD GOVERNMENT DOCUMENTS TO THE OLD NEWBURY HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was H. J. Res. 369, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to give certain old Government documents to the Old Newbury Historical Society, of Newburyport, Mass.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to give to the Old Newbury Historical Society, of Newburyport, Mass., any or all documents in the customhouse building at Newburyport, Mass., which are of no further value to the United States Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FERRIS). Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This resolution is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, this resolution being on the Union Calendar I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the resolution simply proposes to give the historical society of that town some old documents which would be destroyed otherwise. There can be no possible objection to it.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SLAYDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Curtiss, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States, had further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives, had asked a further conference with the House, and had appointed Mr. LODGE, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. PERCY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

REPEALING CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF THE INDIAN APPROPRIATION ACT OF JUNE 30, 1907.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3952) for the purpose of repealing so much of an act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indians located in Kansas City, Kans., providing for the sale of a tract of land located in Kansas City, Kans., reserved for a public burial ground under a treaty made and concluded with the Wyandotte Tribe of Indians on the 31st day of January, 1855, said section of said act relating to the sale of said land be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of an act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, approved June 21, 1906, providing for the sale of a tract of land located in Kansas City, Kans., reserved for a public burial ground under a treaty made and concluded with the Wyandotte Tribe of Indians on the 31st day of January, 1855 (said section of said act relating to the sale of said land), be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to whoever has this bill in charge, I would suggest that they examine the law which it is proposed to repeal, because I am quite confident that no one on earth, much less in heaven, can tell from this bill and an examination of the original law what is intended to be repealed.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman that the understanding of the committee was that the provision originally was contained in an annual appropriation bill. That seems to be the understanding of the persons who drew the bill.

Mr. MANN. The bill was not drawn here and probably not drawn by anybody who is a Member of the other body, and the bill is very much like the title. The title itself repeals the law. Of course, it is not a proper title, and the bill is drawn just as loosely. I examined the original act, and I defy, in my judgment, anyone to state what is repealed by this bill if it becomes a law.

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman will see the committee recommends a change of the title. Of course the gentleman understands what is intended.

Mr. MANN. I see the title is amended. The committee examined the title and probably did not examine the law which is proposed to be repealed. I think the gentleman ought to ask to pass this bill over and put in proper shape whatever is intended to be done.

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. TAGGART. I suggest that the amendment to the title, as suggested by the Committee on Indian Affairs, might possibly clear up any doubt as to what was intended to be repealed. The suggestion of the amendment is to the title——

Mr. MANN. I have read the suggestion.

Mr. TAGGART. It reads:

An act repealing the provision of the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, authorizing the sale of a tract of land reserved for a burial ground for the Wyandotte Tribe of Indians, in Kansas City, Kans.

It means that portion of the appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. I have read the report and the original act. The original act contained a lot of matters relating to the sale of property which I am sure it is not the desire of the gentleman to repeal. I do not think anyone can tell what is repealed by this provision.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. FERRIS. This matter has been hawked around in courts for a great many years, and I rather think this is a solution of a very troublesome proposition, so far as Congress, the department, and everybody connected with it are concerned. I want to ask the gentleman if he would not let us go into the committee——

Mr. MANN. It would be a very easy matter to insert by way of amendment, which could be prepared, the language that should be repealed. There is no language inserted here. So much of an act providing for a tract of land is repealed. Now, there were a great many provisions in the original act providing for the sale of this land which I think it is not intended to repeal, and some of them, I think, ought not to be repealed. Will the gentleman pass it over and prepare an amendment covering the language which it is proposed to repeal, so that he can show what you want to repeal?

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to pass the bill over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to pass the bill over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NEW DIVISION OF WESTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF TEXAS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 24194) "to create a new division of the western judicial district of Texas, and to provide for terms of court at Pecos, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes."

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Reeves, Ward, Martin, Reagan, Winkler, Ector, Gaines, Andrews, Upton, Midland, Loving, Jeff Davis, and Crane shall constitute a division of the western judicial district of Texas.

SEC. 2. That terms of the district court of the United States for the said western district of Texas shall be held twice in each year at the city of Pecos, in Reeves County, and that, until otherwise provided by law, the judge of said court shall fix the times at which said court shall be held at Pecos, of which he shall make application and give due notices.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "notice," insert:

"Provided, however, That suitable rooms and accommodations shall be furnished for the holding of said court and for the use of the officers of said court at Pecos, free of expense to the Government of the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. I reserve the right to object. I would like to know how large this district is, and how large the area is which it is proposed to include in this subdistrict.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. You mean the whole judicial district?

Mr. MONDELL. What is the area of this subdivision?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. It comprises 13 counties, the smallest of which are 30 miles square, and some of them are larger, returnable to this division of the court mentioned in this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. And within which there is now no provision for holding court?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. No court.

Mr. MONDELL. How large a population is there, approximately?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. About 25,000. There is no court within 200 miles of this proposed site.

Mr. MONDELL. No court within 200 miles?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if there is no public building at this place now.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. There is no public building there now.

Mr. FOSTER. How large a city is Pecos?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. It is a city of about 2,000 people.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose this means that in the course of a little time a public building will be asked for there?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I suppose in the course of events it may be so, but there is nothing pending to that effect at the present time. The gentleman will note that the Committee on the Judiciary requires that quarters be furnished for this court without expense to the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand; but that does not provide any definite time?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. No.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman would not be willing to put in an amendment to furnish quarters for a definite length of time?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I think not. I do not think this provision should be put in. It was already in the bill, but rather than raise a row about it I thought we would let it go through.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it usual to put on bills of this kind, establishing a court, a provision that there shall be suitable offices or quarters for holding the court when it is established?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I was told by some member of the committee that was so, but I know of some bills which passed without that provision.

Mr. GARNER. And I might suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] that in a case like this such a provision ought not to be carried in the bill. It will be a hardship on these people to furnish these quarters. This court is being established because it is a hardship for them now to be without one and be compelled to travel from 200 to 500 miles to attend Federal court. And now, because they ought to be relieved of this burden, and because it is a rural population, it is a hardship to establish quarters for the purpose of holding a court, and Congress ought not to demand such an unreasonable proposition.

Mr. FOSTER. I may say that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] may be right on that proposition. If it is necessary to establish a court, the Government ought to furnish the necessary accommodations. But I notice there is a provision here that suitable rooms and accommodations shall be furnished free of charge to the Government, and I want to know how long it will last?

The reason the gentleman from Texas accepted that is because his people are suffering by reason of the fact that they have to travel so far to attend a Federal court, and he is willing to go to this extra expense in order to relieve the situation.

Mr. MANN. What expense is there in allowing a Federal court to use a building?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I am making no objection.

Mr. MANN. That has been inserted in these bills for many years.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not going to object. The only thing I was driving at is that possibly in 10 years from now they will not want to hold this court without a public building——

Mr. MANN. In less than 10 years from now they will erect a public building there.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman did not wait until I had finished my sentence. I was saying that before that time they would be asking a public building, and one of the reasons will be that they are holding United States court there.

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly; that is one of the ways of getting a public building.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That is a legitimate way.

Mr. FOSTER. I guess it is legitimate; yes. I am not complaining of that.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I suppose the gentleman does not want to pledge here that he will never ask for a public building.

Mr. FOSTER. No; I would not ask the gentleman to do such a thing as that. The only thing in my mind was, if the accommodations are to be furnished in that particular locality, whether or not there should be a definite time fixed in which they should be furnished. It should not be held out as an excuse for urging the necessity of an appropriation.

Mr. MANN. It is just the other way, I will say to my colleague. They are required to furnish these quarters.

Mr. FOSTER. But there is no definite time set.

Mr. MANN. As long as the court remains there.

Mr. FOSTER. Under this provision I do not understand they would have to furnish it next year.

Mr. MANN. Oh, certainly. They have to furnish these quarters free as long as the court is maintained there, until the Government provides a Government building.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. It would be a question for the Government to determine hereafter.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand; but there is no provision saying that "so long as the court is held at that place," and so forth.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. That is what it means.

Mr. MANN. That is the construction of the language. It has been inserted in the bills all these recent years, partly to keep out the claims for public buildings.

Mr. FOSTER. I will ask my colleague, with all his experience in this House, whether that has succeeded in keeping out appropriations for public buildings? Has it not been more often a claim for a public building?

Mr. MANN. This provision does not make a claim for a public building.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH] asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk again read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Reeves, Ward, Martin, Reagan, Winkler, Ector, Gaines, Andrews, Upton, Midland, Loving, Jeff Davis, and Crane shall constitute a division of the western judicial district of Texas.

SEC. 2. That terms of the district court of the United States for the said western district of Texas shall be held twice in each year at the city of Pecos, in Reeves County, and that, until otherwise provided by law, the judge of said court shall fix the times at which said court shall be held at Pecos, of which he shall make application and give due notice.

With a committee amendment:

Amend by adding, after the word "notice," in line 3, page 2, the following:

"Provided, however, That suitable rooms and accommodations shall be furnished for the holding of said court and for the use of the officers of said court at Pecos, free of expense to the Government of the United States."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. On page 2, line 2, just what is meant by the statement, "of which he shall make application and give due notice"? What does the language mean there—"make application"?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I am glad the gentleman called attention to that. I think that should be "proclamation."

Mr. MANN. "Make proclamation and give due notice?"

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Yes.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that that amendment be made; that the word "application" be stricken out and the word "proclamation" be inserted.

The SPEAKER. Is that an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. MANN. No.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. That is an amendment to the original bill.

The SPEAKER. The vote will be taken first on the committee amendment The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the other amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 2, strike out the word "application" and insert in lieu thereof the word "proclamation."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "To create a new division in the western judicial district of Texas and to provide for terms of court at Pecos, Tex., and for other purposes."

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. This ends the Unanimous Consent Calendar. When the House adjourned——

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, does this complete the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It does. There were two or three more bills on the calendar, but they have not been on long enough.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, the next bill on the calendar was placed there on the 15th of January.

Mr. MANN. It was not reported into the House until the 16th.

Mr. GARNER. Is it exclusive of the day it is placed on the calendar?

The SPEAKER. You can not count both the day it was put on and to-day.

THE ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION.

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned two weeks ago to-day the unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 21532) to incorporate the Rockefeller Foundation. A motion had been made to suspend the rules and pass the bill, a second had been ordered, and the debate had been had. The House voted on it, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] raised the point of no quorum, whereupon the House adjourned. So the question now is on suspending the rules and passing that bill.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, before putting that motion, I ask unanimous consent to offer at this time an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] asks unanimous consent to offer at this time an amendment. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS]?

Mr. MANN. I take it that the gentleman is asking unanimous consent to modify his motion to suspend the rules, so that it will include this amendment. It could not be acted upon in any other way.

Mr. PETERS. That is my request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is technically correct. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to modify his motion by including the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Let the amendment be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, page 8, after line 21, as a separate section:

"SEC. 14. That said corporation shall not have power to buy, sell, rent, lease, own, hold, or maintain any real estate or any interest in any real estate for the purpose of deriving profit therefrom except as herein otherwise expressly provided: Provided, That said corporation shall have power to loan its funds upon real estate securities and to acquire such real estate in collection of debts due to it: Provided further, That said corporation shall have power to receive donations, grants, gifts, and devices of real estate and interests in real estate: And provided further, That any real estate or any interest in any real estate that shall be acquired or received by said corporation in compliance with the provisions of this act shall within four years after the same is so acquired or received be sold, and in the event it shall not be so sold said real estate or interest in real estate shall escheat to the State or Territory in which it is situated."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] asks unanimous consent at this stage of the proceedings to modify the bill in the manner which has been read. Is there objection?

[Mr. SHACKLEFORD addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it occurs to me that it is hardly fair to ask to suspend the rules on a particular bill and then permit an individual amendment. I should like the chance to amend this bill in a good many particulars. I want to be frank and say that I am opposed to a national incorporation anyway. I think we ought not to give special charters; but particularly I would like to see an amendment prohibiting exemption from taxation. I know no reason why this fund should be exempt from taxation. What we are asked now is to enable an individual to amend the bill without giving the rest of us a chance to do so. If the gentleman is willing to throw his bill open to amendment and let the House have a chance at it, that is another proposition.

The SPEAKER. That can not be done under a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. PETERS. It is impossible to throw the bill open to amendment at this stage of the proceedings under the procedure of the House. If the gentleman from Kentucky has any specific amendment which he wishes to suggest, I would be glad to consider it.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will make it specific. I would like an amendment which would prevent the exemption from taxation from Federal or other taxes.

Mr. PETERS. By whom?

Mr. SHERLEY. I would have this fund subject to taxation just as the fund of a private individual would be subject to taxation.

Mr. CANNON. This is taxable in all the States.

Mr. SHERLEY. Not where church property would be exempt, according to the statement of the gentleman a few moments ago.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire for his own information, has the gentleman from Kentucky any amendment?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. Supposing under the suspension of the rules that there would be no opportunity to amend, I could not be expected to have.

The SPEAKER. There can not be any amendment except by unanimous consent.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand that there can not.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the bill itself per se does not operate to relieve this property from taxation. It is taxable by the State, and it is only exempt in the District of Columbia and the Territories. It is taxable in all the States pursuant to the laws of the States.

Mr. MANN. Why not strike out section 11 entirely?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I suggest striking out section 11. The gentleman wanted a specific amendment, and I propose that one.

Mr. PETERS. I will accept it and will include it in my motion.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman appreciates that I am still opposed to his bill.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Kentucky state what it is he wants.

Mr. SHERLEY. To strike out section 11.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DIES. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects, and the question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD demanded a division.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois raises the point of no quorum. The Chair will count.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. DIES. I renew the point of no quorum.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that no quorum is present, as that is the easiest way to get the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Illinois make the point that no quorum is present, and the Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and five gentlemen present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PETERS) there were 49 ayes and 48 noes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. This question is being taken on the motion to adjourn. All those in favor will answer "aye" and those opposed will answer "no," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 36, nays 179, answered "present" 9, not voting 159, as follows:

So, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. DYER.

Mr. COLLIER with Mr. HAUGEN.

Mr. FERRIS with Mr. HENRY of Connecticut.

Mr. FINLEY with Mr. KNOWLAND.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE with Mr. MCKENZIE.

Mr. DENVER with Mr. MONDELL.

Mr. HARRISON of New York with Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. STANLEY with Mr. ANTHONY.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina with Mr. PRAY.

Mr. RAINEY with Mr. RODENBERG.

Mr. UNDERWOOD with Mr. OLMSTED.

Mr. LEWIS with Mr. SLEMP.

Mr. SHARP with Mr. HARTMAN.

Mr. STEDMAN with Mr. MCCREARY.

Mr. WATKINS with Mr. WILSON of Illinois.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, may I withdraw my vote? I voted "aye," but, being paired, I feel obliged to withdraw that vote and answer "present."

The name of Mr. BUTLER was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion is unnecessary and out of order.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, before that I would like to ask unanimous consent to call up a bill and agree to a Senate amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman from Alabama addressed the Chair and was recognized. Now, can the gentleman from New York take the gentleman off his feet by a motion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York can do a thing which is equivalent to that. The gentleman from Alabama had a right to make his motion, but the gentleman from New York had a right to make a preferential motion to adjourn, so the Chair shortened it a little——

Mr. HOBSON. I will make my motion, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to adjourn.

Mr. HOBSON. I have the floor, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. But I object to any consent being given to make any motion.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Alabama was trying to make a motion before the gentleman from New York got up.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have already made the motion to adjourn, which is a preferential motion.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and take up for consideration the bill H. R. 1309——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to adjourn.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, before that I would like to ask unanimous consent to agree to a Senate amendment on a bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I withhold my motion for that purpose, and for that purpose only.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks if the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] makes a motion to adjourn and withdraws it, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] has the floor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I said I would withhold it for that purpose and no other.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withholds it for that purpose. Now, what does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] want?

Mr. RUSSELL. I want to ask unanimous consent to call up the House bill and agree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I reserve the right to object. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I object.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] made a preferential motion.

Mr. HOBSON. How does he know it has the highest preference?

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows it, even if the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] does not. [Laughter.] A motion to adjourn is the highest motion that can be made in the House.

Mr. HOBSON. But it can not interrupt a sentence that is being spoken.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had finished his sentence. He had moved to suspend the rules, and the gentleman from New York made a motion to adjourn.

Mr. HOBSON. And pass this bill. That is all I desire to see in the RECORD, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no desire to stand in the way of the gentleman doing that.

Mr. HOBSON. I move that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 1309.

The SPEAKER. That is the motion the gentleman made a short time ago, and the Chair recognized him for that purpose, and then the Chair recognized the gentleman from New York to move to adjourn.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday, January 21, 1913, at 12 o'clock m.

THE MESA VERDE.

Mr. CURTIS. From the Committee on Indian Affairs I desire to make a favorable report, and because of the importance of the case I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill. I report back favorably from that committee, without amendment, the bill (S. 5678) to ratify an agreement with the Weeminuchi (or Wiminuche), and hereafter referred to as the Wiminuche Band of Southern Ute Indians in Colorado, for the relinquishment to the United States of their rights to occupancy of the tract of land known as the Mesa Verde; and I submit a report (No. 1133) thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the letters of the Secretary of the Interior recommending the passage of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 21, 1912.

Hon. ROBERT J. GAMBLE,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

SIR: In the Indian appropriation act approved March 3, 1903 (32 Stat. L., 998), it is provided:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to negotiate with the Weeminuchi Ute Tribe of Indians for the relinquishment of their right of occupancy to the United States to the tract of land known as the Mesa Verde, a part of the reservation of said tribe, situate in the county of Montezuma, in the State of Colorado, the said tract to include and cover the ruins and prehistoric remains situate therein. And the Secretary of the Interior shall report to the next session of Congress the terms and conditions upon which the said tribe of Indians will relinquish to the United States their right of occupancy to said tract of land."

By departmental letter of March 18, 1903, Joseph O. Smith, United States Indian agent in charge of the Southern Ute Agency, Colo., was designated to conduct negotiations with the Indians. Agent Smith held a council with the Weeminuche Band of Southern Ute Indians in the fall of 1903, but the Indians, through their chiefs, refused to enter into any agreement for the cession of that part of their reservation known as the Mesa Verde.

This question was taken up with the Indians in council in June and August, 1904, by William M. Peterson, superintendent in charge of the Fort Lewis School, Colorado, but the Indians were still obdurate and refused to consider an agreement to relinquish any of their reservation.

This question was presented further to them by Supt. U. L. Clardy, in charge of the Navajo Springs Reservation, in the summer of 1910, at which time, as is shown by the records, the matter was thoroughly gone into with the Indians, who absolutely refused to come to any terms.

Under departmental instructions of April 20, 1911, this question was again taken up with the Indians by F. H. Abbott, Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and James McLaughlin, United States Indian inspector.

These officers arrived at the Navajo Springs Indian Agency, Colo., on May 4, 1911, and on the following day held a council with the Indians and carefully explained to them what was wanted. The Indians were reluctant to entertain any proposition to relinquish their lands, and it was suggested to them that a committee of their leading men be appointed to accompany Mr. Abbott and Inspector McLaughlin to Mesa Verde, that these officers might point out to them the land wanted and that offered in exchange. These officers, accompanied by the Indian committee, visited the Mesa Verde National Park, as created by the act approved June 29, 1906 (34 Stats., 616), and ascertained that the park did not contain important prehistoric ruins, these being situated within the Southern Ute Reservation in township 34 north, range 15 west, adjoining the national park, the area embracing the ruins being about 5¼ miles in length, extending south into the Indian reservation about 3¼ miles from its northern boundary line.

After the committee of the tribal council had made its report to the council, negotiations with the Indians were resumed and an agreement reached whereby they agreed to accept in exchange for the land in the reservation containing historic ruins two certain tracts of land bordering on their reservation, one of which is within the present Mesa Verde National Park, containing approximately 7,840 acres, and the other situated in what is known as the Ute Mountain district, containing approximately 19,520 acres, a total of 27,360.

It is pointed out by Messrs. Abbott and McLaughlin that while the agreement provides for giving the Indians from the public domain about 2 acres for 1 relinquished, yet they call attention to the fact that the Ute Mountain tract is of little value, being rough and mountainous and largely devoid of vegetation, and say that its proximity, however, to the Navajo Springs superintendency, adjacent to the present habitations of the Indians, and upon which their stock now range, influenced them largely in assenting to the exchange as concluded.

Reports show that the total number of male adult members of the Weeminuchi Band of Southern Ute Indians on the rolls of the Navajo Springs Agency is about 108; and a certificate of the superintendent in charge of these Indians, dated Navajo Springs, Colo., May 10, 1911, shows that the 65 names attached to the agreement constitute a majority of the adult members of the band and practically all the male adults residing on the reservation.

In order that the territory wanted in exchange by the Indians may be available for them if the agreement should be ratified, the following-described lands were temporarily withdrawn from all forms of settlement, entry, sale, or other disposition, subject to any valid existing rights of any persons, to wit:

The W. ½ of sec. 4, sec. 5, fractional NW. ¼ of sec. 9, fractional sec. 8, T. 34 N., R. 16 W.; sec. 32 and W. ½ of sec. 33, T. 35 N., R. 16 W.; secs. 5 and 6 and fractional secs. 7 and 8, T. 34 N., R. 17 W.; secs. 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 and fractional secs. 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, T. 34 N., R. 18 W.; secs. 19, 20, 29, 30, 31, and 32, T. 35 N., R. 17 W.; and secs. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36, T. 35 N., R. 18 W., of the New Mexico principal meridian; all of which lands are situate north of the northern boundary line of the Southern Ute Indian Reservation and in Montezuma County, Colo.

In the discussions had with the Indians, both at the council proceedings and on the grounds themselves, when the committee appointed by the council in conjunction with Inspector McLaughlin and Assistant Commissioner Abbott visited the scenes of the prehistoric ruins, it was understood that "the Balcony House," one of the most important ruins, was to be included in the lands which the Indians agreed to surrender. The Indians themselves understood this and so expressed themselves to the representatives of the Government in the council assembled. A subsequent survey, however, made under the direction of the Geological Survey, discloses that "the Balcony House" is situated just below the south line of the proposed addition to the park, as defined in the agreement.

It becomes necessary, therefore, in order to take in these ruins, which the Indians understood were included in the description given in their agreement, to slightly modify the description as given by extending the southern boundary 30 chains farther south. The additional area included thereby in the addition to the park embraces approximately 1,320 acres, for which it is proposed to surrender to the Indians as an addition to their reservation all of secs. 26 and 27 and the SE. ¼ of sec. 28, T. 35 N., R. 16 W., New Mexico principal meridian, now a part of the Mesa Verde National Park, but in which no ruins of importance exist, 1,440 acres.

After the agreement hereinbefore mentioned was entered into with the Indians and filed with the department, Ralph W. Berry, assistant topographer, and R. B. Marshall, chief geographer, both of the Geological Survey, who during the summer of 1911 had made an inspection of the topographic survey in the park vicinity, suggested that the western, northern, and eastern boundary lines of the park be changed as indicated on the map inclosed and shown by the draft of bill, and Mr. Marshall, in letter of January 23, 1912, copy herewith, gives the reasons why, in his judgment, these changes should be made, and recommends that the boundary lines be amended accordingly.

If these changes in said boundary lines are made, secs. 36, 25, 26, 27, and the SE. ¼ sec. 28, T. 35 N., R. 16 W.; also the SE. ¼ sec. 6, SE ¼ sec. 9, and the NE. ¼ sec. 16, T. 35 N., R. 14 W., will be eliminated, and the W. ½ sec. 6 and the NW. ¼ of fractional sec. 7 (unsurveyed), T. 34 N., R. 16 W., "north of the Ute boundary," which it was originally intended to give the Indians in the exchange, will remain a part of the park.

And lands described as follows, not within the park, will be included therein:

Sec. 19, W. ½ sec. 20, the NE. ¼ sec. 20, the S. ½ sec. 14, T. 35 N., R. 15 W., the NW. ¼ sec. 7, the N. ½ sec. 5, the NE. ¼ sec. 22, T. 35 N., R. 14 W., and all land east of the eastern boundary of the park, from a point on the east bank of the Mancos River directly east of the northeast corner of the NW. ¼ sec. 26, T. 35 N., R. 14 W., south along the east bank of said river to a point where said river intersects the northern boundary of the Southern Ute Indian Reservation.

Originally it was intended that the SE. ¼ of sec. 28, secs. 25, 26, 27, and 30,, T. 35 N., R. 16 W., should be retained in the park, but on the recommendation of Mr. Marshall the west line was changed, as indicated on the map and in the draft of bill, and it is now proposed to give these lands to the Indians in addition to those covered by the agreement; also sec. 36, T. 35 N., R. 18 W. This is a school section, as is also sec. 36, T. 35 N., R. 16 W., but the records of the General Land Office show that the State has selected other lands in lieu of them.

Provision has also been made in the draft of bill for extinguishing the jurisdiction of the department over prehistoric ruins within what is known as the Five Mile Strip on lands adjacent to the eastern, western, and northern boundaries of the park.

The inclosed map shows the boundary of the Mesa Verde National Park as originally established, the proposed new boundary, the northern boundary of the Southern Ute Indian Reservation, the boundary of the tract proposed to be relinquished by the Indians, together with the enlargement thereof necessary to include the "Balcony House" and the lands within the Mesa Verde National Park and on the public domain which it is proposed to give the Indians in exchange.

In the agreement the lands proposed to be ceded to the Government by the Indians and part of the lands to be given the Indians by the Government in exchange are incorrectly described, as the agreement recites that they are in township 34½ north. The proper description of these lands is township 34 north, with the correct range, and "south of the Ute boundary," or north thereof, as the case may be, and in the body of the proposed act this description has been followed so far as said township is concerned.

By the agreement, as modified, 14,520 acres within the reservation, containing important ruins, will be acquired by the United States, for which the Indians will receive in exchange 30,240 acres. The department is satisfied that the Indians thoroughly understand the conditions, and they have expressed a willingness, practically unanimous, to surrender the lands wanted on the terms set forth in their agreement.

Accordingly a bill has been prepared and is transmitted herewith, accepting and ratifying the agreement of May 10, 1911, as modified, in order to take in certain lands containing important ruins, which the Indians understood they were giving up and which they agreed to surrender.

A copy of the joint report of Inspector McLaughlin and Assistant Commissioner Abbott is inclosed herewith for your information.

The department would be pleased to see the suggested legislation given favorable consideration by your committee and the Congress.

Very respectfully,

SAMUEL ADAMS, Acting Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, July 19, 1912.

MY DEAR SENATOR: My attention has been directed to the bill (S. 5678) pending before your committee in connection with the Mesa Verde National Park, upon which it is desirable to secure action at this session of Congress if practicable. It appears that the present limits of the Mesa Verde Park do not include some of the more important ruins and points of interest, and that negotiations have been had with the Indians to provide for an exchange of lands by which the park can be appropriately extended. It is desirable that the transaction should be perfected as promptly as practicable, and for this purpose the passage of the pending bill is necessary.

Yours, very truly, WALTER L. FISHER, Secretary.

Hon. ROBERT J. GAMBLE,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
United States Senate.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 35) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 12th day of February, 1913, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to the requirements of the Constitution and laws relating to the election of President and Vice President of the United States, and the President of the Senate pro tempore shall be their presiding officer; that two tellers shall be previously appointed on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the President of the Senate pro tempore, all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes, which certificates and papers shall be opened, presented, and acted upon in the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the letter A; and said tellers, having then read the same in the presence and hearing of the two Houses, shall make a list of the votes as they shall appear from the said certificates; and the votes having been ascertained and counted in the manner and according to the rules by law provided, the result of the same shall be delivered to the President of the Senate pro tempore, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote, which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons, if any, elected President and Vice President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHERS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 437), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay for two stenographers to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, at $1,200 each per annum, from January 11 and January 20, 1913, respectively, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until the expiration of the present Congress.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senate document room report that they have but one copy left of House bill 19115, the omnibus claims bill, and that there are frequent demands for it by parties interested. I ask that an order be made for printing 200 additional copies to supply the demand.

There being no objection, the order was agreed to, and it was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That 200 additional copies of the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the other day I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the omnibus claims bill was passed. I should be glad to have that motion considered now and to have the Senate consider the amendment which I have to offer to the bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I have no objection to that course. On the part of the committee I practically agreed to it, with the understanding that it was not to open the door for a rediscussion of the bill and new amendments, but simply to give the Senator from Nevada an opportunity to be heard regarding a class of cases he wished to have incorporated in the bill. I raise no objection and agree that that may be done.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Nevada to the fact that the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] gave notice, which has appeared on the calendar for some days, that he would desire to address the Senate to-day at the close of the routine morning business.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then I will bring up the matter after the Senator from New York has concluded his remarks. I ask that the order of reconsideration be entered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been entered.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Yesterday there was passed by the Senate the bill (H. R. 18787) relating to the limitation of the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon a public work of the United States and of the District of Columbia, and of all persons employed in constructing, maintaining, or improving a river or harbor of the United States and of the District of Columbia. There were very few in the Senate at the time the bill was passed. I desire to make a motion at this time to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed and to allow that motion to remain until at least after the Senator from New York has completed his remarks or until the Senator reporting the bill is present in the Senate. So I ask that the bill may be held in abeyance until I can call up the motion and have it acted upon at a future time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion for reconsideration will be entered.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE PHILIPPINE COMMISSION (H. DOC. NO. 1293).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Philippines:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the Thirteenth Annual Report of the Philippine Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1912, together with the reports of the Governor General and the secretaries of the four executive departments of the Philippine government for the same period.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 21, 1913.

INDIANS OCCUPYING RAILROAD LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5674) for the relief of Indians occupying railroad lands.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. GAMBLE, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. ASHURST conferees on the part of the Senate.

BUREAU OF MINES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17260) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish in the Department of the Interior a Bureau of Mines," approved May 16, 1910, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. TILLMAN conferees on the part of the Senate.

PANAMA CANAL TOLLS.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, in the late days of last summer, after nearly nine months of continuous session, Congress enacted, in the bill to provide for the administration of the Panama Canal, a provision making a discrimination between the tolls to be charged upon foreign vessels and the tolls to be charged upon American vessels engaged in coastwise trade. We all must realize, as we look back, that when that provision was adopted the Members of both Houses were much exhausted; our minds were not working with their full vigor; we were weary physically and mentally. Such discussion as there was was to empty seats. In neither House of Congress, during the period that this provision was under discussion, could there be found more than a scant dozen or two of Members. The provision has been the cause of great regret to a multitude of our fellow citizens, whose good opinion we all desire and whose leadership of opinion in the country makes their approval of the course of our Congress an important element in maintaining that confidence in government which is so essential to its success. The provision has caused a painful impression throughout the world that the United States has departed from its often-announced rule of equality of opportunity in the use of the Panama Canal, and is seeking a special advantage for itself in what is believed to be a violation of the obligations of a treaty. Mr. President, that opinion of the civilized world is something which we may not lightly disregard. "A decent respect to the opinions of mankind" was one of the motives stated for the people of these colonies in the great Declaration of American Independence.

The effect of the provision has thus been doubly unfortunate, and I ask the Senate to listen to me while I endeavor to state the situation in which we find ourselves; to state the case which is made against the action that we have taken, in order that I may present to the Senate the question whether we should not either submit to an impartial tribunal the question whether we are right; so that if we are right, we may be vindicated in the eyes of all the world, or whether we should not, by a repeal of the provision, retire from the position which we have taken.

In the year 1850, Mr. President, there were two great powers in possession of the North American Continent to the north of the Rio Grande. The United States had but just come to its full stature. By the Webster-Ashburton treaty of 1842 our northeastern boundary had been settled, leaving to Great Britain that tremendous stretch of seacoast including Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Labrador, and the shores of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, now forming the Province of Quebec. In 1846 the Oregon boundary had been settled, assuring to the United States a title to that vast region which now constitutes the States of Washington, Oregon, and Idaho. In 1848 the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo had given to us that great empire wrested from Mexico as a result of the Mexican War, which now spreads along the coast of the Pacific as the State of California and the great region between California and Texas.

Inspired by the manifest requirements of this new empire, the United States turned its attention to the possibility of realizing the dream of centuries and connecting its two coasts—its old coast upon the Atlantic and its new coast upon the Pacific—by a ship canal through the Isthmus; but when it turned its attention in that direction it found the other empire holding the place of advantage. Great Britain had also her coast upon the Atlantic and her coast upon the Pacific, to be joined by a canal. Further than that, Great Britain was a Caribbean power. She had Bermuda and the Bahamas; she had Jamaica and Trinidad; she had the Windward Islands and the Leeward Islands; she had British Guiana and British Honduras; she had, moreover, a protectorate over the Mosquito coast, a great stretch of territory upon the eastern shore of Central America which included the river San Juan and the valley and harbor of San Juan de Nicaragua, or Greytown. All men's minds then were concentrated upon the Nicaragua Canal route, as they were until after the treaty of 1901 was made.

And thus when the United States turned its attention toward joining these two coasts by a canal through the Isthmus it found Great Britain in possession of the eastern end of the route which men generally believed would be the most available route for the canal. Accordingly, the United States sought a treaty with Great Britain by which Great Britain should renounce the advantage which she had and admit the United States to equal participation with her in the control and the protection of a canal across the Isthmus. From that came the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

Let me repeat that this treaty was sought not by England but by the United States. Mr. Clayton, who was Secretary of State at the time, sent our minister to France, Mr. Rives, to London for the purpose of urging upon Lord Palmerston the making of the treaty. The treaty was made by Great Britain as a concession to the urgent demands of the United States.

I should have said, in speaking about the urgency with which the United States sought the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, that there were two treaties made with Nicaragua, one by Mr. Heis and one by Mr. Squier, both representatives of the United States. Each gave, so far as Nicaragua could, great powers to the United States in regard to the construction of a canal, but they were made without authorization from the United States, and they were not approved by the Government of the United States and were never sent to the Senate. Mr. Clayton, however, held those treaties in abeyance as a means of inducing Great Britain to enter into the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. He held them practically as a whip over the British negotiators, and having accomplished the purpose they were thrown into the waste basket.

By that treaty Great Britain agreed with the United States that neither Government should "ever obtain or maintain for itself any exclusive control over the ship canal"; that neither would "make use of any protection" which either afforded to a canal "or any alliance which either" might have "with any State or people for the purpose of erecting or maintaining any fortifications, or of occupying, fortifying, or colonizing Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito coast, or any part of Central America, or of assuming or exercising dominion over the same," and that neither would "take advantage of any intimacy, or use any alliance, connection, or influence that either" might "possess with any State or Government through whose territory the said canal may pass, for the purpose of acquiring or holding, directly or indirectly, for the citizens or subjects of the one, any rights or advantages in regard to commerce or navigation through the said canal which shall not be offered on the same terms to the citizens or subjects of the other."

You will observe, Mr. President, that under these provisions the United States gave up nothing that it then had. Its obligations were entirely looking to the future; and Great Britain gave up its rights under the protectorate over the Mosquito coast, gave up its rights to what was supposed to be the eastern terminus of the canal. And, let me say without recurring to it again, under this treaty, after much discussion which ensued as to the meaning of its terms, Great Britain did surrender her rights to the Mosquito coast, so that the position of the United States and Great Britain became a position of absolute equality. Under this treaty also both parties agreed that each should "enter into treaty stipulations with such of the Central American States as they" might "deem advisable for the purpose"—I now quote the words of the treaty—"for the purpose of more effectually carrying out the great design of this convention, namely, that of constructing and maintaining the said canal as a ship communication between the two oceans for the benefit of mankind, on equal terms to all, and of protecting the same."

That declaration, Mr. President, is the cornerstone of the rights of the United States upon the Isthmus of Panama, rights having their origin in a solemn declaration that there should be constructed and maintained a ship canal "between the two oceans for the benefit of mankind, on equal terms to all."

In the eighth article of that treaty the parties agreed:

> The Governments of the United States and Great Britain having not only desired, in entering into this convention, to accomplish a particular object, but also to establish a general principle, they hereby agree to extend their protection, by treaty stipulations, to any other practicable communications, whether by canal or railway, across the isthmus which connects North and South America, and especially to the interoceanic communications, should the same prove to be practicable, whether by canal or railway, which are now proposed to be established by the way of Tehuantepec or Panama. In granting, however, their joint protection to any such canals or railways as are by this article specified, it is always understood by the United States and Great Britain that the parties constructing or owning the same shall impose no other charges or conditions of traffic thereupon than the aforesaid Governments shall approve of as just and equitable; and that the same canals or railways, being open to the citizens and subjects of the United States and Great Britain on equal terms, shall also be open on like terms to the citizens and subjects of every other State which is willing to grant thereto such protection as the United States and Great Britain engage to afford.

There, Mr. President, is the explicit agreement for equality of treatment to the citizens of the United States and to the citizens of Great Britain in any canal, wherever it may be constructed, across the Isthmus. That was the fundamental principle embodied in the treaty of 1850. And we are not without an authoritative construction as to the scope and requirements of an agreement of that description, because we have another treaty with Great Britain—a treaty which formed one of the great landmarks in the diplomatic history of the world, and one of the great steps in the progress of civilization—the treaty of Washington of 1871, under which the Alabama claims were submitted to arbitration. Under that treaty there were provisions for the use of the American canals along the waterway of the Great Lakes, and the Canadian canals along the same line of communication, upon equal terms to the citizens of the two countries.

Some years after the treaty, Canada undertook to do something quite similar to what we have undertaken to do in this law about the Panama Canal. It provided that while nominally a toll of 20 cents a ton should be charged upon the merchandise both of Canada and of the United States there should be a rebate of 18 cents for all merchandise which went to Montreal or beyond, leaving a toll of but 2 cents a ton for that merchandise. The United States objected; and I beg your indulgence while I read from the message of President Cleveland upon that subject, sent to the Congress August 23, 1888. He says:

> By article 27 of the treaty of 1871 provision was made to secure to the citizens of the United States the use of the Welland, St.

Lawrence, and other canals in the Dominion of Canada on terms of equality with the inhabitants of the Dominion, and to also secure to the subjects of Great Britain the use of the St. Clair Flats Canal on terms of equality with the inhabitants of the United States.

The equality with the inhabitants of the Dominion which we were promised in the use of the canals of Canada did not secure to us freedom from tolls in their navigation, but we had a right to expect that we, being Americans and interested in American commerce, would be no more burdened in regard to the same than Canadians engaged in their own trade; and the whole spirit of the concession made was, or should have been, that merchandise and property transported to an American market through these canals should not be enhanced in its cost by tolls many times higher than such as were carried to an adjoining Canadian market. All our citizens, producers and consumers as well as vessel owners, were to enjoy the equality promised.

And yet evidence has for some time been before the Congress, furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury, showing that while the tolls charged in the first instance are the same to all, such vessels and cargoes as are destined to certain Canadian ports—are allowed a refund of nearly the entire tolls, while those bound for American ports are not allowed any such advantage.

Their coastwise trade—

To promise equality and then in practice make it conditional upon our vessels doing Canadian business instead of their own, is to fulfill a promise with the shadow of performance.

Upon the representations of the United States embodying that view, Canada retired from the position which she had taken, rescinded the provision for differential tolls, and put American trade going to American markets on the same basis of tolls as Canadian trade going to Canadian markets. She did not base her action upon any idea that there was no competition between trade to American ports and trade to Canadian ports, but she recognized the law of equality in good faith and honor; and to this day that law is being accorded to us and by each great Nation to the other.

I have said, Mr. President, that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was sought by us. In seeking it we declared to Great Britain what it was that we sought. I ask the Senate to listen to the declaration that we made to induce Great Britain to enter into that treaty—to listen to it because it is the declaration by which we are in honor bound as truly as if it were signed and sealed.

Here I will read from the report made to the Senate on the 5th day of April, 1900, by Senator Cushman K. Davis, then chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. So you will perceive that this is no new matter to the Senate of the United States and that I am not proceeding upon my own authority in thinking it worthy of your attention.

Mr. Rives was instructed to say and did say to Lord Palmerston, in urging upon him the making of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, this:

The United States sought no exclusive privilege or preferential right of any kind in regard to the proposed communication, and their sincere wish, if it should be found practicable, was to see it dedicated to the common use of all nations on the most liberal terms and a footing of perfect equality for all.

That the United States would not, if they could, obtain any exclusive right or privilege in a great highway which naturally belonged to all mankind.

That, sir, was the spirit of the Clayton-Bulwer convention. That was what the United States asked Great Britain to agree upon. That self-denying declaration underlaid and permeated and found expression in the terms of the Clayton-Bulwer convention. And upon that representation Great Britain in that convention relinquished her coign of vantage which she herself had for the benefit of her great North American empire for the control of the canal across the Isthmus.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ROOT. I do, but——

Mr. CUMMINS. I will ask the Senator from New York whether he prefers that there shall be no interruptions? If he does, I shall not ask any question.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I should prefer it, because what I have to say involves establishing the relation between a considerable number of acts and instruments, and interruptions naturally would destroy the continuity of my statement.

Mr. CUMMINS. The question I was about to ask was purely a historic one.

Mr. ROOT. I shall be very glad to answer the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator has stated that at the time of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty we were excluded from the Mosquito coast by the protectorate exercised by Great Britain over that coast. My question is this: Had we not at that time a treaty with New Granada that gave us equal or greater rights upon the Isthmus of Panama than were claimed even by Great Britain over the Mosquito coast?

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, we had the treaty of 1846 with New Granada, under which we undertook to protect any railway or canal across the Isthmus. But that did not apply to the Nicaragua route, which was then supposed to be the most available route for a canal.

Mr. CUMMINS. I quite agree with the Senator about that. I only wanted it to appear in the course of the argument that we were then under no disability so far as concerned building a canal across the Isthmus of Panama.

Mr. ROOT. We were under a disability so far as concerned building a canal by the Nicaragua route, which was regarded as the available route until the discussion in the Senate after 1901, in which Senator Spooner and Senator Hanna practically changed the judgment of the Senate with regard to what was the proper route to take. And in the treaty of 1850, so anxious were we to secure freedom from the claims of Great Britain to the eastern end of the Nicaragua route that, as I have read, we agreed that the same contract should apply not merely to the Nicaragua route but to the whole of the Isthmus. So that from that time on the whole Isthmus was impressed by the same obligations which were impressed upon the Nicaragua route, and whatever rights we had under our treaty of 1846 with New Grenada we were thenceforth bound to exercise with due regard and subordination to the provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

Mr. President, after the lapse of some 30 years, during the early part of which we were strenuously insisting upon the observance by Great Britain of her obligations under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and during the latter part of which we were beginning to be restive under our obligations by reason of that treaty, we undertook to secure a modification of it from Great Britain. In the course of that undertaking there was much discussion and some difference of opinion as to the continued obligations of the treaty. But I think that was finally put at rest by the decision of Secretary Olney in the memorandum upon the subject made by him in the year 1896. In that memorandum he said:

Under these circumstances, upon every principle which governs the relation to each other, either of nations or of individuals, the United States is completely estopped from denying that the treaty is in full force and vigor.

If changed conditions now make stipulations, which were once deemed advantageous, either inapplicable or injurious, the true remedy is not in ingenious attempts to deny the existence of the treaty or to explain away its provisions, but in a direct and straightforward application to Great Britain for a reconsideration of the whole matter.

We did apply to Great Britain for a reconsideration of the whole matter, and the result of the application was the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. That treaty came before the Senate in two forms: First, in the form of an instrument signed on the 5th of February, 1900, which was amended by the Senate; and, second, in the form of an instrument signed on the 18th of November, 1901, which continued the greater part of the provisions of the earlier instrument, but somewhat modified or varied the amendments which had been made by the Senate to that earlier instrument.

It is really but one process by which the paper sent to the Senate in February, 1900, passed through a course of amendment; first, at the hands of the Senate, and then at the hands of the negotiators between Great Britain and the United States, with the subsequent approval of the Senate. In both the first form and the last of this treaty the preamble provides for preserving the provisions of article 8 of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. Both forms provide for the construction of the canal under the auspices of the United States alone instead of its construction under the auspices of both countries.

Both forms of that treaty provide that the canal might be—constructed under the auspices of the Government of the United States, either directly at its own cost or by gift or loan of money to individuals or corporations or through subscription to or purchase of stock or shares—that being substituted for the provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty under which both countries were to be patrons of the enterprise.

Under both forms it was further provided that—

Subject to the provisions of the present convention, the said Government—shall have and enjoy all the rights incident to such construction, as well as the exclusive right of providing for the regulation and management of the canal.

The United States—

That provision, however, for the exclusive patronage of the United States was subject to the initial provision that the modification or change from the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was to be for the construction of such canal under the auspices of the Government of the United States, without impairing the general principle of neutralization established in article 8 of that convention.

Then the treaty as it was finally agreed to provides that the United States "adopt, as the basis of such neutralization of such ship canal," the following rules, substantially as embodied in the convention "of Constantinople, signed the 29th of October, 1888," for the free navigation of the Suez Maritime Canal; that is to say:

First. The canal shall be free and open * * * to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations "observing these rules on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any nation or its citizens or subjects in respect to the conditions or charges of traffic, or otherwise." Such conditions and charges of traffic shall be just and equitable.

Then follow rules relating to blockade and vessels of war, the embarkation and disembarkation of troops, and the extension of the provisions to the waters adjacent to the canal.

Now, Mr. President, that rule must, of course, be read in connection with the provision for the preservation of the principle of neutralization established in article 8 of the Clayton-Bulwer convention.

Let me take your minds back again to article 8 of the Clayton-Bulwer convention, consistently with which we are bound to construe the rule established by the Hay-Pauncefote convention. The principle of neutralization provided for by the eighth article is neutralization upon terms of absolute equality both between the United States and Great Britain and between the United States and all other powers.

It is always understood—

Says the eighth article—by the United States and Great Britain that the parties constructing or owning the same—

That is, the canal—

shall impose no other charges or conditions of traffic thereupon than the aforesaid Governments shall approve of as just and equitable, and that the same canals or railways, being open to the citizens and subjects of the United States and Great Britain on equal terms, shall also be open on like terms to the citizens and subjects of every other State which is willing to grant thereto such protection as the United States and Great Britain engage to afford.

Now, we are not at liberty to put any construction upon the Hay-Pauncefote treaty which violates that controlling declaration of absolute equality between the citizens and subjects of Great Britain and the United States.

Mr. President, when the Hay-Pauncefote convention was ratified by the Senate it was in full view of this controlling principle, in accordance with which their act must be construed, for Senator Davis, in his report from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which I have already referred——

Mr. McCUMBER. On the treaty in its first form.

Mr. ROOT. Yes; the report on the treaty in its first form. Mr. Davis said, after referring to the Suez convention of 1888:

The United States can not take an attitude of opposition to the principles of the great act of October 22, 1888, without discrediting the official declarations of our Government for 50 years on the neutrality of an Isthmian canal and its equal use by all nations without discrimination.

To set up the selfish motive of gain by establishing a monopoly of a highway that must derive its income from the patronage of all maritime countries would be unworthy of the United States if we owned the country through which the canal is to be built.

But the location of the canal belongs to other governments, from whom we must obtain any right to construct a canal on their territory, and it is not unreasonable, if the question was new and was not involved in a subsisting treaty with Great Britain, that she should question the right of even Nicaragua and Costa Rica to grant to our ships of commerce and of war extraordinary privileges of transit through the canal.

I shall revert to that principle declared by Senator Davis. I continue the quotation:

It is not reasonable to suppose that Nicaragua and Costa Rica would grant to the United States the exclusive control of a canal through those States on terms less generous to the other maritime nations than those prescribed in the great act of October 22, 1888, or if we could compel them to give us such advantages over other nations it would not be creditable to our country to accept them.

That our Government or our people will furnish the money to build the canal presents the single question whether it is profitable to do so. If the canal, as property, is worth more than its cost, we are not called on to divide the profits with other nations. If it is worth less and we are compelled by national necessities to build the canal, we have no right to call on other nations to make up the loss to us. In any view, it is a venture that we will enter upon if it is to our interest, and if it is otherwise we will withdraw from its further consideration.

The Suez Canal makes no discrimination in its tolls in favor of its stockholders, and, taking its profits or the half of them as our basis of calculation, we will never find it necessary to differentiate our rates of toll in favor of our own people in order to secure a very great profit on the investment.

Mr. President, in view of that declaration of principle, in the face of that declaration, the United States can not afford to take a position at variance with the rule of universal equality established in the Suez Canal convention—equality as to every stockholder and all nonstockholders, equality as to every nation whether in possession or out of possession. In the face of that declaration the United States can not afford to take any other position than upon the rule of universal equality of the Suez Canal convention, and upon the further declaration that the country owning the territory through which this canal was to be built would not and ought not to give any special advantage or preference to the United States as compared with all the other nations of the earth. In view of that report the Senate rejected the amendment which was offered by Senator Bard, of California, providing for preference to the coastwise trade of the United States. This is the amendment which was proposed:

The United States reserves the right in the regulation and management of the canal to discriminate in respect of the charges of traffic in favor of vessels of its own citizens engaged in the coastwise trade.

I say, the Senate rejected that amendment upon this report, which declared the rule of universal equality without any preference or discrimination in favor of the United States as being the meaning of the treaty and the necessary meaning of the treaty.

There was still more before the Senate, there was still more before the country to fix the meaning of the treaty. I have read the representations that were made, the solemn declarations made by the United States to Great Britain establishing the rule of absolute equality without discrimination in favor of the United States or its citizens to induce Great Britain to enter into the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

Now, let me read the declaration made to Great Britain to induce her to modify the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and give up her right to joint control of the canal and put in our hands the sole power to construct it or patronize it or control it.

Mr. Blaine said in his instructions to Mr. Lowell on June 24, 1881, directing Mr. Lowell to propose to Great Britain the modification of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

I read his words:

The United States recognizes a proper guarantee of neutrality as essential to the construction and successful operation of any highway across the Isthmus of Panama, and in the last generation every step was taken by this Government that is deemed requisite in the premises. The necessity was foreseen and abundantly provided for long in advance of any possible call for the actual exercise of power. * * * Nor, in time of peace, does the United States seek to have any exclusive privileges accorded to American ships in respect to precedence or tolls through an interoceanic canal any more than it has sought like privileges for American goods in transit over the Panama Railway, under the exclusive control of an American corporation. The extent of the privileges of American citizens and ships is measurable under the treaty of 1846 by those of Colombian citizens and ships. It would be our earnest desire and expectation to see the world's peaceful commerce enjoy the same just, liberal, and rational treatment.

Secretary Cass had already said to Great Britain in 1857:

The United States, as I have before had occasion to assure your Lordship, demand no exclusive privileges in these passages, but will always exert their influence to secure their free and unrestricted benefits, both in peace and war, to the commerce of the world.

Mr. President, it was upon that declaration, upon that self-denying declaration, upon that solemn assurance, that the United States sought not and would not have any preference for its own citizens over the subjects and citizens of other countries that Great Britain abandoned her rights under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and entered into the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, with the clause continuing the principles of clause 8, which embodied these same declarations, and the clause establishing the rule of equality taken from the Suez Canal convention. We are not at liberty to give any other construction to the Hay-Pauncefote treaty than the construction which is consistent with that declaration.

Mr. President, these declarations, made specifically and directly to secure the making of these treaties, do not stand alone. For a longer period than the oldest Senator has lived the United States has been from time to time making open and public declarations of her disinterestedness, her altruism, her purposes for the benefit of mankind, her freedom from desire or willingness to secure special and peculiar advantage in respect of transit across the Isthmus. In 1826 Mr. Clay, then Secretary of State in the Cabinet of John Quincy Adams, said, in his instructions to the delegates to the Panama Congress of that year:

If a canal across the Isthmus be opened "so as to admit of the passage of sea vessels from ocean to ocean, the benefit of it ought not to be exclusively appropriated to any one nation, but should be extended to all parts of the globe upon the payment of a just compensation for reasonable tolls."

Mr. Cleveland, in his annual message of 1885, said:

The lapse of years has abundantly confirmed the wisdom and foresight of those earlier administrations which, long before the conditions of maritime intercourse were changed and enlarged by the progress of the age, proclaimed the vital need of interoceanic transit across the American Isthmus and consecrated it in advance to the common use of mankind by their positive declarations and through the formal obligations of treaties. Toward such realization the efforts of my administration will be applied, ever bearing in mind the principles on which it must rest and which were declared in no uncertain tones by Mr. Cass, who, while Secretary of State in 1858, announced that "What the United States want in Central America next to the happiness of its people is the security and neutrality of the interoceanic routes which lead through it."

By public declarations, by the solemn asseverations of our treaties with Colombia in 1846, with Great Britain in 1850, our treaties with Nicaragua, our treaty with Great Britain in 1901, our treaty with Panama in 1903, we have presented to the world the most unequivocal guaranty of disinterested action for the common benefit of mankind and not for our selfish advantage.

In the message which was sent to Congress by President Roosevelt on the 4th of January, 1904, explaining the course of this Government regarding the revolution in Panama and the making of the treaty by which we acquired all the title that we have upon the Isthmus, President Roosevelt said:

If ever a Government could be said to have received a mandate from civilization to effect an object the accomplishment of which was demanded in the interest of mankind, the United States holds that position with regard to the interoceanic canal.

Mr. President, there has been much discussion for many years among authorities upon international law as to whether artificial canals for the convenience of commerce did not partake of the character of natural passageways to such a degree that, by the rules of international law, equality must be observed in the treatment of mankind by the nation which has possession and control. Many very high authorities have asserted that that rule applies to the Panama Canal even without a treaty. We base our title upon the right of mankind in the Isthmus, treaty or no treaty. We have long asserted, beginning with Secretary Cass, that the nations of Central America had no right to debar the world from its right of passage across the Isthmus. Upon that view, in the words which I have quoted from President Roosevelt's message to Congress, we base the justice of our entire action upon the Isthmus which resulted in our having the Canal Zone. We could not have taken it for our selfish interest; we could not have taken it for the purpose of securing an advantage to the people of the United States over the other peoples of the world; it was only because civilization had its rights to passage across the Isthmus and because we made ourselves the mandatory of civilization to assert those rights that we are entitled to be there at all. On the principles which underlie our action and upon all the declarations that we have made for more than half a century, as well as upon the express and positive stipulations of our treaties, we are forbidden to say we have taken the custody of the Canal Zone to give ourselves any right of preference over the other civilized nations of the world beyond those rights which go to the owner of a canal to have the tolls that are charged for passage.

Well, Mr. President, asserting that we were acting for the common benefit of mankind, willing to accept no preferential right of our own, just as we asserted it to secure the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, just as we asserted it to secure the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, when we had recognized the Republic of Panama, we made a treaty with her on the 18th of November, 1903. I ask your attention now to the provisions of that treaty. In that treaty both Panama and the United States recognize the fact that the United States was acting, not for its own special and selfish interest, but in the interest of mankind.

The suggestion has been made that we are relieved from the obligations of our treaties with Great Britain because the Canal Zone is our territory. It is said that, because it has become ours, we are entitled to build the canal on our own territory and do what we please with it. Nothing can be further from the fact. It is not our territory, except in trust. Article 2 of the treaty with Panama provides:

The Republic of Panama grants to the United States in perpetuity the use, occupation, and control of a zone of land and land under water for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, and protection of said canal—

And for no other purpose—of the width of 10 miles extending to the distance of 5 miles on each side of the center line of the route of the canal to be constructed.

* * * * * * *

The Republic of Panama further grants to the United States in perpetuity the use, occupation, and control of any other lands and waters outside of the zone above described which may be necessary and convenient for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, and protection of the said canal or of any auxiliary canals or other works necessary and convenient for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, and protection of the said enterprise.

Article 3 provides:

The Republic of Panama grants to the United States all the rights, power, and authority within the zone mentioned and described in article 2 of this agreement—

From which I have just read—and within the limits of all auxiliary lands and waters mentioned and described in said article 2 which the United States would possess and exercise if it were the sovereign of the territory within which said lands and waters are located to the entire exclusion of the exercise by the Republic of Panama of any such sovereign rights, power, or authority.

Article 5 provides:

The Republic of Panama grants to the United States in perpetuity a monopoly for the construction, maintenance, and operation of any system of communication by means of canal or railroad across its territory between the Caribbean Sea and the Pacific Ocean.

I now read from article 18:

The canal, when constructed, and the entrances thereto shall be neutral in perpetuity, and shall be opened upon the terms provided for by section 1 of article 3 of, and in conformity with all the stipulations of, the treaty entered into by the Governments of the United States and Great Britain on November 18, 1901.

So, Mr. President, far from our being relieved of the obligations of the treaty with Great Britain by reason of the title that we have obtained to the Canal Zone, we have taken that title impressed with a solemn trust. We have taken it for no purpose except the construction and maintenance of a canal in accordance with all the stipulations of our treaty with Great Britain. We can not be false to those stipulations without adding to the breach of contract a breach of the trust which we have assumed, according to our own declarations, for the benefit of mankind as the mandatory of civilization.

In anticipation of the plainly-to-be-foreseen contingency of our having to acquire some kind of title in order to construct the canal, the Hay-Pauncefote treaty provided expressly in article 4:

It is agreed that no change of territorial sovereignty or of international relations of the country or countries traversed by the before-mentioned canal shall affect the general principle of neutralization or the obligation of the high contracting parties under the present treaty.

So you will see that the treaty with Great Britain expressly provides that its obligations shall continue, no matter what title we get to the Canal Zone; and the treaty by which we get the title expressly impresses upon it as a trust the obligations of the treaty with Great Britain. How idle it is to say that because the Canal Zone is ours we can do with it what we please.

There is another suggestion made regarding the obligations of this treaty, and that is that matters relating to the coasting trade are matters of special domestic concern, and that nobody else has any right to say anything about them. We did not think so when we were dealing with the Canadian canals. But that may not be conclusive as to rights under this treaty. But examine it for a moment.

It is rather poverty of language than a genius for definition which leads us to call a voyage from New York to San Francisco, passing along countries thousands of miles away from our territory, "coasting trade," or to call a voyage from New York to Manila, on the other side of the world, "coasting trade." When we use the term "coasting trade" what we really mean is that under our navigation laws a voyage which begins and ends at an American port has certain privileges and immunities and rights, and it is necessarily in that sense that the term is used in this statute. It must be construed in accordance with our statutes.

Sir, I do not for a moment dispute that ordinary coasting trade is a special kind of trade that is entitled to be treated differently from trade to or from distant foreign points. It is ordinarily neighborhood trade, from port to port, by which the people of a country carry on their intercommunication, often by small vessels, poor vessels, carrying cargoes of slight value. It would be quite impracticable to impose upon trade of that kind the same kind of burdens which great ocean-going steamers, trading to the farthest parts of the earth, can well bear. We make that distinction. Indeed, Great Britain herself makes it, although Great Britain admits all the world to her coasting trade. But it is by quite a different basis of classification—that is, the statutory basis—that we call a voyage from the eastern coast of the United States to the Orient a coasting voyage, because it begins and ends in an American port.

This is a special, peculiar kind of trade which passes through the Panama Canal. You may call it "coasting trade," but it is unlike any other coasting trade. It is special and peculiar to itself.

Grant that we are entitled to fix a different rate of tolls for that class of trade from that which would be fixed for other classes of trade. Ah, yes; but Great Britain has her coasting trade through the canal under the same definition, and Mexico has her coasting trade, and Germany has her coasting trade, and Colombia has her coasting trade, in the same sense that we have. You are not at liberty to discriminate in fixing tolls between a voyage from Portland, Me., to Portland, Oreg., by an American ship, and a voyage from Halifax to Victoria in a British ship, or a voyage from Vera Cruz to Acapulco in a Mexican ship, because when you do so you discriminate, not between coasting trade and other trade, but between American ships and British ships, Mexican ships, or Colombian ships. That is a violation of the rule of equality which we have solemnly adopted, and asserted and reasserted, and to which we are bound by every consideration of honor and good faith. Whatever this treaty means, it means for that kind of trade as well as for any other kind of trade.

The suggestion has been made, also, that we should not consider that the provision in this treaty about equality as to tolls really means what it says, because it is not to be supposed that the United States would give up the right to defend itself, to protect its own territory, to land its own troops, and to send through the canal as it pleases its own ships of war. That is disposed of by the considerations which were presented to the Senate in the Davis report, to which I have already referred, in regard to the Suez convention.

The Suez convention, from which these rules of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty were taken almost—though not quite—textually, contained other provisions which reserved to Turkey and to Egypt, as sovereigns of the territory through which the canal passed—Egypt as the sovereign and Turkey as the suzerain over Egypt—all of the rights that pertained to sovereigns for the protection of their own territory. As when the Hay-Pauncefote treaty was made neither party to the treaty had any title to the region which would be traversed by the canal, no such clauses could be introduced. But, as was pointed out, the rules which were taken from the Suez Canal for the control of the canal management would necessarily be subject to these rights of sovereignty which were still to be secured from the countries owning the territory. That is recognized by the British Government in the note which has been sent to us and has been laid before the Senate, or is in the possession of the Senate, from the British foreign office.

In Sir Edward Grey's note of November 14, 1912, he says what I am about to read. This is an explicit disclaimer of any contention that the provisions of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty exclude us from the same rights of protection of territory which Nicaragua or Colombia or Panama would have had as sovereigns, and which we succeed to, pro tanto, by virtue of the Panama Canal treaty.

Sir Edward Grey says:

I notice that in the course of the debate in the Senate on the Panama Canal bill the argument was used by one of the speakers that the third, fourth, and fifth rules embodied in article 3 of the treaty show that the words "all nations" can not include the United States, because, if the United States were at war, it is impossible to believe that it could be intended to be debarred by the treaty from using its own territory for revictualling its warships or landing troops.

The same point may strike others who read nothing but the text of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty itself, and I think it is therefore worth while that I should briefly show that this argument is not well founded.

I read this not as an argument but because it is a formal, official disclaimer which is binding.

Sir Edward Grey proceeds:

The Hay-Pauncefote treaty of 1901 aimed at carrying out the principle of the neutralization of the Panama Canal by subjecting it to the same régime as the Suez Canal. Rules 3, 4, and 5 of article 3 of the treaty are taken almost textually from articles 4, 5, and 6 of the Suez Canal Convention of 1888. At the date of the signature of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty the territory on which the Isthmian Canal was to be constructed did not belong to the United States, consequently there was no need to insert in the draft treaty provisions corresponding to those in articles 10 and 13 of the Suez Canal Convention, which preserve the sovereign rights of Turkey and of Egypt, and stipulate that articles 4 and 5 shall not affect the right of Turkey, as the local sovereign, and of Egypt, within the measure of her autonomy, to take such measures as may be necessary for securing the defense of Egypt and the maintenance of public order, and, in the case of Turkey, the defense of her possessions on the Red Sea.

Now that the United States has become the practical sovereign of the canal, His Majesty's Government do not question its title to exercise belligerent rights for its protection.

Mr. President, Great Britain has asserted the construction of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty of 1901, the arguments for which I have been stating to the Senate. I realize, sir, that I may be wrong. I have often been wrong. I realize that the gentlemen who have taken a different view regarding the meaning of this treaty may be right. I do not think so. But their ability and fairness of mind would make it idle for me not to entertain the possibility that they are right and I am wrong. Yet, Mr. President, the question whether they are right and I am wrong depends upon the interpretation of the treaty. It depends upon the interpretation of the treaty in the light of all the declarations that have been made by the parties to it, in the light of the nature of the subject matter with which it deals.

Gentlemen say the question of imposing tolls or not imposing tolls upon our coastwise commerce is a matter of our concern. Ah! we have made a treaty about it. If the interpretation of the treaty is as England claims, then it is not a matter of our concern; it is a matter of treaty rights and duties. But, sir, it is not a question as to our rights to remit tolls to our commerce. It is a question whether we can impose tolls upon British commerce when we have remitted them from our own. That is the question. Nobody disputes our right to allow our own ships to go through the canal without paying tolls. What is disputed is our right to charge tolls against other ships when we do not charge them against our own. That is, pure and simple, a question of international right and duty, and depends upon the interpretation of the treaty.

Sir, we have another treaty, made between the United States and Great Britain on the 4th of April, 1908, in which the two nations have agreed as follows:

Differences which may arise of a legal nature or relating to the interpretation of treaties existing between the two contracting parties and which it may not have been possible to settle by diplomacy, shall be referred to the Permanent Court of Arbitration established at The Hague by the convention of the 29th of July, 1899, provided, nevertheless, that they do not affect the vital interests, the independence, or the honor of the two contracting States, and do not concern the interests of third parties.

Of course, the question of the rate of tolls on the Panama Canal does not affect any nation's vital interests. It does not affect the independence or the honor of either of these contracting States. We have a difference relating to the interpretation of this treaty, and that is all there is to it. We are bound, by this treaty of arbitration, not to stand with arrogant assertion upon our own Government's opinion as to the interpretation of the treaty, not to require that Great Britain shall suffer what she deems injustice by violation of the treaty, or else go to war. We are bound to say, "We keep the faith of our treaty of arbitration, and we will submit the question as to what this treaty means to an impartial tribunal of arbitration."

Mr. President, if we stand in the position of arrogant refusal to submit the questions arising upon the interpretation of this treaty to arbitration, we shall not only violate our solemn obligation, but we shall be false to all the principles that we have asserted to the world, and that we have urged upon mankind. We have been the apostle of arbitration. We have been urging it upon the other civilized nations. Presidents, Secretaries of State, ambassadors, and ministers—aye, Congresses, the Senate and the House, all branches of our Government have committed the United States to the principle of arbitration irrevocably, unequivocally, and we have urged it in season and out of season on the rest of mankind.

Sir, I can not detain the Senate by more than beginning upon the expressions that have come from our Government upon this subject, but I will ask your indulgence while I call your attention to a few selected from the others.

On the 9th of June, 1874, the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations reported and the Senate adopted this resolution:

Resolved, That the United States having at heart the cause of peace everywhere, and hoping to help its permanent establishment between nations, hereby recommend the adoption of arbitration as a great and practical method for the determination of international difference, to be maintained sincerely and in good faith, so that war may cease to be regarded as a proper form of trial between nations.

On the 17th of June, 1874, the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House adopted this resolution:

Whereas war is at all times destructive of the material interests of a people, demoralizing in its tendencies, and at variance with an enlightened public sentiment; and whereas differences between nations should in the interests of humanity and fraternity be adjusted, if possible, by international arbitration: Therefore,

Resolved, That the people of the United States being devoted to the policy of peace with all mankind, enjoining its blessings and hoping for its permanence and its universal adoption, hereby through their representatives in Congress recommend such arbitration as a rational substitute for war; and they further recommend to the treaty-making power of the Government to provide, if practicable, that hereafter in treaties made between the United States and foreign powers war shall not be declared by either of the contracting parties against the other until efforts shall have been made to adjust all alleged cause of difference by impartial arbitration.

On the same 17th of June, 1874, the Senate adopted this resolution:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to negotiate with all civilized powers who may be willing to enter into such negotiations for the establishment of an international system whereby matters in dispute between different Governments agreeing thereto may be adjusted by arbitration, and, if possible, without recourse to war.

On the 14th of June, 1888, and again on the 14th of February, 1890, the Senate and the House adopted a concurrent resolution in the words which I now read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be, and is hereby, requested to invite, from time to time, as fit occasions may arise, negotiations with any Government with which the United States has, or may have, diplomatic relations, to the end that any differences or disputes arising between the two Governments which can not be adjusted by diplomatic agency may be referred to arbitration and be peaceably adjusted by such means.

This was concurred in by the House on the 3d of April, 1890.

Mr. President, in pursuance of those declarations by both Houses of Congress the Presidents and the Secretaries of State and the diplomatic agents of the United States, doing their bounden duty, have been urging arbitration upon the people of the world. Our representatives in The Hague conference of 1899, and in The Hague conference of 1907, and in the Pan American conference in Washington, and in the Pan American conference in Mexico, and in the Pan American conference in Rio de Janeiro were instructed to urge and did urge and pledge the United States in the most unequivocal and urgent terms to support the principle of arbitration upon all questions capable of being submitted to a tribunal for a decision.

Under those instructions Mr. Hay addressed the people of the entire civilized world with the request to come into treaties of arbitration with the United States. Here was his letter. After quoting from the resolutions and from expressions by the President he said:

Moved by these views, the President has charged me to instruct you to ascertain whether the Government to which you are accredited, which he has reason to believe is equally desirous of advancing the principle of international arbitration, is willing to conclude with the Government of the United States an arbitration treaty of like tenor to the arrangement concluded between France and Great Britain on October 14, 1903.

That was the origin of this treaty. The treaties made by Mr. Hay were not satisfactory to the Senate because of the question about the participation of the Senate in the make-up of the special agreement of submission. Mr. Hay's successor modified that on conference with the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, and secured the assent of the other countries of the world to the treaty with that modification. We have made 25 of these treaties of arbitration, covering the greater part of the world, under the direction of the Senate of the United States and the House of Representatives of the United States and in accordance with the traditional policy of the United States, holding up to the world the principle of peaceful arbitration.

One of these treaties is here, and under it Great Britain is demanding that the question as to what the true interpretation of our treaty about the canal is shall be submitted to decision and not be made the subject of war or of submission to what she deems injustice to avoid war.

In response to the last resolution which I have read, the concurrent resolution passed by the Senate and the House requesting the President to enter into the negotiations which resulted in these treaties of arbitration, the British House of Commons passed a resolution accepting the overture. On the 16th of July, 1893, the House of Commons adopted this resolution:

Resolved, That this house has learnt with satisfaction that both Houses of the United States Congress have, by resolution, requested the President to invite from time to time, as fit occasions may arise, negotiations with any government with which the United States have or may have diplomatic relations, to the end that any differences or disputes arising between the two governments which can not be adjusted by diplomatic agency may be referred to arbitration and peaceably adjusted by such means, and that this house, cordially sympathizing with the purpose in view, expresses the hope that Her Majesty's Government will lend their ready cooperation to the Government of the United States upon the basis of the foregoing resolution.

Her Majesty's Government did, and thence came this treaty.

Mr. President, what revolting hypocrisy we convict ourselves of, if after all this, the first time there comes up a question in which we have an interest, the first time there comes up a question of difference about the meaning of a treaty as to which we fear we may be beaten in an arbitration, we refuse to keep our agreement? Where will be our self-respect if we do that? Where will be that respect to which a great nation is entitled from the other nations of the earth?

I have read from what Congress has said.

Let me read something from President Grant's annual message of December 4, 1871. He is commenting upon the arbitration provisions of the treaty of 1871, in which Great Britain submitted to arbitration our claims against her, known as the Alabama claims, in which Great Britain submitted those claims where she stood possibly to lose but not possibly to gain anything, and submitted them against the most earnest and violent protest of many of her own citizens. Gen. Grant said:

The year has been an eventful one in witnessing two great nations speaking one language and having one lineage, settling by peaceful arbitration disputes of long standing and liable at any time to bring those nations into costly and bloody conflict. An example has been set which, if successful in its final issue, may be followed by other civilized nations and finally be the means of returning to productive industry millions of men now maintained to settle the disputes of nations by the bayonet and by broadside.

Under the authority of these resolutions our delegates in the first Pan American conference at Washington secured the adoption of this resolution April 18, 1890:

ARTICLE 1. The Republics of North, Central, and South America hereby adopt arbitration as a principle of American international law for the settlement of the differences, disputes, or controversies that may arise between two or more of them.

And this:

The International American Conference resolves that this conference, having recommended arbitration for the settlement of disputes among the Republics of America, begs leave to express the wish that controversies between them and the nations of Europe may be settled in the same friendly manner.

It is further recommended that the Government of each nation herein represented communicate this wish to all friendly powers.

Upon that Mr. Blaine, that most vigorous and virile American, in his address as the presiding officer of that first Pan American conference in Washington said:

If, in this closing hour, the conference had but one deed to celebrate we should dare call the world's attention to the deliberate, confident, solemn dedication of two great continents to peace and to the prosperity which has peace for its foundation. We hold up this new Magna Charta, which abolishes war and substitutes arbitration between the American Republics, as the first and great fruit of the International American Conference. That noblest of Americans, the aged poet and philanthropist, Whittier, is the first to send his salutation and his benediction, declaring, "If in the spirit of peace the American conference agrees upon a rule of arbitration which shall make war in this hemisphere well-nigh impossible, its sessions will prove one of the most important events in the history of the world."

President Arthur in his annual message of December 4, 1882, said, in discussing the proposition for a Pan American conference:

I am unwilling to dismiss this subject without assuring you of my support of any measure the wisdom of Congress may devise for the promotion of peace on this continent and throughout the world, and I trust the time is nigh when, with the universal assent of civilized peoples, all international differences shall be determined without resort to arms by the benignant processes of arbitration.

President Harrison in his message of December 3, 1889, said concerning the Pan American conference:

But while the commercial results which it is hoped will follow this conference are worthy of pursuit and of the great interests they have excited, it is believed that the crowning benefit will be found in the better securities which may be devised for the maintenance of peace among all American nations and the settlement of all contentions by methods that a Christian civilization can approve.

President Cleveland, in his message of December 4, 1893, said, concerning the resolution of the British Parliament of July 16, 1893, which I have already read, and commenting on the concurrent resolution of February 14 and April 18, 1890:

It affords me signal pleasure to lay this parliamentary resolution before the Congress and to express my sincere gratification that the sentiment of two great kindred nations is thus authoritatively manifested in favor of the rational and peaceable settlement of international quarrels by honorable resort to arbitration.

President McKinley, in his message of December 6, 1897, said:

International arbitration can not be omitted from the list of subjects claiming our consideration. Events have only served to strengthen the general views on this question expressed in my inaugural address. The best sentiment of the civilized world is moving toward the settlement of differences between nations without resorting to the horrors of war. Treaties embodying these humane principles on broad lines without in any way imperiling our interests or our honor shall have my constant encouragement.

President Roosevelt, in his message of December 3, 1905, said:

I earnestly hope that the conference—

The second Hague conference—may be able to devise some way to make arbitration between nations the customary way of settling international disputes in all save a few classes of cases, which should themselves be sharply defined and rigidly limited as the present governmental and social development of the world will permit. If possible, there should be a general arbitration treaty negotiated among all nations represented at the conference.

Oh, Mr. President, are we Pharisees? Have we been insincere and false? Have we been pretending in all these long years of resolution and declaration and proposal and urgency for arbitration? Are we ready now to admit that our country, that its Congresses and its Presidents, have all been guilty of false pretense, of humbug, of talking to the galleries, of fine words to secure applause, and that the instant we have an interest we are ready to falsify every declaration, every promise, and every principle? But we must do that if we arrogantly insist that we alone will determine upon the interpretation of this treaty and will refuse to abide by the agreement of our treaty of arbitration.

Mr. President, what is all this for? Is the game worth the candle? Is it worth while to put ourselves in a position and to remain in a position to maintain which we may be driven to repudiate our principles, our professions, and our agreements for the purpose of conferring a money benefit—not very great, not very important, but a money benefit—at the expense of the Treasury of the United States, upon the most highly and absolutely protected special industry in the United States? Is it worth while? We refuse to help our foreign shipping, which is in competition with the lower wages and the lower standard of living of foreign countries, and we are proposing to do this for a part of our coastwise shipping which has now by law the absolute protection of a statutory monopoly and which needs no help.

Mr. President, there is but one alternative consistent with self-respect. We must arbitrate the interpretation of this treaty or we must retire from the position we have taken.

O Senators, consider for a moment what it is that we are doing. We all love our country; we are all proud of its history; we are all full of hope and courage for its future; we love its good name; we desire for it that power among the nations of the earth which will enable it to accomplish still greater things for civilization than it has accomplished in its noble past. Shall we make ourselves in the minds of the world like unto the man who in his own community is marked as astute and cunning to get out of his obligations? Shall we make ourselves like unto the man who is known to be false to his agreements; false to his pledged word? Shall we have it understood the whole world over that "you must look out for the United States or she will get the advantage of you"; that we are clever and cunning to get the better of the other party to an agreement, and that at the end——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. "Slippery" would be a better word.

Mr. ROOT. Yes; I thank the Senator for the suggestion—"slippery." Shall we in our generation add to those claims to honor and respect that our fathers have established for our country good cause that we shall be considered slippery?

It is worth while, Mr. President, to be a citizen of a great country, but size alone is not enough to make a country great. A country must be great in its ideals; it must be great-hearted; it must be noble; it must despise and reject all smallness and meanness; it must be faithful to its word; it must keep the faith of treaties; it must be faithful to its mission of civilization in order that it shall be truly great. It is because we believe that of our country that we are proud, aye, that the alien with the first step of his foot upon our soil is proud to be a part of this great democracy.

Let us put aside the idea of small, petty advantage; let us treat this situation and these obligations in our relation to this canal in that large way which befits a great nation.

Mr. President, how sad it would be if we were to dim the splendor of that great achievement by drawing across it the mark of petty selfishness; if we were to diminish and reduce for generations to come the power and influence of this free Republic for the uplifting and the progress of mankind by destroying the respect of mankind for us! How sad it would be if you and I, Senators, were to make ourselves responsible for destroying that bright and inspiring ideal which has enabled free America to lead the world in progress toward liberty and justice!

During the delivery of Mr. ROOT's speech,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LIPPITT in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside. The Senator from New York will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. ROOT's speech,

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I give notice that to-morrow at the close of the morning business, if the convenience of the Senate will permit, I shall speak upon the question discussed to-day by the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT]—the Panama Canal tolls. Assuming even more than the Senator from New York has contended for, namely, that the United States holds the canal in trust for civilization; that the canal is to be regarded as a great international public utility through which the Government of the United States as its administrator is bound to render the same service to all for the same price, I shall endeavor to show that no unjust burthen has been placed upon foreign nations, but that, on the contrary, the United States is bearing and will continue for many years to bear an enormous burthen, the larger portion of which, in justice and in right, it could impose upon the shipping of foreign nations, whose tonnage will for many years constitute at least nine-tenths of the total tonnage of the canal. I refer to the interest charge upon its enormous investment of $400,000,000 in the Panama Canal, which for many years it will be unable to collect.

I shall endeavor to show that there is no necessity for arbitration upon this question; that all that is necessary can be accomplished by adding a few lines to the statute which we have already enacted, providing that the charges from which our domestic ships shall be freed shall not be imposed as an additional charge upon foreign or international shipping, but shall be credited on our interest charge against the Panama investment; that those few lines will demonstrate to the world that the United States intends to administer the canal with justice to all nations and without imposing an unfair burthen upon any, and at the same time to maintain its traditional domestic policy of an untrammeled and unburthened traffic upon its domestic waterways. I shall contend that the Panama Canal is not only an international public utility, but a domestic waterway, and as such, so far as our domestic policies are concerned, is to be administered like any other waterway of the country upon which public moneys have been expended—as a free and untrammeled channel of transportation, trade, and commerce between the various sections of our country.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I assume the Senator from Nevada means his remarks to follow those for which notice already stands on the calendar after the routine morning business to-morrow.

Mr. NEWLANDS. What notice is that?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. My colleague [Mr. MCLEAN] has given notice that immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business to-morrow he will ask the Senate to take up another matter.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Of course that will have precedence.

OLD NEWBURY HISTORICAL SOCIETY, MASSACHUSETTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 369) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to give certain old Government documents to the Old Newbury Historical Society, of Newburyport, Mass., which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. LODGE. The Committee on Finance has favorably reported a joint resolution identical with that joint resolution, and I now ask for the present consideration of the House joint resolution. It is only 5 lines, and will not take long.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let the title of the joint resolution be again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read in full before the request for its consideration is put.

The Secretary read the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 369) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to give certain old Government documents to the Old Newbury Historical Society, of Newburyport, Mass., the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to give to the Old Newbury Historical Society, of Newburyport, Mass., any or all documents in the customhouse building at Newburyport, Mass., which are of no further value to the United States Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 154) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to give certain old Government documents to the Old Newbury Historical Society, of Newburyport, Mass., reported by me this morning from the Committee on Finance, be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

M'CLELLAN PARK.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2845) to acquire certain land in Washington Heights for a public park to be known as McClellan Park.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has heretofore been read. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I objected to that bill the other day. I did so very largely because I believe when we are establishing public parks they ought to be established where they are most needed. The site of the proposed park is within a couple of blocks of the Zoological Park, and I thought if we were expending money for park purposes we ought to spend it in the congested part of the city where there are no parks.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, this matter was before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and it was there referred to a special committee. The committee investigated the question and were thoroughly convinced that the situation as it is now was certainly not in existence at the time the original idea and plan of public parks was inaugurated. This plat comprises about 2 acres. It is surrounded with streets and in itself to-day is a park so far as requiring the expenditure of a dollar to put it in shape is concerned. There is a very handsome house on the plat that might be used for a public rest. This plat is surrounded with apartment buildings from 7 to 12 stories high and is about 1 mile from the other end of Rock Creek Park. It was the opinion of the committee that the public need and demand at that point warranted the purchase of this plat. I do not at the moment recall the exact figure involved, but it is something over $100,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Chair may be allowed to make the suggestion, the amount is $180,000.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. $180,000.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to ask if any objection has been interposed to the consideration of this bill? If not, I will have to object.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to propound a parliamentary inquiry. Are we sounding the calendar under the unanimous-consent rule?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey has asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; but are we sounding the calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; not at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This bill comes up irregularly, then?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I object to the present consideration of the bill, as I desire to bring up the motion I made to reconsider the votes by which the omnibus claims bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. NEWLANDS obtained the floor.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada has been recognized.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask the Senator to yield to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, the omnibus claims bill passed the Senate the other day while the Senator from Nevada was absent. He had given notice of his intention to offer an amendment, but on account of his absence he did not have that opportunity, so that he gave notice of a motion to reconsider. The bill, if the votes are reconsidered, will be before the Senate for that purpose only, and not with any idea of going into a general discussion or of submitting amendments.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I was absent when the omnibus claims bill was finally disposed of the other day. At that time I had pending an amendment providing for the payment of some 80 claims for extra pay of mechanics and laborers on public buildings in some 25 different States, including Alabama, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Texas, Virginia, and Wisconsin—claims aggregating from $500 to $7,000 and totaling about $92,000.

These claims are asserted under the findings of the Court of Claims, which acted upon a bill referred to that court by Congress for consideration, providing for the payment of claims for extra pay. The claims were founded upon the act of August 1, 1892, known as the eight-hour law. Prior to that time the eight-hour law had existed for some period, but it was declared by the courts to be not mandatory, and the result was that a new law was passed on August 1, 1892, from which I quote:

SECTION 1. That the service and employment of all laborers and mechanics who are now or may hereafter be employed by the Government of the United States, by the District of Columbia, or by any contractor or subcontractor upon any of the public works of the United States or of the said District of Columbia, is hereby limited and restricted to eight hours in any one calendar day, and it shall be unlawful for any officer of the United States Government or of the District of Columbia, or any such contractor or subcontractor whose duty it shall be to employ, direct, or control the services of such laborers or mechanics, to require or permit any such laborer or mechanic to work more than eight hours in any calendar day, except in case of extraordinary emergency.

It will be observed that not only was an eight-hour day fixed, but it was made unlawful for any officer of the United States Government to permit work in excess of eight hours. The record shows that with reference to a certain class of laborers, namely, engineers, firemen, mechanics, and laborers, the Treasury Department fixed the compensation by the year, and presumably they fixed that compensation with reference to the requirements of the law as to an eight-hour day. Notwithstanding that fact, all of the men whose claims are now presented were compelled to work in excess of eight hours. That fact is found by the Court of Claims; the fact of compensation is found by the Court of Claims; the number of extra hours is found by the Court of Claims; and the compensation to which these men are entitled for the extra work is also ascertained. The Court of Claims, in presenting these findings of fact, found in reference to all of them practically what they found regarding the claim of one Glanzmann, a resident of the State of Nevada, and from which I will read a quotation:

II. In fixing the compensation and the number of assistant custodians, engineers, janitors, firemen, watchmen, and laborers necessary for the care and maintenance of public buildings belonging to the United States the Government officials charged with that duty took into consideration the locality in which they lived and the cost of living, the size of the building, the character and size of the plant the engineer would have to take charge of, and the mechanical equipment of the building, and fixed the yearly salary for such employees at what the work was worth without regard to the number of hours they might be required to labor.

The chairman of the Committee on Claims insists that, in fixing this compensation, they took into consideration the number of hours in excess of the legal requirement which these laborers might be compelled to labor. I take exception to that statement. The finding of the Court of Claims is simply that the compensation was fixed without regard to the number of hours; and the presumption is that in fixing the compensation they fixed it with a view to the requirements of the law, that no man should be required to work more than eight hours a day. This is proved by the fact that numerous laborers of the same class—common laborers, firemen, engineers, and so forth—were employed for differing hours. Some of them were only compelled to work according to the legal requirement of eight hours, and yet they received the same pay for their class as did the men who were called by their superior officers to work for 12 hours. It is clear, therefore, that the men who fixed this compensation did not take into consideration any extra time, but simply fixed the compensation according to the character of the employment, assuming that the men would only be called upon to work the legal number of hours, for we can not assume that these officials deliberately proposed to break the law, when that very law made it unlawful for them to permit any employment beyond the eight hours.

This contention is verified by the affidavits presented by Mr. W. W. Ludlow and Mr. Fred Casady, who, as I understand, were Treasury officials, charged with the duty of determining the compensation to be paid to these various classes of laborers. These affidavits were made only a few weeks ago, and they were made in view of the statement presented by the chairman of the Committee on Claims that in fixing compensation they had taken into consideration the extra number of hours that the men would be called upon to serve. These men all denied this, and their affidavits are presented in Senate Document No. 985 of the present session.

I read from the statement of W. W. Ludlow, dated December 17, 1912, and sworn to before a notary public:

W. W. Ludlow on oath deposes and says that he is the W. W. Ludlow who testified—

I presume in the Court of Claims—in connection with the employment and fixing of the compensation of certain engineers, firemen, and laborers in the custodian service; that when he testified that the salary of such employees was fixed "at what the work was worth" without regard to the number of hours they might be required to labor, he meant that he fixed such salary at what the character of the employment was worth; for example, engineers at a certain compensation, firemen at a certain compensation, laborers at a certain compensation. Deponent further deposes and says that in fixing said salary he did not know how many hours the employee might be required to work, and only fixed the salary with a view to the character of the work which the employee would be called upon to perform.

Depositions are made by Mr. Fred Casady and Mr. Robert Tobin to the same effect; and the truth of their statements is proved by the fact that the men who work only 8 hours a day in these various classes of employment receive the same annual compensation as the men who work 12 hours a day.

Mr. President, I do not wish to take the time of the Senate in the discussion of this matter. It is perfectly clear that the intention of Congress from the start has been to enforce the eight-hour law regarding laborers employed on the public buildings, and that after the courts had declared that the provision of law covering that question was not mandatory Congress changed the law and made it mandatory, and made it unlawful for any official of the Government to exact work beyond the eight hours. We have the fact, ascertained by the Court of Claims, that these men did work beyond the eight hours, and the fact that, judged by the compensation for the eight hours, the extra time was worth so much, aggregating in all $92,000.

I wish to say that there is no danger of a large amount of claims being precipitated upon Congress under this law, for of late years the officials of the departments have been careful to enforce the law as to an eight-hour day, and where they have called upon employees to give service beyond the eight hours the various departments, by rules and regulations, have provided for compensation for the extra time. So we find, as a matter of fact, that, with the exception of these claims which arose early under the law, and which were presented to the Court of Claims, it has now become the settled custom and practice of the departments to pay these amounts for extra time without contest. All this is shown in Senate Document No. 985.

In this statement it appears that Congress has already paid claims of this nature. In the House of Representatives a claim of this nature was pending some time in 1899. As I have already stated, it is not found that many claims of this nature have been presented to Congress since the act of August 1, 1892, owing to the fact that the requirements of that law have been very generally complied with by Government officers, and therefore the instances of claims prosecuted in Congress are few. Most of them are present here, but at least one claim has been settled by an act of Congress.

Joint resolution 307 was presented at the third session of the Fifty-fifth Congress. When this measure was called up in the House of Representatives on February 11, 1899, the following debate ensued:

Mr. DOCKERY. I thought there was an eight-hour law upon the statute books preventing the working of laborers, mechanics, and artisans over eight hours. I shall not object to this bill, because laborers should be paid for any excess of time over eight hours.

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, Mr. Speaker, how are we to construe the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri? Is he in favor or against the joint resolution?

Mr. DOCKERY. "The gentleman from Missouri" stated very clearly that he was in favor of paying any laborer for any excess of time he may have worked over eight hours. As I understand the joint resolution, it proposes to accomplish that result. My query, however, was how they could have been worked over eight hours under existing law.

Mr. HOPKINS. This bill proposes to pay them for the excess of time and 50 per cent in addition to that allowed by law. * * *

That was a very apt inquiry on the part of Mr. Dockery, for, as I have already shown, the law explicitly makes it unlawful for any official to exact more than eight hours' work from any laborer.

This measure thereupon passed the House and later passed the Senate without debate, becoming a law on February 25, 1899. (30 Stat. L., 1389.)

When these claims, aggregating nearly $92,000, were turned over to the Court of Claims to ascertain the facts the contemporaneous debate shows clearly that it was the intention of Congress to see to it that this law was enforced, and that wherever it was not enforced the equitable claim of the laborer for the extra time should be paid. We find Senator CULLOM, in discussing the very resolution under which these claims were considered by the Court of Claims, on September 27, 1890, speaking as follows:

All that I have to say is that it does seem to me that this law, which has been so long upon the statute books, ought to be enforced, and if it is not enforced, certainly the men who are called upon to work more hours than a legal day's work ought to have some way for securing the pay for their extra labor.

Senator Dawes, of Massachusetts, in the same debate, said:

* * * these laborers and mechanics, with as just a claim upon the Government as the bonds of the United States * * *.

Senator Stewart, of Nevada, said:

I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that we ought to turn these accounts over to the accounting officers and settle them speedily and without delay. It is one of those obligations that the Government should execute at once, without question.

Senator Spooner, of Wisconsin, in the same debate, said:

It is my conviction, Mr. President, that in every case where one of these men was compelled by the officers of the Government as a condition of having employment and of being able to support his family to work one hour or one-half hour over the eight-hour day which Congress had declared for, and which President Grant had sought to enforce, he ought to be paid for that overtime.

Not to do so seems to me to put the Government of the United States in an attitude of allowing its executive officers to violate in essence and in spirit the law which Congress had enacted upon the ground of public policy and which public sentiment has approved, and attempting to filch from these men hours of unrequited toil.

I am perfectly willing to take the responsibility of adjudicating the question of liability, sending these men to the Court of Claims for that tribunal only to ascertain and declare how many hours in each case these men worked beyond the lawful day. I shall vote with great pleasure for the substitute which I understand the Senator from New Hampshire will offer to this bill, which is the same bill as it passed this body at a previous session. In doing so, I only vote for the payment of debts honestly due and too long left unpaid.

Representative Caruth, of Kentucky, said:

Here is a proposition embodied in this bill to allow these men who have performed labor for the Government beyond what would have been their day's labor under the law to receive just compensation for their extra work. * * * I say that if there is to be any sanctity in the statutes of the United States, if the laws we put upon the statute books are to amount to anything, then these men are entitled to the relief they seek.

Representative Gest, of New Jersey, said, referring to a resolution passed by the House of Representatives May 9, 1878, after the decision in the Martin case:

It indicates the sense of the House of Representatives on this subject: that these men should be paid for the time that they had worked above and beyond eight hours a day.

Representative Thomas M. Bayne, of Pennsylvania, said:

The Supreme Court of the United States in a case coming before it has held that the departments of the Government have the right to employ men for 8 hours and pay them for 8 hours; and when it employs men for 10 hours it has the right to pay them an additional sum for their services. That is common sense, common honesty, fair dealing; anything short of that is not.

Representative William D. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, said:

Until that statute is repealed every workingman who is forced by the Government to work 10 hours for a day's wages is defrauded of his legal rights.

The executive policy under the act of 1892 has been to pay these claims in the current administration of the departments, without forcing the claimants to go to Congress or to the courts.

In the Navy Department the regulations passed in 1893 provide:

The following rules shall be observed in estimating the pay of laborers, workmen, and mechanics for work performed in excess of eight hours per day.

Then they go on to say what the extra compensation shall be. All these matters are adjusted in the ordinary course of administration.

So far as I am concerned, Mr. President, I originally represented simply the claim of John Glanzmann, a laborer and custodian in the United States customhouse and post-office building at Carson City, Nev., whose salary as such laborer was fixed at $720 a year, the compensation given for similar work to all men employed by the National Government under the eight-hour law. Yet he was compelled for a long period of time, as a matter of economy to the Government, to work 12 hours a day. His claim does not amount to a large sum. But I found upon pressing it that there were other claims in the same category that ought to be adjusted. So I presented an amendment covering all of these claims and aggregating $92,000.

I do hope the chairman of the committee will not further contest these claims—certainly not upon the intangible ground upon which he stood at the last hearing of this matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada move to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed? That question has not been stated.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I had an impression that it was done this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been done.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then I will ask that the question be put.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada moves to reconsider the votes by which the so-called omnibus claims bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Th motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator from Nevada offers his amendment at this stage?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, the rules under which the Committee on Claims proceeded in making up the omnibus claims bill confined the items which were to go into the bill to those which had been referred to the Court of Claims and in regard to which the Court of Claims had made specific findings in favor of the claims. These are not the claims of laborers engaged on public works, serving contractors or subcontractors, and they do not come within the provisions of the eight-hour-day law.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not understand that statement on the part of the Senator.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The statute, known as the eight-hour-day law, found in volume 2 of the Supplement to the Revised Statutes of the United States, at page 62, fixing the limit of service per day at eight hours, applies to laborers and mechanics—who are now, or may hereafter be, employed by the Government of the United States, by the District of Columbia, or by any contractor or subcontractor upon any of the public works of the United States or of the said District of Columbia.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Does the Senator insist that it applies only to laborers who are engaged upon public works?

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the Senator will permit me to finish my statement he will see just exactly what I mean.

The class of employees included in the proposed amendment is not a class of laborers employed by contractors and subcontractors in the construction of public works or upon public works. These men are engineers, custodians, and janitors employed in the public buildings of the United States—in post-office buildings and buildings of that sort.

The Court of Claims, in making its report upon each one of these claims, made this specific finding, which excluded them from consideration in making up the bill under the rule adopted by the Committee on Claims in framing the omnibus claims bill. On each one there is the following finding. The court finds that—

In fixing the compensation and the number of assistant custodians, engineers, janitors, firemen, watchmen, and laborers necessary for the care and maintenance of public buildings belonging to the United States, the Government officials charged with that duty took into consideration the locality in which they lived and the cost of living, the size of the building, the character and size of the plant the engineer would have to take charge of, and the mechanical equipment of the building, and fixed the yearly salary for such employees at what the work was worth without regard to the number of hours they might be required to labor.

That is the clear, specific finding of the Court of Claims in each case.

I am not going to discuss with the Senator from Nevada the question whether or not that finding is a just one, or as to whether this group of claims, presented in another way and for consideration at another time, might not have some merit. I do not care to express an opinion upon that subject now. I am not out of sympathy with this class of men, nor with the claim for an eight-hour-day law. But after the committee has worked for months along certain specific lines and within certain specific rules in determining what items should be placed in the bill and reported favorably it would not be fair to others who may have just claims against the Government, at the last moment, here in the Senate, to depart from the rules adopted in making up the bill and open the door to a large class of claims with this finding from the Court of Claims standing here as it does to prohibit their going into the bill unless we violate the rules which we followed in framing it.

It is upon that ground, so as to be consistent and fair and just to other claimants whose claims, because they did not fall within the rules that governed us here, shall not be discriminated against, that we can not consent to this amendment and must insist, in fairness to others, that it be rejected.

For instance, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], who is most earnestly interested in a claim, came to me only the other day about the claim. Knowing the Senator's earnestness in its behalf, and the courtesy which he always extends to others, I would have been glad to have given it consideration. But it was not suggested nor presented when we were making up the bill, nor even considered. It would be unfair to the claim of the Senator from Oregon now to reconsider the bill simply for the purpose of allowing the claims which the Senator from Nevada has presented and not to include his. If we included his, some one else might bring forward for the first time some claim that had possible merit in it, which never had been considered by the committee, and which did not come within the rules under which the committee was acting, and there would be a contention that that ought to be included. So there would be no line circumscribing the items going into the bill.

Those considerations, together with this finding from the Court of Claims, impel me to resist the amendment offered at this time by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cullom	Lodge	Root
Bankhead	Dillingham	McCumber	Sanders
Bourne	Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Shively
Bradley	Foster	Martine, N. J.	Simmons

Clark, Wyo.	Johnston, Tex.	Perkins
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Perky
Crawford	La Follette	Pomerene

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce again the unavoidable absence of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] on account of illness in his family.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the call of the roll 57 Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I will simply state to the Senate that we are about to take a vote upon these claims for extra pay for mechanics and laborers employed on public buildings under a law which required only eight hours' work and which made it absolutely unlawful for the officials of the Government to employ any man in excess of eight hours. We have here the findings of the Court of Claims that these 87 men, living in 25 States of the Union, as stated in this document, worked overtime, and their extra compensation would amount to about $92,000. A similar claim was passed some years ago by Congress. No such claim, to my knowledge, has been denied.

All that the chairman of the committee can say is that the finding of the Court of Claims determines that the officials of the Treasury Department in fixing the salaries did not take into consideration the number of hours. That is true; because they assumed, and they had the right to assume, that the number of hours would be the legal number of hours—eight hours a day—and that no official of the Government would commit a misdemeanor by requiring of an employee time in excess of eight hours. So, of course, the compensation was fixed without regard to the number of hours upon the assumption that the number of hours during which these men would be employed would comply with the legal requirements.

Mr. President, we have been legislating for years upon the labor question. Congress has determined that the Government of the United States shall be a model employer. It passed an eight-hour law with reference to mechanics and laborers engaged in the public service and prescribed that the limit of their work should be eight hours. The courts determined that to be simply discretionary, and then Congress passed another act making it mandatory—making it unlawful for any official to employ a man in excess of eight hours.

Here are these men, our constituents in the various States, called upon in defiance of law to work often as many as 12 hours a day when the law requires only 8, rendering their claims to the Government, which have been favorably ascertained by the Court of Claims, and we are told that the Committee on Claims has selected a certain batch of claims which it thinks it can pass through the processes of accommodation or compromise between sections and classes and between the two Houses that have prevailed with reference to this matter.

I insist upon it that if it is a just claim it ought to be recognized by the Congress of the United States. It is the claim of a laboring man who has rendered an employer service under the command of his superior in defiance of law, and it presents equitable consideration to the Government for settlement, the Government itself having received in the case of many of these men four hours more work every day than they were called upon by the law to render.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNTER. I just entered the Chamber a few moments ago, and I have not heard the discussion. Has the Court of Claims adjudicated this sum to be due these laborers?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will give as a sample the case of John Glanzman, who is a laborer and watchman at a public building in Nevada. The Court of Claims finds that while employed as a watchman and laborer at a salary of $720 a year, presumed to be fixed with reference to eight hours a day, the officials at the Treasury Department—

> In fixing the compensation and the number of assistant custodians, engineers, janitors, firemen, watchmen, and laborers necessary for the care and maintenance of public buildings belonging to the United States, the Government officials charged with that duty took into consideration the locality in which they lived and the cost of living, the size of the building, the character and size of the plant the engineer would have to take charge of, and the mechanical equipment of the building, and fixed the yearly salary for such employees at what the work was worth without regard to the number of hours they might be required to labor.

The chairman of the committee seems to assume that when a court says that they fixed this compensation without regard to the number of hours, it is equivalent to a finding that they fixed the labor with regard to the number of hours; that the compensation was therefore fixed for a 9, 10, or 12 hour day instead of an 8-hour day, and that hence the $720 allowed this man is ample compensation. The court finds that they fixed that compensation without considering at all the number of hours, and it is simply with reference to the character of the location that the law fixed the number of hours at 8 hours a day, not 12 hours a day.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly. I wish to say to the Senator that that is a sample of these claims.

Mr. PAYNTER. I wish to ask an additional question. Has the court ascertained the number of hours that they worked in excess of eight hours a day?

Mr. NEWLANDS. In each case the number of extra hours and the value.

Mr. PAYNTER. Has the court made any statement as to how it was that these employees worked more hours than they were required to do by law?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No; the court makes no statement about that. It simply finds the facts as to the employment, the character of the employment, the actual number of hours of overtime, and what that overtime was worth judged by the compensation which they received.

Mr. PAYNTER. The question in my mind is whether the service was voluntarily rendered by the parties.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator will hardly claim that a laborer who responds to the demand of an official to work 12 hours when the law requires 8——

Mr. PAYNTER. I did not pretend to make any claim about it. I simply wish to be informed as to the facts.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Now, Mr. President, I should like to have a vote upon the amendment.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada a question. I observe from the papers I have here in all the cases where they set out the proceedings that one attorney appeared for all of them. I wish to inquire whether some attorney has scoured the United States to hunt up these claims and whether he or they will get a very large part of this appropriation.

That is my first question. My second is this: I see that from my own State there is only one claim, and I imagine under this law, if the attorneys had used the proper diligence, they might have found a very large number of cases.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, it is impossible for us to hear what the Senator from Indiana says.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will please observe order.

Mr. KERN. My question is whether the adoption of the amendment will not open the door to a large flood of similar claims, amounting to millions of dollars.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state regarding that that I represent simply a constituent of mine in Nevada, an honest, hard-working man named John Glanzman, universally respected there, who worked 12 hours a day as a watchman and laborer when the law required him to work only 8 hours a day, and that his pay was $720 a year. He comes in with this claim aggregating $3,296. He wrote me in regard to this matter and gave me the name of his attorney. I sent word to his attorney asking him to familiarize me with the facts in the case. The attorney seemed to me to be a very reputable and respectable man, who is practicing law here as any other man would, and who was presenting what he regarded as just claims against the Government. I found that there were other claims in the same category with that of my client, and I thought it would be better to get the united support of the Senators from the various States whose constituents were similarly affected with a view to getting action by this body, for I know how powerful the Committee on Claims is and how likely the body is always to accept its advice and to reject any claim which it does not favor, or, at all events, to postpone its consideration until the future. Hence, I want as much supporting power as possible in this matter. Having looked into all the findings, I had them grouped and I looked over them carefully; and having been satisfied with the justness of these claims, I presented them in one amendment.

I wish to say that this attorney has never been obtrusive in any way; that he has never been lobbying; that he has never been pushing. I sent for him to ascertain the facts, and the facts are presented in the statement which he got up at my request.

Now, with reference to a flood of claims, I wish to say there is no probability of a flood of claims, for the reason that of late years the departments have recognized their obligation under the law to pay for this overtime, and under regulations they are now paying for overtime without compelling the employees to resort to Congress or to the Court of Claims wherever they work more than eight hours a day. That is a matter of common occurrence in the departments, and I think I am safe in saying that all the claims extant are now covered by these judgments. That is my impression, at least.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understood the Senator to say that now the departments are paying for overtime under the law of Congress. The question I wish to ask the Senator is whether in making the calculation as to what is due to these claimants the Court of Claims recognized the principle laid down by the law of Congress under which he says the departments are now paying for overtime, and whether it is based upon that principle adopted by Congress.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I assume they did. The Court of Claims ascertained the facts. The Court of Claims do not render judgments against the United States. They ascertain the facts, and those facts I have read. Those facts cover, first, the character of the employment; second, the rules which are followed in fixing the compensation of employees.

Mr. SIMMONS. When was that judgment rendered?

Mr. NEWLANDS. December 20, 1909.

Mr. SIMMONS. Has Congress fixed a scale of wages where employees work overtime since that date?

Mr. NEWLANDS. My understanding is that in all these employments of laborers, etc., the compensation is fixed by certain officials in the Treasury Department.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is under an act of Congress?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I presume it is under an act of Congress.

Mr. SIMMONS. And that act prescribes the basis of the calculation.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not know whether it prescribes the basis or not. At all events it fixed the compensation, and the officials whose duty it was to fix the compensation say that they fixed it without considering the number of hours.

Mr. SIMMONS. The question I wish to ask is whether they fixed it under any rule of law or whether they fixed it upon some theory of just compensation evolved by themselves.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I can answer the question asked by the Senator from North Carolina by reading finding No. 3 in the case quoted:

III. The number of hours worked by claimant in excess of 8 hours a day during the period from August 1, 1892, as set forth in Finding I, is 13,184; and his services for said hours, computed upon the basis of the salary he was receiving during said period, namely, $720 per annum, would amount to $3,296.

So the additional pay is allowed pro rata to the salary he received.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Casady, one of the officials of the Treasury Department, charged with the duty of fixing the compensation, says:

In fixing the compensation of these employees no consideration was given to the fact that they might or might not be required to work more than eight hours per day.

Employees, such as the claimants, whose duties required them to work more than eight hours per day at the public buildings where they were employed, do not receive any greater compensation than similar employees performing work at other public buildings who were not required to work more than eight hours per day.

Seven hundred and twenty dollars was fixed as the compensation, for instance, of a watchman and laborer. In the case of a man who labored in the building during the day and also acted as watchman his compensation was fixed, regardless of the number of hours. The record is that in some public buildings men worked 8 hours a day and got $720, and in others they were called on to work 12 hours a day and received only $720.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I do not want the statement of the Senator from Nevada to go entirely without challenge, and some Senators have come in since I was on my feet before.

I desire again to disclaim absolutely and sweepingly any disposition to deprive any laborer anywhere of his right to benefit under any provision of law for an eight-hour day. I simply want to say that the Committee on Claims, as I said a while ago, had to fix a boundary line somewhere in determining what items would be placed in this particular bill, and it decided to confine the items to claims which had express decisions in their favor coming from the Court of Claims.

The claims which the Senator from Nevada is advocating do not have such a decision in their favor from the Court of Claims. I will again read the finding of that court which runs through every one of these cases. The court finds that:

II. In fixing the compensation and the number of assistant custodians, engineers, janitors, firemen, watchmen, and laborers necessary for the care and maintenance of public buildings belonging to the United States the Government officials charged with that duty took into consideration the locality in which they lived and the cost of living, the size of the building, the character and size of the plant the engineer would have to take charge of, and the mechanical equipment of the building, and fixed the yearly salary for such employees at what the work was worth, without regard to the number of hours they might be required to labor.

As I said a while ago, without making an issue or going into a discussion of these particular claims, the Committee on Claims, under the rules which they adopted for guidance as to what should be put into the omnibus claims bill, had to reject these claims from that bill to be fair to other claims which were excluded by its rules, because these claims did not come within their rules.

As I said, if we open up this bill now, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], who has been so considerate and fair with reference to his claim, has just as much right to insist that we send his claim to the committee and travel over the whole question with reference to the Oregon claim and have it up for discussion here as the Senator from Nevada has a right to have this whole question reviewed for this class of claims.

If we concede it to the Senator from Oregon any other Senator might think there was some claim that was not within the rules governing the committee which should be considered, and the whole question would come up for review, and the procedure on which it was necessary for the committee to follow in deciding what should go into the omnibus claims bill would be completely broken down and we would be simply at chaos. It is hardly——

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CRAWFORD. In just a moment, when I finish the sentence. The Senator is hardly fair to this committee in making the inference that it has made up this bill simply by balancing one claim against another for the purpose of passing it. I care very little about the question of the mere passage of the bill. The committee has done faithful and diligent work in attempting at least to scrutinize very closely the character of every claim in the bill. I think we have excluded more items that were questionable than has ever been done before in an omnibus claims bill. Our work has been along that line particularly rather than trying with a dragnet to pull claims in concerning which there might be some doubt.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNTER. I did not rise for the purpose of criticizing the conduct just described by the Senator from South Dakota. I am almost tempted to do so, however, by reason of the fact that so many very just claims were excluded by the committee from the bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will say to the Senator that they go to conference, and if the Senator feels that they have been put out unjustly they have to be dealt with in conference.

Mr. PAYNTER. I wish to call the Senator's attention to this fact for the purpose of inquiring as to whether my view is correct or not. If I understood the finding which the Senator read a moment ago to the Senate, it was to the effect that the compensation was fixed for these watchmen and laborers regardless of the hours which they might be employed. Is that correct?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I simply read the finding which said it was fixed at what the service was worth.

Mr. PAYNTER. If that is the case, then it would look like those who fixed the salary fixed it at a less amount than was fixed by the law under which eight hours had been established as a day's work.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think that is a fair inference.

Mr. PAYNTER. That is a fair inference to be drawn from the finding. I understood the Senator to state that there had been no finding in favor of these claims by the Court of Claims.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The only finding is the one which I read.

Mr. PAYNTER. Except the one which the Senator read.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes; except that they did ascertain from their time-keeping records how many hours these men worked. That is true; but the finding as to the merits of their claim and the conclusion of the Court of Claims was the one which I read, where they said they took into consideration the environment, the cost of living, the conditions surrounding them, and fixed the yearly compensation at what the service was worth.

Mr. NEWLANDS. But the Senator construes that as fixing the compensation at what the work was worth with regard to the number of hours instead of, as the Court of Claims says, without regard to the number of hours.

Mr. CRAWFORD. No; the Senator construed it and the committee construed it simply to this extent, that it did not bring these claims within the group and class of claims we were putting in the omnibus claims bill, because we were putting in that bill only those claims where the findings of the Court of Claims were clear and unequivocal in their favor, and with this finding we could not put this group of claims in that class.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I can not understand how a finding can be clearer than this one, when they fix the compensation and then say, "We did not take into consideration at all the number of hours." The assumption is, of course, that the number of hours would be the legal number of hours.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, the mere fact that we, under these rules, did not embrace these claims in the bill, finding it necessary to follow some rule, does not mean, as I said, foreclosing these people or erecting a bar or entering judgment against them. Whatever merit they have, I think, it would be fairly well to group them together in one bill and present it here and let it be considered on its merits. But I repeat that in a great bill embracing claims—and they are stacked up before the committee by the hundreds and by the thousands—it is necessary in framing the bill to fix some boundary line and some rule, and after you have once established it to follow it, or there will be just reason of complaint on the part of different Senators. If you break it down and discriminate in favor of one Senator and show a disposition to be partial here and partial there, your troubles would certainly be abundant. We have tried to honestly and fairly adhere to the rules which were adopted by the committee.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether it is not a fact that the findings of the court, as far as the facts are concerned, are clear and unqualified?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is true.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. First, that the men did work so many hours overtime?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is true.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Second, that the rate of pay was so much; and, third, that at that rate of pay they would be entitled to so much money if the eight-hour law was to be respected?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is all true.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, if those findings of fact are clear, does not the chairman of the committee think these claims presented by laborers should have been entitled to come within the boundary which he laid out for the bill?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, it is too late to go back and go all over that ground again. I do not think so, for this reason: Suppose the compensation was $10,000 a year. Let us make an extravagant assumption. If that salary of $10,000 a year had been prorated per hour, they worked so many hours, and they would be entitled, if the time was limited to eight hours a day, to so much more than they received. You can not cut that loose from the conclusion of the Court of Claims, where the Court of Claims says that in fixing that yearly salary they fixed it at what this labor was worth, and if they fixed it at $1,600 a year, they fixed it because in the opinion of the Treasury officials the services of that janitor were worth $1,600. Although he might work 8 hours one day and 9 hours the next day, and under some emergency 10 hours the next day, when they gave $1,600 for the year they gave him what that service was worth. There is that finding to which we considered we should give some weight.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to continue my question. If the Court of Claims made these findings of fact, I ask the chairman of the committee was there anything else for the committee to do, or is there anything else for Congress to do, but to say whether the eight-hour law shall be applied to those facts? If that be true, why should that not be done now, rather than keep these laboring men waiting 15 or 20 years to secure the payment of their claims?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think there was something else to do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Nothing but the application of the law.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There was the duty of giving consideration to its conclusion that in fixing the yearly salary they fixed it at what the service was worth; and if these men have received what that service is worth, if that finding by the Court of Claims is true in fact, then wherein does the Government do these men any injustice?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Did they not fix this compensation at what it was worth at eight hours a day?

Mr. CRAWFORD. They do not say anything of the sort, but they do say that they fixed it for what the service was worth, without regard to the number of hours.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the chairman contend——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will kindly address the Chair and get permission to interrupt.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the chairman of the committee contend that these administrative officers of the department had any right to fix the amount which should be paid to these men for a year's work, without regard to the hours of daily labor, after Congress had prescribed the hours that they should work each day?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator there opens up another question, which shows——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is not that the only question in the case?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Oh, no; the Senator opens up another question, which shows how unfair it is to the committee at this late day to bring in this amendment, when the rules followed by the committee do not permit it, because the language of the eight-hour statute applies to men engaged upon public works; and a post-office building in which a man is acting as a janitor or custodian is certainly a different class of work, and, in contemplation of the language used, there is a question of whether that statute applies to the janitor or to the engineer or the custodian in such a building.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me ask the Senator this question——

Mr. CRAWFORD. What about the custodian of a public building?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me ask the chairman this question right there. Is it not a fact that universally the eight-hour law applies not only to public works but to all work done by a contractor for the Government and to these very custodians and watchmen?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think that is true.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, if that is the fact and that was the intention of Congress, why are the claims of these men not upon a just basis?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have tried to explain.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The chairman complains that this is called to the attention of the committee at this late hour. I want to call his attention to the fact that the hour is still later for these men who have been waiting a good many years to ascertain whether Congress meant what the law said it should mean.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I understand the situation very well; but I say to the Senator, if this finding is true and correct, that their compensation was fixed at what the service was worth. It was not fixed by the hour; it was not fixed by the month; but it was fixed by the year.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But I will say to the Senator again——

Mr. CRAWFORD. And it was fixed at what the service was worth. Then, if that contention is correct as to every farmer in the United States who has employed a plowboy or has employed a man to work by the year, at $400 or $600 a year, it would be equally just to go back and review that contract and to say that, in the contemplation of law, it was only intended that that plowboy or that man working in the field should be engaged for eight hours a day, and ask the farmer to go back and compute the number of hours the boy milking the cows late at night and getting up at 4 o'clock in the morning, going into the field and working 14 and even 15 hours a day, as I know many and many of them do—you would have in principle just as much right to go back and make that farmer review the service of that employee, to clip off the service at the end of eight hours, and apportion that $400 a year to it, and then give the employee a judgment for the difference.

There are two sides to this question. The Senator drives me to it, and I do it with the utmost liberality, kindness, and fairness toward these janitors and these engineers, but I say the committee was justified, and it was consistent, after establishing these rules, in adhering to them and keeping this group of claims upon which this finding was made for consideration strictly upon their merits instead of putting them into this bill, and that is as far as we go in the matter.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am amazed that the Senator from South Dakota should attempt to compare or to give as a parallel case the farmer employing a man by the year or the month without any limitation by law as to the number of hours that he can contract with his man to work——

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am discussing——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me finish.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Very well.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And the case of a Government employee, who is supposed to be acting under the direction of Congress, after Congress has directed that the men employed shall work only eight hours, and when, as a matter of fact, the employee of the Government has no power to make a contract, but has a right to depend upon the acts of Congress made for his protection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator permit me to say he is now discussing a law that was passed after this service was rendered?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not discussing a law that was passed afterwards. I am discussing a law that was passed previously. It has been necessary, however, since 1892 to pass a number of supplemental acts in order to enforce and emphasize the will of Congress and to compel these administrative officials to obey it. That is the only reason subsequent laws were passed.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator can not make any issue with me as to the justice and soundness of the eight-hour-day law, but I reiterate that in principle, in morals, and from the standpoint of the personal right of the individual, the janitor in a public building is not any better than the plowboy; the engineer in the basement of a Government post-office building is not any better than the boy who gets up at 4 o'clock in the morning on the farm and works until 10 o'clock at night—not a bit. I am speaking as a matter of principle and of moral right.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. May I ask the Senator from South Dakota a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Does it appear that these claims have been assigned or is there an affirmative showing that they are still in the ownership of the persons who rendered this so-called service?

Mr. CRAWFORD. We know nothing about that, if the Senator please.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Does the Senator know what part of this money would go to the claim agents, who probably worked up these claims, in the event this item should be included?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will say that a number of these claims have been worked up by attorneys. I am going to discuss one in a few moments, if we ever get through with this matter, the case of the Cramp Shipbuilding Co., and I should like to get through with this so as take that up. I have a few things to say to the Senate about it.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. If the Senator is not prepared to answer at this time the question I submitted to him, I will ask permission to ask him again at a little later stage of the discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], upon which the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. In his absence from the Chamber I withhold my vote.

Mr. FOSTER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], who is absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). The occupant of the chair is paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]; but he transfers that pair to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MASSEY], and will vote "yea."

Mr. GARDNER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. CRANE].

Mr. KERN (when his name was called). I again announce my general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY]. Not knowing how he would vote if he were present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when Mr. JONES's name was called). I again desire to announce the necessary absence on business of the Senate of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I again announce the transfer of my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. JACKSON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PAYNTER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I again announce my general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]; but I am advised that on the previous roll call he voted as I did, and, therefore, I feel at liberty to vote, and will allow my vote in the negative to stand.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire again to announce my pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP].

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 29, as follows:

So Mr. NEWLAND'S amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, the omnibus claims bill, just passed, has been amended so radically that there is not the slightest doubt that the House will reject the amendments and ask for a conference. To save time—and I understand it is not without precedent—I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives upon its amendments, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. CRAWFORD, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. BRYAN the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONSTRUCTORS OF THE BATTLESHIP "INDIANA."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4840) to carry into effect the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the contractors for building the U. S. battleship Indiana, with a view to its indefinite postponement. It is accompanied by an adverse report from the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, on that question I desire to be heard.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the Senator from Utah desire to submit a statement?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I desire to submit a statement.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in 1908 a bill identical with this passed the Senate, upon a favorable report from the Committee on Claims. At that time it was referred to me as a subcommittee, and I made a favorable report. When the report was made at this session of Congress I was not at the meeting that authorized the report, and I claim no courtesy because of that fact. I received a letter from a party in New York asking me if I had changed my views upon this particular bill, and among other things asking me if not to let him know. He inclosed a copy of the report that I made on February 17, 1908.

I wish to say to the Senate that at that time I went into the claim very thoroughly, as I thought. I had the contract before me. I secured all the information that I could from the Court of Claims. I submitted a favorable report on the bill. The bill under consideration is a claim by the builders of the battleship Indiana, by which they are seeking reimbursement of the expenses to which they were put for the care, maintenance, preservation, insurance, and wharfage during a delay or two years after the expiration of the contract period, brought about by the failure of the United States to furnish them with the armor "in the time and in the order necessary to carry on the work properly." This has been agreed to not only by the department and the Secretary of the Navy, but the Senators will find in the report that I made a statement from each and every one of the parties that had anything to do with the contract and building of the battleship Indiana.

The Court of Claims, after a protracted trial, found that the necessary and reasonable cost during this delay, which they found was solely and entirely due to the fault of the United States, amounted to $177,823.55; but on account of a release given on May 10, 1894, at the time of an advance payment by which the builders agreed to waive so much of the claim as accrued prior to that date, the court allowed only the expenses incurred after that date, for a period of one year, six months, and nine days, and gave judgment for the sum of $135,560. In the report you will see these findings set out in detail.

The case was appealed to the Supreme Court, and that court reversed the judgment upon the sole ground that a final receipt and release given May 19, 1896, upon the payment to the builders of the balance of the contract price, viz, $41,132.80, was intended by the parties to be a final settlement of the present claim, which the Court of Claims found amounted to $177,823.55 additional. The equities were not considered by the Supreme Court, as fully appears in the correspondence between Mr. Justice Brewer, who delivered the opinion, and one of the counsel for the company. Of course I included a copy of that letter in my report.

The builders now ask that Congress, upon equitable grounds, shall reimburse them for these expenses, and they file in support of their petition the affidavits of the ex-Secretary of the Navy, Gen. Tracy; his assistants, Admiral Hichborn, Chief of the Bureau of Construction, and ex-Naval Constructor Nixon, who designed the vessel, being all the Government officers that had any part in the preparation of the contract; of ex-Secretary Herbert, who took the receipt, and Mr. Charles H. Cramp, president of the company, who signed both contract and receipt, each and all unanimously declaring in specific terms that it was never the intent of either of the parties to the contract by the giving or accepting of the receipt to in any way waive, bar, or settle the claim now presented.

This evidence was not before the Supreme Court, and the facts now presented differ in this material respect from the case as presented to that court. The delays in furnishing the armor were caused by the praiseworthy desire of Secretary Tracy to obtain for these new vessels of war the most invulnerable armor that it was possible to procure. At that time the subject of armor plate was in its infancy, and new processes of its manufacture were being devised and presented to the department for adoption. A series of exhaustive tests and experiments were made, which consumed most of the contract period, and it was not until February, 1893, that the Secretary finally adopted the nickel-steel harveyized armor, and that surpassed all armor in any of the navies of the world. These delays had a similar effect upon the builders of the Oregon, Maine, Terror, and Texas, and these were the only vessels that were delayed from this cause aside from the Indiana and Massachusetts, built by the Cramp Co. The Richmond Locomotive Works, builders of the machinery for the Texas, and N. F. Palmer & Co. (the Quintard Iron Works), builders of the machinery of the Maine, have both been reimbursed by special acts of Congress on the recommendation of Secretaries Herbert, Morton, and Moody—notwithstanding they signed precisely the same final receipts and releases.

The Pneumatic Gun Carriage Co., builders of the Terror, recovered judgment in the Court of Claims, notwithstanding they signed the identical form of final receipt and release, that court holding, as it did in the Indiana case, that it did not relate to this class of claims, and Attorney General Griggs acquiesced in that decision and declined to appeal the case, and that company was paid.

I do not want to take the time of the Senate to go into all of the details, but I simply wanted to tell the Senate why I made the favorable report upon this claim. It was not on account of any lack of endeavor on the part of the Cramp people to finish the Indiana on time that the loss to the company occurred, as the Secretary of the Navy states, not only by letter, but by a statement made under oath. All parties concerned recommend that this claim be paid, because it was no fault of the company that a loss occurred.

I will take it for granted that there is not a Senator who knows my record upon the Claims Committee who does not know that I am not in favor of paying claims against the Government unless I find that there is some good reason for doing so. I am not going to go into any lengthy discussion of this matter. The committee reported adversely upon the claim, and I simply make this statement now to place myself right, having been asked as to whether or not I had changed my views upon this particular claim.

I do not think there is any necessity for my saying any more. The builders of all the other vessels that were built under the same conditions and that were held up for the same identical reasons have been reimbursed. If the Senate of the United States does not desire to reimburse this company for the same kind of loss that all of the other companies sustained and have been paid for, I have not another word to say in relation to the matter.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, in view of the rather peculiar situation of this claim, I am glad the Senator made his statement. I also wish to make a statement, because I want it to be a matter of record. It is not very long.

The Committee on Claims made an adverse report on this bill for the relief of William Cramp & Sons on March 28, 1912. Under the regular procedure it would have been indefinitely postponed at once. At the time the adverse report was presented, however, an amendment had been proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania and referred to the Committee on Claims, by which he sought to amend what is known as the omnibus claims bill—which at that time was being considered by the same committee—by inserting this claim in that bill. For that reason I asked that this bill go on the calendar, so that the proposed amendment and the bill might be considered together in connection with the adverse report when the omnibus claims bill came before the Senate.

The committee having reported the bill adversely, declined to accept the proposed amendment, of course. During all the time we were considering the omnibus claims bill here this amendment was not presented by the Senator from Pennsylvania, nor by any other Senator. The Senator who proposed it told me that he did not intend to press it.

After the omnibus claims bill had passed the Senate, I assumed, as a matter of course, that this bill, upon my suggestion and upon the adverse report, would be indefinitely postponed. This adverse report has been here for 10 months. No minority views have been presented. An amendment proposing the same relief has been abandoned; and it is difficult to understand why at this late date there should be a disposition to depart from the usual practice of indefinite postponement in such cases.

The Senator from Utah the other day asked that the bill be placed under Rule IX, which would indicate that he preferred to have it die there rather than to have the Senate act in the usual way by indefinitely postponing it upon the adverse report. In fact, sir, I have discovered several attempts to get that adverse report out of the way in some manner other than the usual one, of either taking issue with it by presenting minority views or having the bill indefinitely postponed upon it.

Very soon after the adverse report was filed a gentleman who was actively engaged in lobbying for the bill came into my committee room and asked the clerk of the committee to show him the records and minutes kept of the proceedings, so that he might, if possible, make the claim that a quorum of the committee was not present when the report was ordered. He did this in my absence and without so much as asking my leave. It looked like impudence and effrontery to me for a lobbyist to go to a committee room and in the absence of the chairman attempt to secure evidence upon which to impeach the committee's report.

Failing in that, I next discovered that this same gentleman was attempting to canvass the individual members of the committee and to secure their signatures to a written request that this adverse report be withdrawn. I am glad to say that he did not get very far with that; but it was a most extraordinary proceeding.

It seems to me there is a manifest desire to deal with this adverse report in some unusual way instead of following the regular procedure. Under the circumstances, I think it is my duty to lay before the Senate briefly the facts disclosed in the report.

The William Cramp & Sons Ship and Engine Building Co. entered into a written contract with the Government on November 10, 1890, in which it undertook, for the sum of $3,020,000, at its own risk and expense, to construct a coast-line battleship, afterwards known as the Indiana. Certain portions of the armor were to be furnished by the Government and delivered at the Cramp shipyards in the order and at the times required to carry on the work properly. The vessel was to be completed within three years from the date of the contract, and heavy penalties were provided in case of delays beyond this period for which the shipbuilding company was to blame. On the other hand, it was clearly provided when the delay was caused by the fault of the Government that the builder should be relieved of penalties and entitled to a corresponding extension of the period prescribed for the completion of the vessel. The contract was carefully balanced in this as in all other particulars. The expenses incurred in the preparations for trial tests and of the preliminary trial tests of the vessel were to be borne by the shipbuilder, but the expense of the final trial before acceptance, if successful, was to be paid by the Government. Payment was to be made by the Government in 30 equal installments as the work progressed, with a reservation of 10 per cent from each installment. The last three installments and the reservations, except the sum of $60,000, were to be made after the preliminary trial test if approved. The $60,000 was not to be paid until the final trial and acceptance of the vessel, and then only upon the execution by the shipbuilder of a full and complete release of all claims of any kind or description under or by virtue of the contract.

The contract is clear and unequivocal throughout. There is no ambiguity or uncertainty in it. There is nothing in it calling for oral interpretation or explanation. It speaks plainly. It is an all-sufficient witness as to its meaning, and parol testimony to vary or explain its clear meaning would not be admitted in any court in the absence of any charge of fraud, duress, or mistake.

Because the Government was unable to furnish the armor when needed the completion of the vessel was delayed about two years. This delay caused the parties on May 10, 1894, to execute a written memorandum modifying the original contract in one respect only, but providing that in all other respects it should remain unchanged and unaffected in its legal effect. The agreement of modification was to this effect:

It was agreed that the payment of the last three installments of the contract price and the reservations of 10 per cent in previous payments should not be withheld until after the preliminary trial and conditional acceptance of the vessel, but that the Government would pay the contractor at once these installments and reservations, retaining only a sufficient sum to cover the special reserve of $60,000, the cost of all unfinished work, all deductions likely to be made on account of deficiencies in speed, and other contingencies that might arise. In such event the building company was to give the Government a bond with approved security for indemnity against loss or injury by reason of the payment. The shipbuilding company, in consideration of these advance payments, released the Government from every claim for loss or damage occasioned by its failure to furnish armor as contemplated in the original agreement.

The ship was finally completed and accepted on the 18th of May, 1896, at which time the Government paid the Cramp Shipbuilding Co. the reserved balance of the $60,000, and received from that company a release forever discharging and releasing the United States of and from "all and all manner of debts, dues, sums, and sums of money, accounts, reckonings, claims, and demands whatsoever, in law or in equity, for or by reason of or on account of the construction of said vessel under the contract aforesaid."

This release was signed and sealed by Charles H. Cramp, president of the company, and delivered to the Department of the Navy. There was nothing unconscionable in this contract. It is not claimed that, notwithstanding the delay, the Cramp Shipbuilding Co. did not make a good profit in the performance of it. It is not claimed that it was deceived by any misrepresentations into making it. No action to re-form the contract or be relieved from its terms because of fraud, mistake, or duress was ever begun in any court of equity. No proceeding of that kind was ever hinted at or suggested. At the time of final acceptance of the vessel and payment of the balance due the Cramp Shipbuilding Co. executed this full and sweeping release, without asserting or suggesting that it had sustained damages. It received the money, executed the release, and delivered over the vessel to the Government without making any such claim. These things were done under and within the clear provisions of the contract itself.

But after a whole year and a quarter had passed this company began a suit against the Government in the Court of Claims.

It was not referred there by Congress. They began an original suit there in which the company asked judgment for the sum of $480,231.

To show the character of this claim, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to some of the items specified in the petition which it filed:

It says its business was so large that in order to obtain more room for materials for the vessels under construction, of which the Indiana was one, it purchased additional ground at a cost of $121,756.03 and erected thereon shops in which to handle material at an additional cost of $3,000, and it wants to be reimbursed the sums it thus paid out for enlarging its own plant. It apportioned and charged up to this vessel a proportionate share of the value of the use of its yard, its tools, and machinery, the cost of superintendence, and the general upkeep of its yard for the period of two years, for which it asked $72,000. It asked $48,000 more for the care and protection of the vessel for two years; $23,360 more for wharfage, which is the amount a merchant vessel of the same tonnage would have had to pay in the port of Philadelphia while stopping there on a commercial voyage; it asked to be reimbursed over $5,000 for tug service not incurred in construction of the vessel but expended for its own benefit and convenience independently of the construction of this vessel; it wanted pay for dredging the basin occupied by the vessel and repayment of the insurance it had paid on the vessel for the period of two years immediately preceding the acceptance by the Government. It took the contract to build this vessel at its own risk and responsibility.

The Court of Claims found in its favor, by what seemed to me a very strange sort of computation, for $135,560, and entered judgment against the Government for that amount from which an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, which reversed the judgment on the merits and remanded the case with instructions to enter a judgment on the findings for the Government.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court, which was unanimous, and the court says, among other things:

To rightly understand the scope of this release we must consider the conditions of the contract and especially the clause in it which calls for a release. The contract was a large one, the price to be paid for the work and material being over $3,000,000, and the contract was evidently designed to cover all contingencies. Provision was made for changes in the specifications, for penalties on account of delays of the contractor, deductions in price on certain conditions, approval of the work by the Secretary of the Navy, forfeiture of the contract, with authority to the Secretary to complete the vessel. The last paragraph contains the stipulations as to the amounts and times of payment with authority for increase of the gross amount upon certain conditions. The sixth clause of this paragraph makes special provision for the last payment, to be made—

The court quotes there the contract—

"when all the conditions, covenants, and provisions of said contract shall have been performed and fulfilled by and on the part of the party of the first part" and "on the execution of a final release to the United States in such form as shall be approved by the Secretary of the Navy, of all claims of any kind or description under or by virtue of said contract." Evidently the parties contemplated and specially provided by this stipulation that the whole matter of the contract should be ended at the time of the final release and the last payment. That which was to be released was "all claims of any kind or description under or by virtue of said contract." Manifestly included within this was every claim arising not merely from a change in the specifications, but also growing out of the delay caused by the Government. The language is not alone "claims under," but "claims by virtue" of the contract—"claims of any kind or description." All the claims for which allowances were made in the judgment of the Court of Claims come within one or the other of these clauses. It may be that, strictly speaking, they were not claims under the contract, but they were clearly claims by virtue of the contract. Without it no such claims could have arisen. Now, it having been provided in advance that the contract should be closed up by the execution of a release of this kind it can not be that the company, when it signed the release, understood that some different kind of release was contemplated. It must have understood that it was the release required by the contract—a release intended to be of all claims of any kind or description under or by virtue of the contract, and that the form of words which the Secretary had approved was used to express that purpose. With that release stipulated for in the contract the company signed the instrument of May 18, 1896, which in terms purported to "remise, release, and forever discharge the United States of and from all manner of debts, dues, sum and sums of money, accounts, reckonings, claims, and demands whatsoever in law or in equity, for or by reason of or on account of the construction of said vessel under the contract aforesaid." Now, whatever limitation may be placed upon the words "for" or "on account of" the construction of the provision for the release of all claims and demands whatsoever, "by reason of the construction of the vessel under the contract aforesaid," is a recognition of the contract, and includes claims which arise by reason of the construction of the vessel under it. "By reason of" may well be considered as equivalent to "by virtue of." It is only by reason of the performance of the contract in the construction of the vessel that these claims arise. But for the contract and the construction of the vessel under it there would be no such claims. No payment of moneys not due is necessary to sustain this release. It is under seal, and the contract is itself full consideration. As of significance it must be borne in mind that the release referred specifically to the provisons in the sixth paragraph of the nineteenth clause of the contract which provided for the character of the release. Indeed, the general language of the release itself and the number of words of description in it show that it was the intent of the Secretary of the Navy to have a final closing of all matters arising under or by virtue of the contract.

Stipulations of this kind are not to be shorn of their efficiency by any narrow, technical, and close construction. The general language "all and all manner of debts," etc., indicates an intent to make an ending of every matter arising under or by virtue of the contract. If parties intend to leave some things open and unsettled their intent so to do should be made manifest. Here was a contract involving $3,000,000, and after the work was done, the vessel delivered and accepted and this release entered, claims are presented amounting to over $500,000. Surely the parties never intended to leave such a bulk of unsettled matters. As bearing upon this matter, it may be noticed that while the release was signed and the contract between the building company and the Government closed on May 18, 1896, this action was not brought until August 10, 1897, nearly a year and a quarter thereafter.

We are of opinion that the parties by the release of May 18, 1896, which was executed in performance of the requirements of the original contract, settled all disputes between the parties as to the claims sued upon.

The judgment of the Court of Claims is reversed and the case remanded with instructions to enter a judgment on the findings for the defendant.

Now, Mr. President, this powerful claimant voluntarily chose the forum in which to have the merits of its claim adjudicated. It brought the suit which terminated in this adverse decision by the highest judicial tribunal in the land. That court construed the contract and held that the claim could not be sustained under the law of the land. Ex parte affidavits made by Admiral Hichborn, Charles H. Cramp, and Lewis Nixon, who at the time of the building of the vessel was an employee of the Cramp Shipbuilding Co., and an affidavit of ex-Secretary Herbert have been obtained since the Supreme Court rendered the final decision in the case to support a contention that the contract meant something different, or that the parties to it had a different intention in agreeing to it than its clear and unequivocal language shows, and that it was not intended to mean what it plainly says and what the Supreme Court says it means. But these affidavits are utterly worthless so far as they are intended to vary the plain terms of this long since executed contract by parole. Every lawyer knows that. The claim amounts to nothing more than a bounty or donation, and why should Congress give it to these claimants? What private suitor who had failed upon the merits to obtain a judgment would ask the successful defendant to make him a present of the amount in controversy?

This shipbuilding company has enjoyed a special privilege under the navigation laws of this country for years.

Mr. President, the present occupant of the chair will remember this incident. A few months ago an American citizen, who had purchased a foreign-built ship, appeared before the Senate Committee on Commerce in behalf of a bill which would admit this vessel to American registry. He was to expend a substantial sum of money in American shipyards in rebuilding and repairing this secondhand vessel. Nevertheless, a representative of this powerful shipbuilding company appeared and protested against the registry of this foreign-built vessel. I say it has enjoyed, and does now enjoy, a special privilege which makes the cost of building vessels in American shipyards 100 per cent higher than the same vessels would cost in foreign shipyards—a privilege which has made it impossible to build and maintain American vessels in over-seas trade. On top of this special privilege it asks for this gratuity, for it is nothing more than a donation.

Why should it receive such a favor? It is said that at other times, in connection with the construction of other vessels, this company and other shipbuilders have received donations of this kind. If that be true, there was never a better time than now to stop the bad practice. If instead of being a great and powerful shipbuilding company this claimant was a poor and obscure citizen, his claim would not be considered for a moment.

I call to mind many really pathetic cases of humble claimants who have had claims pending before Congress for years, in which there is no legal basis for the claims, but where there is much in the situation of the parties and the circumstances surrounding them to call forth the deepest sympathy and touch any heart that is human. I have in my mind now a helpless woman of culture and refinement, whose husband, while serving his country abroad as a consul, met with serious losses occasioned by the fluctuation and depreciation of the rupees in which his salary was paid; a splendid man who, in entertaining visiting Americans who came to Bombay, used funds which he had received as fees and perquisites—according to a custom which had previously prevailed—but for which he was required to account. To save his bondsmen from loss he returned to the United States and sold all the property he had in the world, including his homestead. He died penniless and of a broken heart. The widow, who survived him, presented a claim for the amount he had lost through the depreciation of the money paid to him as a salary. She has told her pathetic story over and over again to members of the committee and other Senators—session after session, year after year, for many years. She is now an old woman whose bodily and mental health is fading away under the long strain, the disappointment, the long-deferred hope, and sickness of heart. Her sweet face and thin figure haunt the corridors of the Senate Office Building year after year. I would be glad to see her receive something, even though it be a bounty or donation, but she has never been able to get a majority of the committee to authorize a favorable report of her claim. We shall miss her one of these days, when, with a broken heart, she shall have gone to join her broken-hearted husband in the grave.

Ah, Mr. President, shall we pass the cries of a poor woman like this unheeded and yet give ear to a demand like this of the Cramp Shipbuilding Co., because it is great and powerful and can secure the services of lawyers and lobbyists and recommendations from men of high station and influence? Shall we refuse to give to a beautiful, sweet-faced, broken-hearted woman a pittance of $5,000 and then grant to this great company a bounty or donation of $135,000? I do not believe the Senate will do such a thing as that.

The Committee on Claims was not in favor of doing it, and made this report.

I insist on the indefinite postponement of this bill.

Special privilege leads to just such unjust discriminations as this, and I say to you that the American people are determined to abolish special privilege. This is a good place to begin.

I ask for a vote on the motion to indefinitely postpone the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a word. I agree with the Senator that the contract was specific, and I so stated in the opening. It was found by the Court of Claims that it was specific, and the bill does not provide for any of the items mentioned by the Senator, with the exception of those that were found to be due the company by the Court of Claims.

Mr. CRAWFORD. They are all set forth in the findings of the Court of Claims and in the record, and they are taken from the petition which the claimant had filed.

Mr. SMOOT. I said the bill does not include any item, with the exception of those items that the Court of Claims found was due the company.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator permit me there to make just a comment in three words?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The title of this bill contains a falsehood. The title of the bill purports to give effect to the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the contractors for building the United States battleship Indiana, when at the time the bill was introduced there were no such findings in its favor, because they had been reversed by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and until we went in and found that decision of the Supreme Court reversing those findings the Senate might have been led, from the title of the bill, into a belief that it was resting upon the valid findings and judgment of the Court of Claims.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply want to state again that the bill provides for one hundred and thirty-five thousand and some odd dollars, and that was the amount the Court of Claims found due the Cramp Co., and the items are stated in detail by the Court of Claims in the findings.

I admit, as I stated before, that the Supreme Court of the United States reversed the judgment of the Court of Claims. I did, however, refer to a letter from Justice Brewer, who wrote the opinion, in relation to what the reasons of the Supreme Court were in reversing the decision.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The letter from Mr. Justice Brewer was drawn out by soliciting him in a letter written to him by the attorney of record in the Cramp ship case, who was disappointed over his loss of the decision in the Supreme Court.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know what drew it out. I can not say. But I say this copy of the letter is in the report, and I made my report upon the bill based upon all the information that I could receive from the Navy Department officials.

I wish to say to the Senator that it makes no difference to me who the person is or what company it is that tries to collect a claim from the Government of the United States, they all stand upon the same footing, whether it is a small claim or whether it is a large claim. If it is a just claim it should be paid, and if it is an unjust claim it ought not to be paid.

Mr. President, without taking the time of the Senate further, I ask that, in connection with what I have just stated, the report submitted by me in 1908 be printed as a part of my remarks. That report gives a complete history of this case from the standpoint of the Navy Department officials. As I have already said, this company is only asking the same treatment the Government has already accorded to other concerns which found themselves in exactly the same condition. They were all paid by the Government, with the exception of Cramp & Sons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON in the chair). Without objection, the report referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The report referred to is as follows:

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 3126:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred Senate bill 3126, have had the same under consideration and beg leave to submit the following report:

This is a claim by the builders of the battleship Indiana seeking reimbursement of the expenses they were put to for the care, maintenance, preservation, insurance, and wharfage during a delay of two years after the expiration of the contract period, brought about by the failure of the United States to furnish them with the armor "in the time and in the order necessary to carry on the work properly," as it had covenanted and agreed to do. The Court of Claims, after a protracted trial, found that the necessary and reasonable costs during this delay, which they found was solely and entirely due to the fault of the United States, amounted to $177,823.55, but on account of a release given on May 10, 1894, at the time of an advance payment, by which the builders agreed to waive so much of the claim as accrued prior to that date, the court allowed only the expenses incurred after that date for a period of one year six months and nine days, and gave judgment for the sum of $135,560. (See findings of Court of Claims accompanying this report marked "Exhibit A.") The case was appealed to the Supreme Court, and that court reversed the judgment upon the sole ground that a final receipt and release given May 19, 1896, upon the payment to the builders of the balance of the contract price, viz, $41,132.80, was intended by the parties to be a final settlement of the present claim, which the Court of Claims found amounted to $177,823.55 additional. The equities were not considered by that court, as fully appears in the correspondence between Mr. Justice Brewer, who delivered the opinion, and one of the counsel for the company, accompanying this report, marked "Exhibit B."

The builders now ask that Congress, upon equitable grounds, shall reimburse them for these expenses, and they file in support of their petition the affidavits of ex-Secretary of the Navy, Gen. Tracy; his assistants, Admiral Hichborn, Chief of the Bureau of Construction, and ex-Naval Constructor Nixon, who designed the vessel, being all the Government officers that had any part in the preparation of the contract; of ex-Secretary Herbert, who took the receipt, and Mr. Charles H. Cramp, president of the company, who signed both contract and receipt, each and all unanimously declaring in specific terms that it was never the intent of either of the parties to the contract, by the giving or accepting of the receipt, to in any way waive, bar, or settle the claim now presented. (See Exhibits C, D, E, F, and G herewith.)

This evidence was not before the Supreme Court, and the facts now presented differ in this material respect from the case as presented to that court. The delays in furnishing the armor were caused by the praiseworthy desire of Secretary Tracy to obtain for these new vessels of war the most invulnerable armor that it was possible to procure. At that time the subject of armor plate was in its infancy and new processes of its manufacture were being devised and presented to the department for adoption. A series of exhaustive tests and experiments were made, which consumed most of the contract period, and it was not until February, 1893, that the Secretary finally adopted the nickel-steel harveyized armor, and that surpassed all armor in any of the navies of the world. These delays had a similar effect upon the builders of the Oregon, Maine, Terror, and Texas, and these were the only vessels that were delayed from this cause aside from the Indiana and Massachusetts, built by the Cramp Co. The Richmond Locomotive Works, builders of the machinery for the Texas, and N. F. Palmer & Co. (the Quintard Iron Works), builders of the machinery of the Maine, have both been reimbursed by special acts of Congress on the recommendation of Secretaries Herbert, Morton, and Moody—notwithstanding they signed precisely the same final receipts and releases. (See Richmond case, 30 Stat., 1431; Palmer case, 33 Stat., 1397.)

The Pneumatic Gun Cariage Co., builders of the Terror, recovered judgment in the Court of Claims, notwithstanding they signed the identical form of final receipt and release, that court holding, as it did in the Indiana case, that it did not relate to this class of claims, and Attorney General Griggs acquiesced in that decision and declined to appeal the case, and that company was paid. (36 C. C. Rep., p. 71.) The Union Iron Works, by a supplemental contract relieved the United States of its obligation to take the vessel without armor, as Article III of the contract provided, and in lieu thereof accepted a contract with Secretary Tracy by which the United States was to pay these expenses monthly as the delays occurred, and that company was so paid. (See affidavit ex-Secretary Tracy, Exhibit C.) The Cramp Co. relied upon the obligation of the United States to take the vessel without armor, under Article III, and the Secretary concurred in this view of the obligation of the United States and went so far as to detail officers to supervise the erection of temporary facilities to take the vessel to sea and weight it down to its normal draft, which was done at an additional expense to the builders of $17,000 (see twelfth findings, Court of Claims, Exhibit A), but on May 1, 1894, he arbitrarily refused to permit a trial trip to be made because, in his judgment, the interests of the United States would be best subserved by delaying the trial trip until the vessel was fully completed, with all the armor on.

It is shown by the affidavits of Admiral Hichborn (Exhibit D) and Secretary Tracy (Exhibit C) that the United States had no navy yard at which these vessels could be taken care of. It may be that the company had the right to cut the vessel loose and let her float down the Delaware River to its destruction, but the United States then owed the company upward of $500,000 for work already performed and unpaid for, and the United States had already paid $2,300,000 on account of its construction, and to save this amount of Government property from destruction the company yielded to the request of the Secretary and cared for, preserved, and maintained the vessel at their yard for an additional one year, six months, and nine days, at an expense of $135,560, as found by the Court of Claims. Your committee can not believe that the company should now be punished for the performance of this most praiseworthy and patriotic action, nor should the technical receipt be held to prevail over the conspicuous equities of the case. It may be true that a contractor should be careful in the wording of papers that he signs, but if through want of care or inadvertence the receipt does not express the real intent of the parties to it, it would be extremely unfair, if not positively dishonest, for one of the parties to try to enforce it against the other contrary to the intent of both.

Your committee therefore report back Senate bill 3126 favorably and recommend that it do pass.

EXHIBIT A.

FINDINGS OF FACT BY THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

[Court of Claims. No. 20858. (Decided January 29, 1906.) The William Cramp & Sons Ship & Engine Building Co. v. The United States.]

This case having been heard by the Court of Claims, the court, upon the evidence, makes the following

FINDINGS OF FACT.

I. The claimant herein is a corporation incorporated under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, and carries on the business of ship and engine building, with its yards and plant and works located in the city of Philadelphia, in said State.

II. On November 19, 1890, the claimant entered into a contract with the United States, through their Secretary of the Navy, whereby, in consideration of the sum of $3,063,000, to be paid as provided in said contract, it agreed to construct and complete within three years from said date as in said contract provided, a seagoing, coastline battleship, designated as No. 1, and subsequently named the Indiana, all in accordance with the specifications attached to and made a part of said contract, which contract, marked "Exhibit W. C. & S. No. 1," is annexed to and made a part of the petition herein.

III. Immediately after the making of said contract the claimant arranged and systematized a working program for the construction of said vessel by organizing its working force so as to cooperate with each other in harmony on coordinate work, and to secure economy in the construction of the vessel within the contract time and to escape the penalties imposed thereby for delays. The claimant would have completed the vessel within the contract period if it had not been for the failure of the United States to furnish materials within the time and in the order to properly carry on the work, which by the terms of the contract they had agreed to furnish.

By reason of the failure of the defendants to furnish the materials, which by the third clause of the contract they had agreed to furnish, within the time and in the order as aforesaid, the completion of the vessel was delayed for two years beyond the contract period.

The armor to be furnished in accordance with said clause of the contract was obtained by the defendants from other contractors, who, without any fault on the part of the claimant, failed to complete the manufacture thereof in time for the defendants to deliver the same to the claimant as they had agreed to do.

The various kinds of armor, including the necessary bolts, nuts, etc., were delivered as follows:

Diagonal armor, beginning June 6, 1892, and ending July 3, 1892.
Casemate armor, beginning March 16, 1893, and ending May 1, 1893.
Conning tower tube, May 1, 1893.
Barbette armor, beginning July 10, 1893, and ending September 23, 1893.
Sponson armor, beginning December 2, 1893, and ending March 24, 1894.
Ammunition tubes, beginning April 24, 1894, and ending May 22, 1894.
Eight-inch turret, beginning September 22, 1894, and ending December 7, 1894.
Conning tower shield and covers, complete, October 5, 1894.
Side armor, beginning August 13, 1894, and ending August 6, 1895.
Thirteen-inch turrets, beginning May 16, 1895, and ending September 5, 1895.

IV. On December 4, 1895, and after the completion and delivery of the vessel at the time hereinafter stated, the Secretary of the Navy decided that the cause of delay for the period of two years in the completion of the vessel was due to the failure of the United States to furnish the claimant the materials contracted to be furnished by them within the time and in the order to properly carry on the work; and for that reason the time within which to complete the vessel, and thereby release the claimant from the penalties provided for in the nineteenth paragraph of the contract, was on said date extended by the Secretary of the Navy a corresponding length of time, to wit, to November 19, 1895, on which latter date the vessel so contracted for was completed and delivered.

V. On May 10, 1894, before the Secretary of the Navy had finally decided the cause of delay, as aforesaid, and before there had been a preliminary or conditional acceptance of the vessel, owing to the failure of the defendants to furnish, in the order required, the material which they had agreed to furnish, the contract was modified, which modification is made a part of the petition herein and marked "Exhibit W. C. & S. No. 2," by the terms of which modification the defendants agreed to pay the claimant a portion of the reservations of installments, which under the original contract were not payable, as therein set forth, until after a preliminary or conditional acceptance of the vessel; and $234,830, being the amount of the reservations of the first 23 out of the 27 installments earned by the claimant, were paid on or about June 20, 1894. The claimant, as provided in the modification aforesaid, furnished security against any loss to the defendants on account of such payment, but no demand for any refund was ever made upon it. In consideration of the payment aforesaid, the claimant, as recited in said modification, released the defendants "from all and every claim for loss or damage hitherto sustained by reason of any failure on the part of the" defendants to comply with its contract, "or on account of any delay hitherto occasioned" by them.

To the modification of the contract and the release as aforesaid the claimant at the time does not appear to have made objection or protest.

VI. On May 18, 1896, after the completion and delivery of the vessel, in accordance with the sixth paragraph of the nineteenth clause of the contract, the balance of the money due thereunder, but withheld in accordance therewith until the final acceptance of the vessel, was paid to the claimant and the same was accepted and a release and receipt was executed therefor by it in the terms following:

"Whereas by the eleventh clause of the contract dated November 19, 1890, by and between the William Cramp & Sons Ship & Engine Building Co., a corporation created under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, and doing business at Philadelphia, in said State, represented by the president of said company, party of the first part, and the United States, represented by the Secretary of the Navy, party of the second part, for the construction of a seagoing coast-line battleship of about 10,000 tons displacement, which, for the purpose of said contract is designated and known as 'coast-line battleship No. 1,' it is agreed that a special reserve of $60,000 shall be held until the vessel shall have been finally tried; provided that such final trial shall take place within five months from and after the date of the preliminary or the conditional acceptance of the vessel; and

"Whereas by the sixth paragraph of the nineteenth clause of said contract it is further provided that when all the conditions, covenants, and provisions of said contract shall have been performed and fulfilled by and on the part of the party of the first part, said party of the first part shall be entitled, within 10 days after the filing and acceptance of its claim, to receive the said special reserve or so much thereof as it may be entitled to on the execution of a final release to the United States in such form as shall be approved by the Secretary of the Navy of all claims of any kind or description under or by virtue of said contract; and

"Whereas the final trial of said vessel was completed on the 11th day of April, 1896; and

"Whereas all the conditions, covenants, and provisions of said contract have been performed and fulfilled by and on the part of the party of the first part:

"Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises, the sum of $41,132.86, the balance of the aforesaid special reserve ($60,000), to which the party of the first part is entitled, being to me in hand paid by the United States, represented by the Secretary of the Navy, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, the William Cramp & Sons Ship & Engine Building Co., represented by me, Charles H. Cramp, president of said corporation, does hereby for itself and its successors and assigns, and its legal representatives, remise, release, and forever discharge the United States of and from all and all manner of debts, dues, sums and sums of money, accounts, reckonings, claims, and demands whatsoever, in law or in equity, for or by reason of, or on account of, the construction of said vessel under the contract aforesaid.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the William Cramp & Sons Ship & Engine Building Co. this 18th day of May, A. D. 1896.

"[SEAL.] "CHAS. H. CRAMP, President.

"Attest:

"JOHN DOUGHERTY, Secretary." to the giving of which release and receipt the claimant does not appear at the time to have objected or protested.

VII. Before and during the period of delay, as aforesaid, the claimant's business was so large that in order to obtain more room for materials for the vessels under construction at the claimant's yard, of which the Indiana was one, it purchased additional ground at a cost of $121,756.03, and erected thereon temporary shops, in which to handle and rehandle material, at an additional cost of $3,000. It is not shown that the purchase of said real estate was necessary to the construction of the Indiana, or that any portion of the outlay therefor was attributable to the vessel during the period of delay.

VIII. After the expiration of the contract period and during the two years that the vessel was delayed in completion, as hereinbefore found, the reasonable value for the use of the claimant's yard, machinery, and for superintendence in the construction of the vessel, including the general upkeep of the yard chargeable to the Indiana, was $3,000 per month, or $72,000 for the two years' delay.

The proportion of said expenses chargeable to the Indiana from May 10, 1894, the date of the release set forth in Finding VI, being for one year six months and nine days, was $54,887.67.

IX. For the proper care and protection of the vessel during the two years' delay, including expense of cleaning the bottom, furnishing material and painting, temporary awnings and tents over caps left for the introduction of turrets, additional scaling to remove rust before painting, electric lighting, keeping up steam to prevent freezing of valves, wetting down decks, going over machinery, and keeping vessel free from snow, dust, ice, and débris, the reasonable cost was $48,000.

The proportion of said expenses for the period from May 10, 1894, being for one year six months and nine days, was $36,591.78.

X. The customary rate of wharfage of merchant vessels at the port of Philadelphia during the time the Indiana was being constructed was 1 cent per net registered ton, and upon that basis, if allowed, the wharfage on the Indiana, with a net tonnage which we find was 3,203.58, during said two years' delay was $32 a day, or $23,360.

The proportion of expense during the period from May 10, 1894, being for one year six months and nine days, was $17,808, inclusive of the dredging of the basin or bed in which to accommodate the vessel.

The claimant also incurred an expense of $5,783 for tug service in removal of the vessel from time to time. Such expense is not shown to have been necessary to the construction of the vessel during the period of delay. It appears to have been for the benefit and convenience of the claimant.

XI. During the two years' delay the claimant was required to and did keep the vessel insured for the benefit and protection of the United States, and the reasonable cost thereof aggregated during said period the sum of $34,463.55.

The proportionate expense for the period from May 10, 1894, being one year six months and nine days, was $26,272.55.

XII. March 23, 1894, the claimant notified the Secretary of the Navy that the vessel, other than the fitting of the armor, had reached a stage of completion ready for an official trial and proposed to offer said vessel therefor between May 1 and 10 following.

Seven other vessels built by the claimant for the United States had been permitted to go on trial trips before their completion. The Indiana was the first battleship constructed, and before the armor was completed thereon the claimant proposed an official trial.

March 9, 1894, the Secretary of the Navy addressed to the claimant the following letter:

WASHINGTON, March 9, 1894.

GENTLEMEN: In view of the fact that the trial of the Indiana will take place at an early date, and as you are probably now making preparation therefor, your attention is invited to the tenth clause of the contract for the construction of that vessel, which provides that the expenses of a successful trial of the vessel shall be borne by the Government.

With a view to an expeditious settlement of the bill for the trial expenses of the vessel after the trial shall have taken place, the department has to-day directed Chief Engineer J. W. Thomson and Naval Constructor J. F. Hanscom, United States Navy, to inform themselves as to what expenses you incur in preparing the vessel for trial, on the trial, and in furnishing the supplies of all kinds to be used, in order that they may be able to report to the department after such examination, if any, as they may be required to make of your bill as to whether the items included therein are properly chargeable to the Government, and as to whether the prices charged therefor are proper and reasonable.

The department requests that you will confer with the above-named officers in regard to the expenses necessary to be incurred in the trial of the Indiana and afford them such information as will enable them to fully comply with the department's instructions, as above stated.

Very respectfully,

H. A. HERBERT,
Secretary of the Navy.

The WILLIAM CRAMP & SONS
SHIP & ENGINE BUILDING CO.,
Philadelphia, Pa.

The expense so incurred was verified by such officers and no objection was found to the amount thereof. But in the meantime the Secretary of the Navy was in doubt as to whether the vessel was ready for such official trial, and to ascertain that fact did, on April 12, 1894, appoint a board, consisting of three naval officers, to inquire into the matter.

The board made such inquiry, and on April 18, 1894, reported to the Secretary that the hull of the vessel was about eighty-four one-hundredths completed, and that but one-half of the armor had been fitted in place. The board unanimously reported that the vessel was not then and would not be by May 1, 1894, ready for the official trial trip in accordance with the tenth article of the contract, and that such trial should not, in the interest of the Government, take place until the vessel was fully completed and ready for delivery.

Upon that report the Secretary acted, refusing to give his approval to the proposed trial, and the same was not made.

If the claimant is entitled to recover the expense so incurred in the preparation for the preliminary trial of the vessel, the amount as verified by the officers of the Navy and which we find reasonable was $17,514.94.

XIII. The items of cost and expense set forth in the several findings herein, both upon the basis of two years' delay and of one year six months and nine days' delay, are as follows:

Finding.	Item.	Two years.	One year 6 months and 9 days.
VIII	Superintendence and upkeep of yard	$72,000.00	$54,887.67
IX	Protection of vessel, cleaning, painting, etc	48,000.00	36,591.78
X	Wharfage of vessel	23,300.00	17,808.00
XI	Insurance on vessel	34,463.55	26,272.55
		177,833.55	135,560.00

CONCLUSION OF LAW.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact the court decides as a conclusion of law that the claimant is entitled to recover against the United States the loss and damage sustained by it during the delay of one year six months and nine days, as set forth in Finding XIII, the sum of $135,560.

LETTER OF MR. JUSTICE BREWER, SUPREME COURT.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., December 17, 1907.

MY DEAR MR. FAY: Do not think I have neglected the matter to which you called my attention a few nights since. I spoke first to some of the brethren individually and finally I brought the matter up before the court in conference. The brethren without dissent advised me not to write the letter you suggest. There is nothing in the opinion which ignores the equity upon which you rely and of course nothing to intimate that Congress can not if it sees fit grant all the relief desired.

The brethren thought it would be unwise to intimate that Congress might or ought to act in the matter, and prefer to leave it for the action of that body, based upon such showing of the facts as can be made. It is not to be supposed, of course, that Congress will not be willing to do what is right in the premises.

I return herewith the inclosures in your letter, thinking that you may have use for them in your further efforts.

Very truly, yours,

DAVID J. BREWER.

HON. JOHN C. FAY,
Glover Building, 1419 F Street.

EXHIBIT C.

AFFIDAVIT OF HON. BENJAMIN F. TRACY, EX-SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
County of New York, Borough of Manhattan, ss:

Benjamin F. Tracy, being duly sworn, says:

That he was Secretary for the Department of the Navy of the United States during the administration of the late President Harrison.

That as such Secretary, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 30, 1890, for the building of battleships for the Navy, he, on or about the 19th day of November, 1890, entered into three contracts for the building of battleships designated as Nos. 1, 2, and 3; said battleships were to be built according to the same plans and specifications and were identical in all respects. Contracts for battleships Nos. 1 and 2, subsequently named the Indiana and the Massachusetts, were made with the William Cramp & Sons Ship & Engine Building Co., of Philadelphia, Pa. A contract in identical form for battleship No. 3, afterwards named the Oregon, was made with the Union Iron Works, of San Francisco, Cal. By provisions in these three contracts the United States was to furnish all the heavy armor and each vessel was to be completed within three years from the date of contract, under onerous penalties against contractor for delay, the United States agreeing to furnish the armor and their accessories within the "time and in order to carry on the work properly." Each contract provided for the accepting of the vessel by the United States without armor in case its building was delayed by the default of the United States in furnishing armor, and each contract provided in similar terms for a final receipt of all claims of any kind or description under or by virtue of the contract.

Before and at the time of making these contracts "all-steel" armor had been the standard in the Navy, it being considered the best then known, but in 1889 his attention had been directed to nickel steel and the so-called Harvey process, and early in 1890 he had begun an investigation as to their respective merits which had proceeded so far as to have resulted in a comparative test between the compound steel, the all steel, and the nickel steel at Annapolis, September 18–22, 1890, as set forth in his annual report of 1890, and in consequence Congress had appropriated $1,000,000 for the purchase of nickel metal; but deponent was unwilling to determine definitely upon the character of armor to be applied to the new battleships without further tests, experiments, and investigation both as to nickel steel and the Harvey process, and to leave the department free to continue these investigations when he came to make the contracts of November 19, 1890, for the Indiana, Massachusetts, and Oregon, the proviso of Article III, binding the Government to accept the vessels without armor, if the United States was unable to supply it in the time and in the order to carry on the work properly, was inserted so as not to impose upon the builders the necessary expense of the care of the vessels during the time required for the Government experiments calculated to obtain the very best armor.

After these contracts were let he proceeded with further tests of both nickel steel and the harveyized nickel steel and the various other kinds of armor, which continued up to July 30, 1892, as set forth in detail in his annual reports of 1890, 1891, and 1892, before he reached the conclusion to adopt the harveyized nickel-steel armor, and, accordingly, in February, 1893, made contracts for the production of this character of armor. During all this time the coordinate work on these vessels had been progressing satisfactorily to the department, and it became evident that this decision would result in a very considerable delay in their completion, and that the necessary cost of their care, maintenance, preservation, insurance, and extra dockage and wharfage during this period of delay would amount to a large sum, and the United States having no proper facilities at its navy yards to take over these vessels in their unfinished condition and care for and complete them, all of which being brought to his attention by the builders of the Oregon, he entered into the supplemental contract attached hereto with that company, by which these several expenses were to be currently ascertained and paid by the United States, and he is informed and believes they were so paid. That a similar supplementary contract would have been made by him with the Cramp Co. for the Indiana and Massachusetts if it had been brought to his attention.

That the sixth clause of Article XIX of the contract was an old form that had been in use in Navy contracts for many years, and, while it was very properly applicable when the builder furnished all the material and labor for the construction of a vessel, was not, standing alone, very appropriate for a contract where part of the material was to be furnished by the United States; but it was never intended by him to impose upon the builder the loss, expense, or damage that accrued to it by reason of the failure of the United States to perform its part of the contract. He can confidently state that at the time of making these contracts that, by providing for this final receipt and release, it was not the purpose, intent, or design of either party to the contract that it should extend to or cover damages which the contractor might sustain by reason of the failure of the Government to perform the contract on its part, nor is he aware that the department in any case has so construed a similar final release or receipt.

BENJAMIN F. TRACY.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 31st day of October, A. D. 1907.

Notary Public, New York County.

EXHIBIT D.

AFFIDAVIT OF ADMIRAL PHILIP HICHBORN, UNITED STATES NAVY, RETIRED, LATE CHIEF OF THE BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ss:

Philip Hichborn, of the city of Washington, being duly sworn, says:

That he is on the retired list of the United States Navy, having been retired while chief constructor, after a service in its construction corps of more than 30 years.

That he was intimately connected with the building of the so-called "New Navy" from its inception to the time of his retirement from active service, as member of the Naval Advisory Board, Assistant to Chief, and afterwards Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair.

That during the preparartion of the contracts for the Indiana, Massachusetts, and Oregon he was, either personally or through his assistants, in constant communication with the Secretary and the Judge Advocate General as to their terms, but more particularly as to technical parts of it, although the whole contract was referred to him for examination and report and was carefully examined and considered before it was finally signed.

That he distinctly recalls the fact that Article III, providing for a trial trip without armor, was fully discussed, and its purpose to avoid entailing the costs and expenses arising from delays in the delivery of armor upon the contractors was well understood by all parties connected with the contract, and some additional language was inserted at Mr. Cramp's suggestion to render the understanding clearer.

The sixth clause of Article XIX was an old form in use for many years in the Navy Department, and at no time during the preparation of the contract did he ever hear any of the officers of the department who had any hand in the preparation of the contract suggest that it might be so construed as to require release of any damages that might accrue to the contractors from any breach of the contract on the part of the United States as a condition to final payment; he certainly did not so understand it, nor does he believe that if such a construction of that clause had been avowed by the department, it would have been able to have secured a contract from any responsible shipbuilding concern in the country.

That after the armor had been so long delayed and the contract time had expired, and the time within which the armor could be secured was indefinite and uncertain, the company, under the special direction of officers of the Navy, charged with that duty by direction of the Secretary of the Navy, proceeded to install temporary work and weights down the Indiana for a trial trip without armor, under the provisions of the third article of the contract, and expended some $17,000 in such work, took her on a contractors' trial trip, and tendered her for official trial.

That deponent thought that such a trial in her unfinished condition would be of great service in developing the vessel and exhibiting any weak places or errors in design, and was strongly in favor of submitting her to trial irrespective of the provisions in the contract so to do, but the United States was not then equipped to take charge of the vessel and care for her during the subsequent delay which it was then well known was certain to continue for a very considerable length of time, and the Secretary, for reasons satisfactory to himself, through other agencies than the Bureau of Construction and Repair, declined to permit her to make a trial trip until finally completed.

Deponent further says that after the completion and acceptance of the vessel he was called upon to make up the final account, and in so doing he made no allowances for damages for delay, nor was the matter at all considered or embraced in the final account, for the reason that it had long been held in the department that the department had no authority or jurisdiction to entertain, audit, or consider such claims, nor was any appropriation available for their payment; that all claims of such character that had been or afterwards were during his term of office considered or audited by the department had been under special legislation giving the department jurisdiction in certain specified cases.

That he personally, by direction of the Secretary, examined the claim of the Indiana, and made a report to the Senate committee in the Fifty-fourth Congress, and from his examination he is able to say that the allowance by the Court of Claims is, in his judgment, fair and reasonable, and leaving out the item that he was unwilling to pass on for lack of evidence, and which was allowed by the court, an analysis of the award of the court shows it to be less than the report made by him as Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair.

AFFIDAVIT OF EX-NAVAL CONSTRUCTOR LEWIS NIXON.

STATE OF NEW YORK, Borough of Manhattan:

Lewis Nixon, of Tompkinsville, Staten Island, State of New York, being duly sworn, says that he is by occupation a shipbuilder; that he graduated at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, and the Royal Academy at Greenwich, England, and served in the United States Navy as an assistant naval constructor to about January 1, 1891; that in 1890 he was ordered to the Bureau of Construction and Repair in Washington, and was assigned to the duty of designing and preparing the plans and specifications of the coast-defense battleships provided for under the act of June 30, 1890, which designs were adopted, and the Indiana, Massachusetts, and Oregon were built thereunder; that in the formulation of the contracts for these vessels he was in constant and almost daily consultation with both Secretary Tracy and Judge Advocate General Remy; that he was deeply interested in the successful building of these battleships, both from a professional as well as a patriotic standpoint, and took great care and aimed to insert such stringent provisions as were calculated to stimulate the builders to great energy in speedily constructing the vessels, but not so harsh and unjust that might deter a shipbuilder from undertaking a contract, and with this end in view, at his suggestion, the obligation of the United States to furnish the armor at the time and in the order to carry on the work properly and the provision that, in default of so doing, the vessel was to be accepted without armor, were inserted, and to free this clause from any ambiguity the words "and to continue with reasonable diligence" were afterwards added in manuscript in the printed contract at the suggestion of Mr. C. H. Cramp before he signed the formal contract.

If this provision of the contract had been lived up to by the United States, no part of the claim or damage sued for in the Court of Claims ever would or could have arisen in behalf of the Cramp Co. for the expense of the care, preservation, and maintenance of the vessels which did accrue by reason of the delay in furnishing the armor would have been borne by the United States, as the contract intended to provide that it should be; that from his personal connection with the preparation of the contract and his intercourse and consultation with the Secretary and The Judge Advocate General he can confidently state that it never was the intention of the United States, as represented by its officers, as parties to the contract, that the provision for a final release, embodying in it as a condition precedent to the payment of the balance of the contract price, to require the release of or cover any claim for damage arising out of the breach of contract by the United States or exempt the United States from the cost and expense of the care, preservation, and maintenance of either of these vessels during the period of enforced delay occasioned by the inability of the United States to fulfil its part of its contract.

That shortly after the making of the contract, the Cramp Co. tendered to him the position of superintendent of their yard to supervise the building of these vessels, and, in his anxiety to see his designs successfully carried out, he resigned from the Navy, accepted the offer and built two of these vessels, the Indiana and Massachusetts. That when the delays began to accrue he pushed the coordinate work so that the vessels should have a preliminary trial trip, and with the sanction of the Secretary of the Navy and under the supervision of two naval officers specially directed by the Secretary to supervise the temporary work necessary to take the vessel to sea, performed all such necessary work on the Indiana and weighed her down to her normal draft, at an expense of $17,000, took her to sea on her contractors' trial trip and tendered for official trial, ready in all respects to make such trip without her armor; but the Secretary of the Navy declined to allow her to make a trial trip unless fully completed, utterly ignoring the provisions of article 3. That during all the time of the delays he had frequent consultations with the officers of the Construction Bureau and the Secretary, and while it was frankly conceded by all of them that very serious expenses were being necessarily incurred by reason thereof, it never was intimated that, by any construction of the contract, such expense was to be borne by or claim for them was to be waived by the contractor.

STATEMENT OF HON. H. A. HERBERT, EX-SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 16, 1907.

DEAR SIR: At the request of Messrs. Hunton & Creecy, I am condensing in a letter to you a statement made more at length in the correspondence between them and myself, which is to be filed with the committee.

Under the contract for the construction of the Indiana and all other armored ships the Government was to furnish and deliver at times and places as needed all heavy armor. When I became Secretary of the Navy the Government was far behind with its deliveries of armor for the Indiana, partly by reason of delays on the part of the armor contractors and partly because of experiments with a new process of harveyizing, which had been begun under Secretary Tracy and which were continued under me, thus causing further delay.

The Cramp Co., builders of the Indiana, in August, 1893, earnestly protested against further delay, asked to be furnished with nickel steel armor, as previously decided upon. On August 25, 1893, I, as Secretary, replied:

"The department thinks it for the best interests of the service that this armor should be harveyized, even if it should occasion some delay in the completion of the vessel, as you state."

I was deciding solely what was to the interests of the Government. The question of compensation to the contractors for losses that might result to them from enforced delays was not before me, nor had I as an executive officer any jurisdiction over that matter. But whenever I had occasion subsequently to consider this matter, my every act and deed showed that in my opinion the Government was responsible to the builders for all losses caused by its failure to comply with its contracts to deliver armor when required to do so under its contracts.

When, on May 10, 1894, I advanced to the Cramp Co. a considerable sum of money already earned but not then payable, I exacted from the company a release of the United States "from all and every claim for loss and damage hitherto sustained by reason of any failure" on their part or "on account of any delay hitherto occasioned by" their action.

The panic of 1893–94 was then on. The company was in urgent need of the money, and I thought the release of their claim for damages on account of the Government's delay was a valuable consideration for the advance payment of this money.

Again, on February 27, 1895, as Secretary I stated in a letter to the Naval Committee that I saw no objection to the passage of a bill which had been referred to me for the relief of the builders of the Texas, whose claim was exactly similar to that of the Cramp Co. in the matter of the Indiana.

Again, after this bill for the Texas was passed, Assistant Secretary McAdoo, December 20, 1895, reported that, "in the opinion of the department," the contractors were "justly and equitably entitled to $80,049.35."

Again, December 8, 1896, responding to an inquiry from Congress as to whether the claims of the builders of the Indiana and other vessels for damages incurred in like cases should be decided by Congress or the Court of Claims, as Secretary I stated that, "in my judgment, the interests of justice demand" that these cases should be referred to the Court of Claims, giving as my reason that the court could consider with more deliberation and care than the committees of Congress could.

Again, Chief Constructor Hichborn, then under me, February 9, 1897, recommended the payment of items on account of the losses of the Indiana of $97,214.85, and this without considering, as he said, another large amount which he thought the committee was more competent than he to investigate.

Thus, without a break, every act of the department touching this matter, when I presided over it, showed that, in its opinion, the builders had a just claim for the losses resulting to them from delays caused by the Government in furnishing armor according to its contracts.

The Supreme Court, however, decided in the Indiana case that by the final release stipulated for in the building contract and given when the last payments were made, all claims for damages by the builders were released, although the Court of Claims had held otherwise.

That my view of this release was that taken by the Court of Claims and not that taken by the Supreme Court is clear from the following consideration:

In my letter transmitting the Cramp cases to Congress (see H. R. 816, 55th Cong., 2d sess.) I called special attention to the release of May 10, 1894, from all damages theretofore incurred in the case of the Indiana and to a similar release in the case of the Massachusetts. This I did because I thought it my duty to see that Congress, before taking any action, should have before it any written release that might have been given.

Per contra.—On December 8, 1896, when I expressed the opinion that the "interests of justice demanded" that these Cramp cases and others should be sent to the Court of Claims, the final release which the Supreme Court afterwards construed in the case of the Indiana had already been given, to wit, May 18, 1896.

If, in my opinion, at that time the Cramp Co. had released all claim for damages in writing by its receipt for the final payment, it would have been clearly my duty to call the attention of Congress to that fact. But this was not done, for the reason that it was not my opinion that the company had by its receipt for the last regular payments released the Government from the claim for damages which I was recommending should be sent to the Court of Claims.

Very respectfully,

H. A. HERBERT.

Chairman Committee on Claims, United States Senate.

AFFIDAVIT OF MR. CHARLES H. CRAMP, EX-PRESIDENT THE WILLIAM CRAMP & SONS SHIP AND ENGINE BUILDING CO.

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA:

Charles H. Cramp, being duly affirmed, says: That he was the president of the William Cramp & Sons Ship and Engine Building Co. during the period that company was building the battleships and cruisers for the new Navy of the United States, including the battleships Indiana, Massachusetts, and Iowa, and the cruisers New York, Brooklyn, and Columbia, all of which vessels were seriously delayed during their construction by reason of the failure of the United States to fulfill the obligations on its part assumed under the terms of the contract.

That at the time, in November, 1890, when the terms of the contract for the building of battleship No. 1, afterwards called the Indiana, were under consideration, he had frequent consultations with the chief constructor and his chief assistant and Secretary Tracy, and while the company agreed to submit to penalties for delay caused by it in the construction of the vessel, the United States agreed to take the vessel off the hands of the contractor in an unfinished condition in case the delays were caused by the United States. If these latter terms had been carried out there would have been no cost to the company for the care and preservation, insurance, wharfage, and similar items during the enforced delay brought about by the delay in furnishing the armor on the part of the United States, and there was never any intimation on the part of any officer of the Government in all the negotiations or during the contract period that the contract price included or was intended to include the expense of the maintenance, care, preservation, or other expenses made necessary by the delay after the contract term expired. The price fixed in the contract included nothing but the work provided for under the plans and specifications. There was never any understanding, agreement, or pretense on the part of either party to the contract that the final receipt covered or intended to cover anything except the construction of the vessel under the contract, and it was given and accepted with the full knowledge and understanding both of the Secretary of the Navy and the company that it was not intended to be any bar to the recovery by the company of the expenses of care, wharfage, insurance, etc., of the vessel during the time of the delay.

At the moment, May, 1896, when the receipt was signed there was pending in Congress a petition of the company for the passage of a law conferring on the Secretary of the Navy authority to audit and pay this identical claim. This was well known to the Secretary, and he had before that time recommended similar legislation in a similar case.

At the time of signing the receipt the Secretary conceded that the Government's delay had caused the company great loss, and that they had a valid claim for reimbursement, but held that he was without jurisdiction to pass upon it and without funds to liquidate it.

Enlightened by these surrounding facts and circumstances, it is not possible to construe the words of the receipt "for, or by reason of, or on account of the construction of the vessel under the contract" to embrace the claim for the care and preservation of the vessel, which was no part of the construction of the vessel and which did not arise by virtue of any provision in the contract or specifications. Neither party intended that it should, and the contemporaneous acts of both parties emphasized it.

The Secretary of the Navy had treated a partial release of this claim as a valid and valuable consideration for the payment of what he claimed to be an advance of money not yet due under the contract, and the company had presented it and were pressing it before Congress with the knowledge and acquiescence of the Secretary.

In May, 1894, the Secretary refused an official trial trip and declined to accept the vessel in an unfinished condition and refused to make further payments till a trial trip was had. The company had, under the eye of specially detailed officers, expended $17,000 for temporary work so the vessel could be taken to sea and had made a contractor's trial trip. The company was then in dire need of money. It was carrying more than a million and a quarter of dollars in loans at abnormal rates of interest, with a weekly pay roll of upward of $10,000 a day and upward of 5,000 employees, which represented fully 20,000 persons dependent upon the continuation of work in the company's yard.

It was the time of financial panic, and to have thrown these men out of employment would have been a calamity to the city and State. To avert so disastrous a calamity, against his earnest remonstrance he was coerced into signing the special release of May 10, 1894, in order to receive, not an advance payment, for the money was then long overdue, but to save the company from threatened bankruptcy and the city and State from a disastrous calamity. Personal violence to him or imprisonment itself would not have been more potent in obtaining the release than were the circumstances that surrounded him at the time.

CHARLES CURTIS AND WIFE.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of a privileged resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 782 (H. Rept. 1352).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, the sum of $211.50 to William S. Riley, for the funeral expenses of Charles Curtis, late an employee of the House, and of his wife, whose death occurred within three days after that of her husband, in lieu of the allowance usually made of funeral expenses not exceeding $250.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, in this case the employee died during the holiday recess, leaving a widow, but in three days his widow died. Under the rule she would have been entitled to an amount equal to his salary for six months and the expenses of his funeral not exceeding $250. He left no children, and this resolution provides for payment to the undertaker of the expenses of the funerals, both of Mr. Curtis and of his wife, the total of which does not equal the $250 which is ordinarily allowed for the funeral expenses of an employee.

The resolution was agreed to.

LILLIE M. REESCH.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of another privileged resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 744 (H. Rept. 1354).

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, the sum of $600 to Lillie M. Reesch, for extra services rendered in connection with the sending out of blanks, receiving, filing, and compiling expense statements filed by the Members of Congress in accordance with H. R. 2958, "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected,' and extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States and limiting the amount of campaign expenses."

Mr. MANN. What is this?

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this resolution provides for pay to a clerk in the office of the Clerk of the House for sending out the notices with reference to the statements required of the campaign expenses of Members and for compiling the statements after they were sent in. There is no provision of law for anyone to do this work, excepting that these statements are required to be sent to the Clerk. A vast amount of work has been done in connection with these statements, giving notice to Members, and filing and compiling the statements after their receipt by the Clerk. This resolution provides compensation to the lady who did it.

Mr. MANN. How much?

Mr. LLOYD. Six hundred dollars.

The resolution was agreed to.

C. L. GILBERT.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 754 (H. Rept. 1353).

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House the sum of $167.50 to C. L. Gilbert, session clerk of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor, for one month and two weeks' services rendered said committee during the interval between the second and third session of the Sixty-second Congress.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this resolution provides for pay to the clerk of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor for one month and two weeks' services rendered during the vacation. This clerk came here and actually rendered the service. He is not the private secretary of any Member, so that the passage of this resolution is necessary in order to provide the usual compensation of $125 a month.

Mr. MANN. This committee has a session clerk?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. When was this service rendered?

Mr. LLOYD. In September and October.

Mr. MANN. What was the occasion of his coming here at that time, when he ought to have been engaged in the campaign? [Laughter.]

Mr. LLOYD. I do not know why he came, but he came here and performed the services. I move to amend the resolution by changing the figure 6 to 8.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 2, by striking out the figure 6 and inserting the figure 8.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

POSTAL CLERKS AND THE PARCEL POST.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute for the purpose of presenting a letter from Carl C. Van Dyke, president of the tenth division of the Railway Mail Association with reference to the parcel post.

Mr. MANN. What is the letter about?

Mr. KENDALL. About the parcel post and the necessity for increased help in the service.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the letter referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

WASHINGTON, January 16, 1913.

Hon. NATHAN E. KENDALL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I desire to call your attention to a talk and to the newspaper clippings which were caused to be read in the House last Saturday afternoon by Congressman COX, of Indiana.

I represent the railway postal clerks of the tenth division, and because of the fact that I have been elected and reelected to this office by a referendum vote of our men regardless of the department's and Mr. Schardt's opposition, I am led to believe that I represent the views and will of these clerks.

As to the newspaper clippings which were caused to be read, I have this to say: I have never caused to be published any statement wherein it was presumed that it was the desire or intention of the clerks to strike, and in furtherance of this contention I wish to quote from the hearings before the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service on H. R. 5970, Sixty-second Congress, second session:

"Mr. DIES. You do not take the position that it is unlawful for a Government clerk to resign or strike?

"Mr. VAN DYKE. I do; and if they should resign in a body or send in their resignation en bloc that it is more or less of a conspiracy; but we do not take the stand that we want to organize to strike, but to stop such a thing, and, further, to have our grievances rectified by taking them through to Congress if necessary."

I am led to believe that this talk of strike on the part of postal employees which has been given publicity during the last two years originated with the department officials for the purpose of crushing such organizations of postal employees which they could not dominate and silence.

Since handing in my resignation to the Post Office Department I have done all in my power to help this class of employees of whom so little was known. I have appeared before committees of both the House and the Senate in their behalf, and am pleased to state that they are very grateful to Congress for the beneficial legislation passed last session.

The interview which I gave in the two cases quoted by Mr. COX was in reply to my opinion of the inauguration of parcel post, and was in substance as follows:

"It seems that the department, as far as the Railway Mail Service is concerned, has made little or no preparation to handle additional mail, which, in my opinion, if the parcel-post proposition is to be made a success, must be done and done quickly, inasmuch as additional car space and more men will be needed to get this mail through on time. The mail service was in bad shape a year ago because of the economy policy of the department, and I am afraid that it will again be in bad shape unless men and space are allowed for the increase in volume which is to be expected because of parcel post. It is needless to state that unless these parcels are sent through without delay the parcel post will become somewhat of a failure instead of the great success it should be.

"Quite naturally, we will enter a protest if extra duty is assigned to the Railway Postal Service, inasmuch as there are thousands of men who are now averaging more than eight hours a day 313 days in a year and who receive no extra compensation for extra duty and are probably about the only men in Government service who receive no annual vacation. These same men have just finished doing extra duty because of the holiday rush, and I doubt very much if it is the desire of either Congress or the public to overwork them, and I shall certainly take means to let both Congress and the public know if extra-duty schedules are prepared."

The foregoing is, as I stated, the substance of my interview with the newspaper men in regard to parcel post.

Since coming to Washington I have been notified that extra-duty schedules have already started on Chicago and Minneapolis railway post office and Pembina and St. Paul railway post office.

I sincerely hope that, in justice to myself and railway mail clerks whom I have the honor to represent, you will give this letter the same publicity as Mr. COX gave the one from Mr. Schardt, stating that the men were willing to do extra duty.

Respectfully, yours,

CARL C. VAN DYKE,
President Tenth Division Railway Mail Association.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill—H. R. 27941.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SAUNDERS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill. The Clerk will report the amendment that was pending when the committee rose.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, after line 21, add the following:

"Provided, That no part of this or any other appropriation carried herein shall be used for the payment of expenses of holding, going to, attendance on, and returning from polo tournaments, horse shows, Olympic games, or race track, by officers, enlisted men, horses, or equipments belonging to the United States, except at the United States Military Academy."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment be now closed unless somebody wants to make some further remarks.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not object to the debate being closed, so far as this amendment is concerned. The House was dividing, I believe, when the committee rose.

Mr. HAY. If the Chair is going to put the question, I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FOSTER) there were—ayes 15, noes 47.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 29, line 15, by striking out the words "to their home (or elsewhere as they may elect)" and insert the words, "or from any place in which they have been held under a sentence of dishonorable discharge and confinement for more than six months, or from the Government Hospital for the Insane after transfer thereto from such prison or place to their home (or elsewhere as they may elect)."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, the reason for the amendment is that I am informed that the law in effect only applies to prisoners discharged from the United States military prison at Fort Leavenworth and the prison at Alcatraz, Cal.

There are other places for confinement of prisoners than those, and one-third of the prisoners are confined elsewhere than at military prisons.

Mr. MANN. Where are these prisoners to be sent, under the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. HAY. Nowhere, but when discharged they are to be transported to their home as they may elect at the expense of the Government, as other military prisoners are.

Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman's amendment as reported struck out the words "or elsewhere, as they may elect."

Mr. HAY. It does; but the amendment as offered retains in the law the same words.

Mr. MANN. Then those words still remain in the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. HAY. They do. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Virginia that I have an amendment that I propose to offer which I do not care to debate. If that amendment is voted down, then I have another amendment that I would like to debate about 5 minutes. With that understanding, I have no objection.

Mr. HAY. Very well, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the motion.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, after line 21, add the following: "Provided, That no part of this or any other appropriation carried herein shall be used for the payment of expenses of holding, going to, attendance on, and returning from any polo tournaments except at the United States Military Academy."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KAHN) there were 27 ayes and 37 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 30, line 1, after the word "ferriage," insert "transportation of officers, enlisted men, and horses for attendance on polo tournaments, horse shows, Olympic games, and race-track events."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I would like the gentleman to state what his point of order is.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, it is a change of existing law.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I thought the gentleman had been maintaining that under the law expenditures for this purpose might be made.

Mr. HAY. But this is a change in existing law. This is not a limitation on the appropriation.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his point of order for a moment?

Mr. HAY. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I have been prompted to offer the amendments that have been voted down because during the last session of Congress on the floor of the House when one of the deficiency appropriation bills was pending I inquired of some of the members of the Committee on Military Affairs as to whether or not there was any authority of law for paying out of any appropriation made in the Army appropriation bill moneys to cover the expenses connected with polo tournaments, and I was informed by several members of that committee that there was no law authorizing any such expenditure. It has been stated since this bill has been before the committee and on Saturday last by no less than three members of the Committee on Military Affairs that in their opinion there is no law that will justify paying the expenses of polo tournaments, race-track events, Olympic games, and other similar exhibitions.

It seems that there was a voucher that reached the Treasury Department to pay certain expenses in connection with a polo tournament. The Auditor for the War Department, who is an officer of the Treasury Department, interpreted the law just as the members of the Committee on Military Affairs interpreted, and said:

I am of opinion and so decide that the regular appropriations for the support of the Army are not available for the payment of any expenses in connection with polo tournaments or polo matches, either for the transportation of polo ponies and equipments or for the transportation of officers and enlisted men or for the subsistence of enlisted men while attending such tournaments.

That was the decision of the Auditor for the War Department upon this question. The Comptroller of the Treasury in deciding this case, which was taken to him on appeal, held that the expenditure was authorized, and in doing so said:

The War Department is intrusted with the control of the Army and what, in its judgment, will promote its efficiency. The Secretary of War represents the President and exercises his power on the subjects confided to his department. If the War Department in the exercise of its jurisdiction and control of the Army is of the opinion that polo tournaments among the officers and enlisted men tend to promote the efficiency of the Army, and accordingly orders the officers and men to participate in such tournaments, which involve expenditures for transportation of officers and men and horses to attend such tournaments, I do not think the accounting officers can revise the judgment of the War Department in such matters or that they are authorized to disallow them the reasonable cost of such transportation.

Mr. Chairman, this committee, by rejecting the amendments which I have offered, has gone on record in favor of expenditures being made for this purpose. The Comptroller of the Treasury may change at any time, and the next comptroller may hold differently from the last comptroller. As long as we are now going to commit and have committed this House to the policy of making these expenditures for this purpose, let us put it in the law so that there can be no question about it.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, I will withdraw the point of order and state that I have no objection to his amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss the point of order. We have a decision of the comptroller that moneys may be expended for this purpose, as I have just read. It seems to me that if this is something that is considered necessary in connection with the efficiency of the Army it is quite within the power of this House and this committee to specifically appropriate for it, just as the language in the bill appropriates for many other purposes. It is upon the theory that it is a necessary part of the military organization, including maneuvers and other matters connected therewith.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman desires to proceed I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss the matter further, since the chairman of the committee is willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's amendment, if adopted by the House, will be in line with the decision of the Auditor for the War Department?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No; my amendment, if adopted, will be directly opposite from the decision of the Auditor of the War Department, but will be in line with the decision of the comptroller, who reversed the decision of the auditor.

Mr. PRINCE. So as to make it lawful for doing this work.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I could not hear the amendment when read. Am I to understand from the gentleman's statement just now that the gentleman proposes to make lawful what the gentleman thought was unlawful heretofore and what has been done?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes; and I propose to do it, because I do not think we ought to leave this matter, now we have gone on record, to the decision of the comptroller because another comptroller may make another decision. Another comptroller might hold the same as the Auditor for the War Department.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But the gentleman switched from an inclination to save money now to a frank effort to increase an expenditure.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No; it is in line with good administration of the Government, in my judgment. We have gone on record as favoring such expenditures, and therefore let us authorize it so it will not require a decision of some officer of the Treasury to determine what Congress intended.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, since this matter was up last, I took occasion to call at the War Department to find out just how far the department was going in the way of shipping horses to race tracks and to Olympic games, and how far the department was going in the matter of getting up polo tournaments. I found that the matter of horsemanship is one of absorbing interest in the Army. Up to a few years ago the officers of the United States Army were woefully deficient in horsemanship as compared with the horsemanship of officers of other countries. They had poor mounts and the horses which were provided by the officers made no showing. Thereupon one of the societies interested in the breeding of good horses gave to the United States Government a number of well-bred horses for use of the officers. These horses are the ones that are being transported from one place to another, to various track events, so called. The races are not the ordinary races that occur at certain race tracks day after day. They are generally gentlemen's events, and the officers of the United States participate in them as gentlemen riders. Instead of riding for large purses they ride for trophies and sometimes a small purse is made up in addition, but it is not in any sense such a race as takes place on the ordinary race tracks of the country. It seems that last summer there was a race at the Benning track in the District. It was held after Congress adjourned. It was in the interest of good horsemanship. I believe they rode 15 miles in one race, which wound up with a steeplechase at the end. Every officer who went within that inclosure to see those officers ride in the races paid his admission fee. The general public, to a certain extent, went there and paid an admission fee, and it was that admission fee that paid the entire expenses of the tournament, or rather paid a portion of the expense, and the Army officers interested in the improvement of horsemanship in the military service went into their own pockets and paid the rest of it.

I find that in the polo tournament that was the subject of so much discussion on this floor last Friday or Saturday the officers went into their own pockets to pay the necessary expenses, but they suggested that where the citizens who came in automobiles and desired to see this game and who parked their automobiles along the road should be approached with a view of having them contribute a dollar toward the expense. The payment of the dollar was to be purely optional.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman if while he was getting information he ascertained how much money was collected in the aggregate from the people?

Mr. KAHN. No; but I understand there was not enough to pay the expenses, and the officers paid out of their own pockets a good deal of the share of the expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, in this same connection, to show the disposition of the people of California toward these tournaments, I desire to say there is to be a western polo championship at Coronado, San Diego County, Cal., and to show that these people will not only pay the expenses of the officers, horses, and attendants while attending this tournament, except the mere transportation of the officers and horses, I desire to have the following telegram read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the telegram.

The Clerk read as follows:

SAN DIEGO, CAL., January 20, 1913.

JOHN E. RAKER,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

Coronado Country Club has been in correspondence with the War Department for past two years to allow military teams to enter in western polo championship; also compete for a new regimental polo trophy at Coronado, Cal., furnished by club. War Department strongly in favor of doing so on grounds of improved horsemanship, citing foreign countries, including United States, sending teams to compete for honors in horsemanship in Europe. War Department believes such tournaments incite greater individual effort to skill and horsemanship, and therefore of great benefit to the service, and will gladly consider matter if Senators and Representatives will indorse the undertaking. The Coronado Country Club will entertain three teams during tournament, covering hotel bills for accommodations and board for attendants and free feed and stabling for horses during tournament if War Department will find transportation. I earnestly solicit your support. Everything that helps anywhere in California helps the State. This is the best proposition of the kind ever offered the Government.

D. C. COLLIER.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, this telegram voices the sentiment of the House, simply shows what benefit will be had to the Army in the improvement of horses, and by the House voting that they will encourage this it will be an indication to the War Department to furnish these horses and send their men to San Diego, Cal., for the purpose of participating in this splendid tournament.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The effect of this amendment will be to authorize payment for transportation of officers, enlisted men, and horses for attendance upon polo tournaments, horse shows, Olympic games, and race-track events. Of course, this language is broad enough to authorize payment of expenses not only in connection with the particular type of races referred to by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], but with every variety of race-track events. It is not contended, nor have I been referred to any law from which it can be reasonably inferred, that any authority exists to pay for the transportation of these officers, men, and horses to race-track events generally. Without going into the other features of the amendment, this statement is sufficient to show that the amendment affords authority not now afforded by law, and the point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Roads, walks, wharves, and drainage: For the construction and repairs by the Quartermaster Corps of roads, walks, and wharves; for the pay of employees; for the disposal of drainage; for dredging channels and for care and improvement of grounds at military posts and stations, $642,597.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 32, end of line 2, insert:

"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available until the Secretary of War shall pay to the town of Winthrop, Mass., one-half of the cost, not to exceed the sum of $1,500, of a sidewalk and edge stones on the side of Revere Street in said town of Winthrop, upon which abuts the Fort Banks Military Reservation."

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. FOSTER. I reserve it.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I hope to be able to convince the gentleman from Illinois that this is not really the right place to raise his point of order. I concede that the amendment is subject to the point of order, but under the conditions surrounding this case I hope he will not insist upon his rights. The town of Winthrop, in Massachusetts, is one of the unfortunate communities which has been selected by the Government of the United States in which to establish seacoast batteries for coast defense. The people of the town of Winthrop did not seek the location of these works in their midst, and would be very glad indeed if they never had been placed there or if the Government would see fit to abandon them and get out of the town.

Now, in the town, on one of the main highways—Revere Street—there has been placed the Fort Banks Reservation. There are about 1,500 feet abutting on that street. On that street are located the officers' quarters, the hospital, and the gymnasium connected with the fort. The town desires to improve the street, not only that part of it in front of the military reservation, but the entire length of it. It is a main highway leading from the center of the town to what is called Winthrop Heights. The town desires a decent street after the work is done. They propose to place sidewalks on the easterly side and resurface the street proper, and they wish a sidewalk the entire length on the westerly side on which abuts the military reservation. The sidewalk, if constructed, will be of advantage to the reservation, in that the officers and others using the fort will have a convenient walk upon which they can proceed in going to and from their quarters. The entire cost of the sidewalk and edge stone for the distance along the military reservation will not exceed $3,000. The matter has been brought to the attention of the Quartermaster General, and he is ready to pay one-half of that expense if he can have the authorization from Congress.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. The fortification which the gentleman says the people of the town object to is part of the defenses of Boston, is it not?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman recall the attitude of that section of the country during the Spanish-American War touching seacoast defense?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Oh, I recall it very well indeed, but the fact is that the town of Winthrop is no part of Boston. It is a separate community, and this burden of a military reservation, from which the town derives no benefit whatever, has been placed upon them against their will and desire. The case is not like that of a public building located in a community. In those cases the people of the community come down here personally, write letters, or importune their Members to secure a public building for their town.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, what I wanted really to find out was whether any part of the State of Massachusetts was desirous of having the defenses for the protection of Boston removed.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. The people of Winthrop would like to have those particular forts located in some other locality. I presume the question might be called a selfish one. They would like to have the defense, but they would like to have it located in some other fellow's town.

The point I make is this: Here is a small town of ten or twelve thousand population. It happens to be so located geographically that the War Department conceived the project of locating in it a fort. The fort is a serious detriment to the town, not only because it takes a certain amount of taxable property out of the town valuation, but also because it stands there as a dog in the manger, as it were, stopping any town development, because the War Department, unless specifically authorized, has no power to spend any of that money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I want to say one word further in a minute of time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks for one minute more. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom I submitted the amendment, is agreeable to this going on the bill, and I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] will not, under these circumstances, raise a point of order. I concede, under the circumstances, a point of order would be sustained.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, may I ask my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] a question?

Mr. HAY. I insist, Mr. Chairman, on having the point of order either made or not made. We must hurry on with this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That rests with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] to reserve the point of order.

Mr. HAY. I understand that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Anybody can make the point of order.

Mr. HAY. I understand that; but the debate on the point of order proceeds under unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; to this extent, that in order to cut it off somebody must make the point of order.

Mr. HAY. I will yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, the town of Winthrop is in the district I now represent, but it has been taken out of the district from which I have been elected to the Sixty-third Congress, so that my interest in the matter is not at all political. It is based entirely on what I believe to be the justice of the situation.

I can not hope to add anything to the lucid explanation that has been given by the gentleman in whose district this town has been placed by the redistricting of the Massachusetts Legislature. I simply wish to join with him in an earnest request to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] to withhold his point of order, because I am sure if he were made to appreciate the situation and circumstances that exist there, which my colleague, Mr. ROBERTS, and I know to exist, he would not put a point of order in the way, but would assist us in getting this matter straightened out by means of the proposed amendment. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not insist upon his point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I realize that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] has offered an amendment which is important to the city of Winthrop, in his locality, but I suggest that there are hundreds of other cases all over the United States that are just as meritorious, and if you enter upon the policy of making this improvement, which the Government has never done, I do not think that we ought to do it in this way unless we also take care of other cases, and I therefore make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Water and sewers at military posts: For procuring and introducing water to buildings and premises at such military posts and stations as from their situation require it to be brought from a distance; for the installation and extension of plumbing within buildings where the same is not specifically provided for in other appropriations; for the purchase and repairs of fire apparatus, including fire-alarm systems; for the disposal of sewage, and expenses incident thereto, including the authorized issue of toilet paper; for repairs to water and sewer systems and plumbing within buildings; and for hire of employees, $1,519,290.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, to come in as a new paragraph immediately after the paragraph that has just been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 32, after line 13, insert, as a new paragraph, the following: "Construction and maintenance of military and post roads, bridges, and trails, Alaska: For the construction, repair, and maintenance of military and post roads, bridges, and trails in the District of Alaska, to be expended under the direction of the board of road commissioners described in section 2 of an act entitled 'An act to provide for the construction and maintenance of roads, the establishment and maintenance of schools, and the care and support of insane persons in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes,' approved January 27, 1905, as amended by the act approved May 14, 1906, and to be expended conformably to the provisions of said act as amended, $100,000."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, by some inadvertence that paragraph was not included in the bill.

Mr. MANN. I suggest that where the term "District of Alaska" first appears it should be changed to "Territory of Alaska." Where it appears the second time it should be "Territory of Alaska" instead of "District of Alaska."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the fourth line of the amendment, change the word "District" to "Territory."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FITZGERALD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4547. An act to provide for the erection of a public building at Aberdeen, Wash.;

S. 4545. An act to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Ellensburg, in the State of Washington; and

S. J. Res. 155. Joint resolution extending the privilege of the proviso of section 2 of the act of June 7, 1906, to persons using alcohol for testing citrus fruits.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Barracks and quarters, Philippine Islands: Continuing the work of providing for the proper shelter and protection of officers and enlisted men of the Army of the United States lawfully on duty in the Philippine Islands, including repairs and payment of rents, the acquisition of title to building sites, and such additions to existing military reservations as may be necessary, and including also shelter for the animals and supplies, and all other buildings necessary for post administration purposes, $500,000: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended for the construction of quarters for officers of the Army the total cost of which, including the heating and plumbing apparatus, wiring and fixtures, shall exceed in the case of quarters of a general officer the sum of $8,000; of a colonel or officer above the rank of captain, $6,000; and of an officer of and below the rank of captain, $4,000.

Mr. HELM. I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. Chairman, I observe that this appropriation is part of a $6,000,000 scheme to erect concrete barracks and quarters in the Philippine Islands; also for stables for the Cavalry stationed in those islands.

The Democratic Party in convention has three times gone on record as opposed to imperialism and a colonial exploitation in the Philippine Islands or elsewhere. I believe that at the extra session soon to be called the Democrats will present and pass a bill declaring for the independence of the Philippine Islands, and it occurs to me that it is unwise at this time to expend further sums of money upon an enterprise of this character. This appropriation is for $500,000. If it is to result in the very near future that our Government is to strike tents and pull away from the Philippine Islands and turn that archipelago over to the people of the islands, it occurs to me that this is an additional unnecessary charge upon our Treasury.

According to Senate Document 416, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, the Philippine Islands for the fiscal years 1898 to 1902 cost this Government over $170,000,000.

I also find that the Chief of Staff reports, in the hearings before the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, that since the treaty of Paris was adopted to July 1, 1911, that portion of the United States Army that we were compelled to have in the Philippine Islands cost this Government $167,486,403 more than it would have cost to have kept the same number of soldiers in the United States.

Mr. SHERWOOD. You are not counting the pensions paid to the dependent relatives of soldiers who lost their lives in the Philippine Islands, $5,000,000 more.

Mr. HELM. I think the gentleman's statement is reasonably correct. I do not believe these two sums of money which I have mentioned cover one-tenth of the cost entailed upon our Government by reason of our possession and control of those islands.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. HELM. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HELM. In response to a resolution introduced by the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Cox, asking the President of the United States to inform Congress as to the total cost to the United States of the occupation of the Philippine Islands, after referring to the two items which I have mentioned, the President, in his response to that resolution, says:

The total amount thus expended can not be determined with any degree of accuracy.

Mr. SHERWOOD. The Anti-Imperialistic League of Boston has estimated the cost of the Philippines to the Government of the United States to be over $1,000,000,000 up to a year ago.

Mr. MANN. Does anybody think that the estimate of the Anti-Imperialistic League is any better than the estimate of the officials of the Government who have reported to Congress on the subject?

Mr. HELM. The trouble about the report that we got from the President of the United States is that he says it is impossible to estimate the actual cost that these islands have entailed upon our Treasury. And if there is anybody who ought to be in a position to know, it is the President of the United States, because he has been governor of those islands. He was Secretary of War, and he is in a position to obtain more information than any other one officer in the United States. He virtually says that proposition is absolutely beyond his grasp, and that there is no way of estimating what the islands are costing this Government.

Now, I submit, that government has its business features. The Government of the United States is a business proposition, and if we are engaged in conducting a kind of side show, which it is impossible to tell the cost of to us, it seems to me it is about time that we were getting rid of this side show.

There is no doubt that the next House and the next Senate will be Democratic. The next President of the United States will be a Democrat.

Mr. MANN. By title.

Mr. HELM. You will find that he will be a good performer as a Democrat, and furthermore you will find that he is standing squarely upon the Baltimore platform, which declares for the independence of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. It is not where he is standing, but which way he is moving that is important.

Mr. HELM. He is moving away from those islands. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. That is what Cleveland did as to the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. HELM. With this program confronting us, it has occurred to me that it is an unwise proposition for this House now to appropriate this sum of money for that purpose. There will be abundance of time at the extra session of Congress. If the bill declaring the independence of the islands does not become a law in this Congress, then this appropriation can be made at the extra session. It seems to me to be the wise thing and the proper thing not to make any further appropriations of good American money to be expended in the Philippine Islands.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. HAY. I do not know what policy is to be pursued hereafter with regard to the Philippine Islands. I do not suppose that anybody knows just what policy is going to be pursued. At all events, the bill which has been considered does not propose to abandon these islands until 1921, which is seven years from now.

This proposition is not for the benefit of the Philippine Islands. It is for the benefit of the soldiers of the United States, and, in my judgment, no matter what policy may be hereafter pursued by this Government in regard to these islands, it is our duty, so long as we retain them, and so long as we have troops there, to furnish them proper shelter and proper care. [Applause.]

Mr. HELM. We have had troops in the Philippine Islands how long?

Mr. HAY. We have had troops there since 1898.

Mr. HELM. Have they not been properly quartered and sheltered and cared for since that date?

Mr. HAY. They have been quartered and sheltered in a certain way, but not in a proper way. The evidence is that some of the quarters that they have been occupying are now made of grass, branches of trees, and lumber from the United States which has been destroyed by the insects peculiar to those islands, and it is absolutely necessary for their comfort and proper shelter that some of this money shall be expended in providing permanent shelter for them which will not be destroyed by typhoons and insects.

Mr. HELM. Does the gentleman think it is a wise thing to spend $5,000,000 in view of the position that the Democratic Party has taken concerning these islands?

Mr. HAY. I know of no scheme to spend $5,000,000.

Mr. HELM. Is not this a part of a scheme to expend $5,000,000 in the Philippines?

Mr. HAY. I do not know what scheme the present administration has. I do not think that any scheme of the present administration will be the scheme of the next administration, either as to the building of posts in the Philippine Islands or in this country. If the gentleman was as familiar as I am with the changing opinions of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff now, he would know that nobody on earth could tell what the next Secretary of War or the next Chief of Staff would do about these matters.

Mr. HELM. The gentleman is aware that in the hearings had on this present bill, on page 390, it is stated that this appropriation is a part of the scheme there set forth to appropriate $5,000,000 for the purpose I have stated.

Mr. HAY. I am aware that the present administration of the War Department proposes to spend a certain amount of money in the Philippines, but the point I am getting at now is that this $500,000 is and ought to be spent specifically as stated by the Chief of the Quartermaster Corps, for the building of shelter for the troops and animals and for the repair of barracks which they already have there.

Mr. HELM. I do not understand that the troops are without shelter.

Mr. HAY. Not all of them, but some of them are very inadequately sheltered.

Mr. HELM. Can the gentleman inform me how much has been expended in the construction of barracks and quarters for the soldiers in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. HAY. I can not, for I have not the figures before me; but I want to call the attention of the committee to the Chief Quartermaster's statement in the hearings where he says:

> Mr. SLAYDEN. How are those troops sheltered now?
> Gen. ALESHIRE. At Fort Kiethley, for instance, they are using nipa, which is a native palm or grass, for the construction of shelter. They use the branches of trees, etc., and they are trying to build permanent concrete structures. Of course, there has been a great deal of money spent over there for buildings, the same as has been done in this country, to provide accommodations and shelter at temporary posts. These Army posts were necessary once, but are no longer needed. They have also constructed buildings from lumber from this country which have been blown away by typhoons. In fact, these frame buildings do not stand a typhoon much better than the native shacks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. HAY. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAY. Now, Mr. Chairman, whatever may be the policy which is to be pursued with regard to these islands, whatever may take place in the future, I for one, who am in a measure charged with the responsibility for the appropriations for the Army of the United States, do not propose to assume the responsibility of refusing a reasonable, right, and proper appropriation for the shelter and accommodation of the Army. [Applause.]

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. For a question.

Mr. HELM. I notice that in the proviso of this appropriation it is stated that the quarters of a general officer shall not exceed a cost of $8,000, a colonel or officer above the rank of captain, $6,000, and an officer of and below the rank of captain, $4,000. Is it not a fact that the present policy of the War Department, instead of constructing barracks and quarters for the soldiers, is giving them commutation of quarters and permitting the officers to secure their own quarters instead of constructing such quarters, as they have at Fort Myer and elsewhere?

Mr. HAY. I know of no such policy. I think the policy of the department is, and always has been, to construct the quarters at military posts, and only to construct quarters for the accommodation of officers who may be stationed at these posts.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, is it not a fact that the present policy of the War Department is to quarter the troops close to the large cities, where they can secure quarters instead of constructing buildings or houses to quarter the men; and if that is the policy, how do they square that policy with the policy of expending these sums of money in the Philippine Islands for the construction of quarters, or a policy that they condemn?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that that is the policy of the War Department. The proviso in this bill is a limitation on the appropriation for the purpose of keeping down the cost of these quarters for officers.

Mr. HELM. They have the same thing here, do they not?

Mr. HAY. No.

Mr. HELM. Does not the colonel and the general and the captain, and so forth——

Mr. HAY. As I understand, they spend as much as $12,000 for quarters for a general officer and $10,000 for those officers above the rank of captain and $6,000 for officers of the rank of captain.

Mr. HELM. And the cost of construction is represented as being more over there in the Philippines than it is here.

Mr. HAY. Of course it is more expensive to construct quarters there than it is here. They have to transport the material there. They are now constructing buildings of concrete, which are permanent, and to be less expensive than to put up quarters from timber, which is liable to be destroyed on account of the climate of those islands.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Virginia what is the number of soldiers now in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. HAY. I think there are now in the Philippine Islands about 13,000 soldiers.

Mr. SHERWOOD. What is the necessity for so many soldiers, when Spain kept only about 1,200 soldiers on the islands?

Mr. HAY. I could not tell the gentleman the necessity for keeping that number of soldiers there, unless it be that the islands are scattered. It is a large archipelago, and the inhabitants are scattered all over it. The troops have to be stationed in various places there, and to preserve order it is necessary to have these troops.

Mr. SHERWOOD. The presumption is that the people of those islands are still disloyal to the United States Government?

Mr. HAY. I would not say to the gentleman what the presumption is.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Otherwise there would be no necessity for such an Army there.

Mr. HAY. I do not know whether they are disloyal or not.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I believe the department has ordered home four regiments of Infantry and two of Cavalry, so that the number of troops in the islands is materially decreased.

Mr. HAY. But they have filled up the regiments they have kept there to their full strength.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I make the request that I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes. This is the first time during this session of Congress that I have taken up, or asked to take up, one moment of the time of the House, and I hope that the request will not be opposed.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to cut off the gentleman from discussing the future policy of the Government with regard to the Philippine Islands, but if the gentleman makes a speech of 30 minutes some one else will want to make a speech of 30 minutes. If the committee is, then I am willing to hear the gentleman for 30 minutes, provided that will be the end of the discussion.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say to the gentleman that I do not want to let go unchallenged certain statements as to what is to happen in the future relative to the Philippines, when I do not agree with those statements at all, and I should feel that the other side of any discussion should have an equal opportunity to present its views.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to my friend from Kentucky, who seems to be afraid that I wish to enter upon a discussion of the whole Philippine question, that I understand quite well that he does not agree with me in my position as to the Philippines, but that such is not my purpose. I propose to confine my remarks, in the main, to the subject now being discussed, but I also wish to comment briefly upon a speech which the President of the United States is reported to have made before the Ohio Society in New York City on Saturday night last. I do not propose to go into the question of the capacity or fitness of the Filipino people for self-government; I do not propose to discuss that subject at this time; but, Mr. Chairman, the President is alleged to have said—and that bears upon this very point——

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this discussion may proceed for 40 minutes, 20 minutes to be consumed by the gentleman from Virginia and 20 minutes on the other side.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, well, that it is very liberal; has the gentleman eliminated this side of the House?

Mr. HAY. I said on the other side; I have no objection; I will yield time to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. That is not the way the gentleman put it. Now, I suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that when this bill is passed there will be general debate on the river and harbor bill which is pending, there will be general debate on the fortifications bill which is pending, and it is hardly fair when the House, is considering an appropriation bill under the five-minute rule, to inject another subject entirely in the way of general debate——

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to inject another subject. I will state to the gentleman frankly that the President of the United States is reported to have said that the expenses of our military operations in the Philippine Islands, to use his own words, were practically nil, meaning thereby, I suppose, nothing. This bill carries something less than $2,000,000 to pay Philippine scouts in the Philippine Islands and to build shelter for our troops there, and as bearing upon this question I wish to show the House, if I can, by facts and figures, that President Taft is very much misinformed if he thinks our expenditures for military purposes in the Philippines have been practically nothing. Now, that statement has gone all over the country, and I feel that the sooner it can be answered the better it will be for a correct understanding of this subject, and I hope my friend from Illinois will not object to my now undertaking to do so. The facts should be known.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will recall the resolution which passed the House asking the President, as soon as possible, to ascertain and let us know what the expenses were caused by the Philippine Islands.

Mr. JONES. Does the gentleman know what the President's reply to that was—that the problem was insoluble?

Mr. MANN. I do; he replied what everybody ought to have known, what he ought to have replied—that nobody could tell. If the gentleman wants to introduce this subject into the House and spend a day or two discussing it, and if gentlemen on that side of the House think the appropriation bills are far enough along so we can spend a lot of time discussing a subject that is not going to be brought before the House at this session, why, I am quite willing to do it; but if the gentleman is going to enter upon that subject, either on this bill or subsequent bills, we will demand time on this side of the House.

Mr. JONES. I certainly shall be glad for the gentleman to have it.

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman from Virginia was that 20 minutes be occupied by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] and 20 minutes be occupied by some one opposing the views presented by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MANN. I understood that was the request, Mr. Chairman; but this opens up a subject that will have to be discussed on the next bill under general debate in all probability.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman permit me to address one remark to him? The gentleman said this debate could take place on the river and harbor bill. I understand the Committee on Rivers and Harbors do not intend to permit any general discussion upon their bill, and this bill can easily be finished before the end of to-day. It does seem to me that, in view of the importance of this subject and in view of the recent statement which the President is credited with having made in the city of New York, which has gone all over the country, I should be permitted a few moments in which to give to the House the real facts of the case——

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I can not conceive of a more opportune time or occasion for a discussion of this Philippine proposition than this present moment. The last time this bill was up before the House we spent about three or four hours discussing polo ponies; but when you meet a vital, important proposition for discussion under the five-minute rule, then time suddenly becomes so precious and so valuable that we must hurry on post haste to some other matter.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELM. In just a moment. It has been my observation that whenever we have general debate discussion goes far afield, and then it is stated that the time to discuss propositions of this kind is under the five-minute rule; and when we get under the five-minute rule, then we must go back to general debate. It does seem to me that this is a pertinent question and that now is the time for its best discussion, when the Members can best comprehend it and understand the proposition better than any other time, and therefore I move that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] have 30 minutes and some gentleman in opposition to the proposition have 30 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is now 20 minutes of 2 o'clock. We have read one page of this bill to-day. There are 10 or 12 more pages to be read. If gentlemen on that side of the House think they can afford to take up the time in discussing extraneous matter, I am not going to object. I do not want to hear gentlemen afterwards complain that this side of the House is delaying appropriation bills, because the chances are that if this matter gets into the debate the appropriation bills will not all become laws at this session of Congress.

Mr. COX. We would not do that.

Mr. MANN. You would not do that? That is what we will hear the last month of the session.

Mr. JONES. If the gentleman will yield time to me on the river and harbor bill, I will withdraw my request.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no objection to yielding it to the gentleman on the fortification bill.

Mr. JONES. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] when the fortification bill will be before the House?

Mr. SHERLEY. I hope to bring it before the House immediately following the river and harbor bill, if not immediately preceding.

Mr. JONES. Will it be during this week?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think it will, unquestionably.

Mr. JONES. Some of my friends here think I ought to insist on being given time now. As I can not get this consent, however, except by unanimous consent, and as opposition has developed, if the gentleman will promise me an hour on the fortification bill I will reluctantly withdraw my request, although I feel, Mr. Chairman, that this matter ought to be discussed at this time.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not desire either that the gentleman ought to press or withdraw his request; but I am perfectly willing, being in charge of the fortification bill, to grant him an hour's time, although I am opposed to his views.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman can not know that he is opposed to my views, because he has not heard them.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] withdraw his request?

Mr. JONES. With that understanding I withdraw the request.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, there is an amendment pending.

Mr. HAY. The amendment was the one offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] permit me a question right there?

Mr. HAY. Surely.

Mr. GARRETT. In lines 16 and 17, page 32, I find this:

Officers and enlisted men of the Army of the United States lawfully on duty.

I was just wondering as a matter of curiosity what that word "lawfully" means in that connection.

Mr. HAY. I presume it means officers or enlisted men who are ordered by the President of the United States on duty in the Philippine Islands. In other words, it means what it says.

Mr. GARRETT. It seems rather a strange expression.

Mr. HAY. It always has been in the bill.

Mr. GARRETT. I thought perhaps it might have some technical meaning, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. HAY. My recollection is that the history of this item in the bill is that when it was first offered a point of order was made and an amendment was very skillfully drawn by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who was then chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANN. That is correct. That is the way the word got in there.

Mr. HAY. It has a technical meaning that makes it in order.

Mr. GARRETT. As a matter of information, inasmuch as I would like to learn these things, I would be glad to have the gentleman inform me what the technical meaning is.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, there was an item in this bill, or some other bill, to which an amendment was offered, against which a point of order was made and sustained on the ground, I think, that we had no authority to construct these quarters in the Philippine Islands, but if they were lawfully there we did have the authority. Thereupon the item was drawn accordingly.

Mr. HAY. I remember it very well.

Mr. GARRETT. The constitutional and legal questions which were raised at that time brought about the use of this word?

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. GARRETT. And the preservation of it in the bill retains the doubt?

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt myself. It was not a doubt of our right to have the troops in the Philippine Islands, but our right to construct barracks. That was all.

Mr. GARRETT. And it has been carried in the bill since that time because of the still unsettled policy of this Government with respect to the Philippine Islands?

Mr. MANN. It has been carried in the bill because it is the custom to copy the current law into a bill. There is no special reason for changing it.

Mr. GARRETT. That is the opinion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] about it. I was wondering what the gentleman from Virginia would say about that.

Mr. HAY. My opinion is it has been carried in the bill every year because it was put there in the first place.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SHERLEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles.

On January 7, 1913:

H. R. 10169. An act to provide for holding the district court of the United States for Porto Rico during the absence from the island of the United States district judge and for the trial of cases in the event of the disqualification of or inability to act by the said judge.

On January 8, 1913:

H. R. 10648. An act amending an act entitled "An act to authorize the registration of trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations or among the several States or with the Indian tribes, and to protect the same."

On January 21, 1913:

H. R. 20339. An act for the relief of Joseph W. McCall.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

Medical and Hospital Department: For the purchase of medical and hospital supplies, including ambulance and disinfectants, and the exchange of typewriting machines, for military posts, camps, hospitals, hospital ships, and transports; for expenses of medical supply depots; for medical care and treatment not otherwise provided for, including care and subsistence in private hospitals of officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees of the Army, of applicants for enlistment, and of prisoners of war and other persons in military custody or confinement, when entitled thereto by law, regulation, or contract: Provided, That this shall not apply to officers and enlisted men who are treated in private hospitals or by civilian physicians while on furlough; for the proper care and treatment of epidemic and contagious diseases in the Army or at military posts or stations, including measures to prevent the spread thereof, and the payment of reasonable damages not otherwise provided for, for bedding and clothing injured or destroyed in such prevention; for the pay of male and female nurses, not including the Nurse Corps (female), and of cooks and other civilians employed for the proper care of sick officers and soldiers, under such regulations fixing their number, qualifications, assignment, pay, and allowances as shall have been or shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War; for the pay of civilian physicians employed to examine physically applicants for enlistment and enlisted men, and to render other professional services from time to time under proper authority; for the pay of other employees of the Medical Department; for the payment of express companies and local transfers employed directly by the Medical Department for the transportation of medical and hospital supplies, including bidders' samples and water for analysis; for supplies for use in teaching the art of cooking to the Hospital Corps; for the supply of the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark.; for advertising, laundry, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses of the Medical Department, $750,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if the War Department builds ships or transports, or whether it has adopted the practice of purchase?

Mr. HAY. I can say to the gentleman that the department is not now engaged in building any transports or ships. The department does have ships and boats constructed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But nowhere in this bill is an appropriation made for the construction of a ship or a transport?

Mr. HAY. No; there is not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

Ordnance service: For the current expenses of the Ordnance Department, in connection with purchasing, receiving, storing, and issuing ordnance and ordnance stores, comprising police and office duties, rents, tolls, fuel, light, water, and advertising, stationery, typewriters and adding machines, including their exchange, and office furniture, tools, and instruments of service; for incidental expenses of the ordnance service and those attending practical trials and tests of ordnance, small arms, and other ordnance stores; for publications for libraries of the Ordnance Department, including the Ordnance Office; subscriptions to periodicals which may be paid for in advance, and payment for mechanical labor in the office of the Chief of Ordnance, $300,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman whether this item carries any sum for ammunition of any sort, or does that follow subsequently?

Mr. HAY. It does not. The item that comes immediately afterwards carries ammunition.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DENT). The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordnance stores—Ammunition: Manufacture and purchase of ammunition and materials therefor for small arms for reserve supply; ammunition for burials at the National Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C.; ammunition for firing the morning and evening gun at military posts prescribed by General Orders, No. 70, Headquarters of the Army, dated July 23, 1867, and at National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and its several branches, including National Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C., and soldiers' and sailors' State homes, $200,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment at the end of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 41, at the end of line 21, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended in the purchase of ordnance powder at a price in excess of 53 cents or for small-arms powder in excess of 65 cents per pound."

Mr. MANN. Where does that come in?

Mr. SHERLEY. At the end of the paragraph, at the end of line 21.

Mr. Chairman, the subcommittee on fortifications of the Committee on Appropriations undertook a rather elaborate investigation into the cost of powder. It had before it not only the officers of the Army and Navy who have been engaged in the manufacture of powder, but it also had before it a representative of the Du Pont people and a Mr. Waddell, who had been a manufacturer of powder and was a severe critic of the policy of the Government touching the purchase of powder and the price paid for it.

As a result of this very elaborate hearing the committee came to the conclusion that we were paying a price for powder that is unwarranted, and that the price proposed in the amendment that I have offered represents a fair price to the manufacturer, having in view all of the proper factors touching the cost of making the powder and the hazardous nature of the business.

There will be found in the report of the committee certain tables published from the hearings, which show that the cost to the Government of manufacturing powder at the Army arsenal is 40.43 cents; that at the Du Pont works, basing the cost there on the cost at the Government works and adding thereto such other items as should be properly credited to a private concern and which should not be charged as against a Government concern, the cost of powder was 50.15, and that included an item of 5½ cents a pound as representing interest at 5 per cent on $5,500,000 invested by the Du Pont people.

Now, we did not believe that it was proper in arriving at a sale price to first consider interest on the entire capital invested and then subsequently figure a profit on the cost price arrived at. So, eliminating the 5½ cents per pound from the cost, it will be observed that the cost to the Du Pont people, according to this table, is 44.66 cents. Twenty per cent profit on that would bring the cost of powder to a fraction over 53 cents per pound.

I am now speaking of ordnance powder. Now, the figures submitted by the Navy as to the cost of manufacturing powder at the Navy arsenal and the cost upon their basis to the Du Pont people gave 48.95 cents a pound. Also carrying into the computation 5½ cents as interest upon the investment of $5,500,000 and subtracting that from the figures you get 43.6 cents—very close to the figures of the Army; and, figuring 20 per cent on that, you get as a selling cost something under 53 cents.

Now, it will be observed that in arriving at this cost to the Du Pont people, we have taken into consideration what may be called the factory cost, then depreciation of the plant, insurance, rejections, freight, pensions, stock bonuses, selling expenses, experimentation, administration, and all of the items that could by any argument properly be considered; and having considered those, you have presented to you the proposition of an ordinary manufacturing concern. We think that that being so, 20 per cent profit upon the cost price is certainly a fair sale price.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the depreciation charge include losses by explosions?

Mr. SHERLEY. We figured depreciation separately from loss by fire direct, but I mentioned that as showing that we have gone to the extreme in allowing for any proper charge due to the hazardous character of the business. Having allowed that, you have presented the case of an ordinary business. Twenty per cent profit upon the cost price ought, in our judgment, to satisfy any going concern. We have presented this as our judgment, as the result of a very elaborate investigation.

As to small-arms powder, while we did not go into that in detail, because the bill that we were dealing with does not deal with small-arms powder, but only with ordnance powder, the testimony is that it costs about 10 cents per pound more for small-arms powder than it does to make ordnance powder. In arriving at the figure of 65 cents a pound I have figured 11 cents as an addition to the cost to the manufacturer, and then upon that have added 20 per cent profit, which brought me to approximately 65 cents as representing a proper cost for small-arms powder.

Mr. MADDEN. How much saving would that indicate?

Mr. SHERLEY. We are now paying 60 cents for ordnance powder and heretofore have paid as high as 75 cents, I think, for small-arms powder.

Mr. HAY. As high as 80 cents.

Mr. SHERLEY. Seventy-five and eighty cents. I understand a limitation of 71 cents for small-arms powder was placed upon one of the bills, and that contracts have not yet been made under that bill, but I have no reason to doubt—and I am prepared to say to this committee that after a very careful examination I believe the price suggested in the proposed amendment is a fair price to the Du Pont people, who are the only manufacturers of this powder for the Government, and that it is a reasonable price for the Government to pay for their powder. They are entitled to a reasonable price. Beyond that they ought not to receive any additional profit. I ask the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. HEALD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. HEALD. I have gone over the hearings which were had upon this subject, and I think the statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky is a fair résumé of these hearings, and that, as he has stated it to the House, he has handled it in a very fair and impartial manner. There is one matter, however, that appeals to me from a different point of view than his, and that is as to the profit to which a private corporation is entitled in the manufacture of smokeless powder. Of course the 20 per cent profit on the manufacturing cost is a different proposition from a return upon invested capital. I want to ask the gentleman if he thinks that 5½ per cent upon the invested capital necessary for the manufacture of smokeless powder is a sufficient profit for a hazardous enterprise of this kind, particularly as an investment return as large as that can be secured with greater safety in other lines of business?

Mr. SHERLEY. My answer to the gentleman is this: In the first instance, I doubt very much whether the Du Pont people are entitled to be credited with a capital investment of five and one-half million dollars. I am not questioning that that may be a book account—that the books may actually show an investment of that amount. But when you consider the amount that is always and properly allowed for depreciation, and when you consider other items, and what we now know to be the cost of creating a plant that would have an output of the capacity of the Du Pont plant, I should think that was an extravagant allowance. That is my first answer. The second answer is that the Du Pont people are not engaged entirely in making powder for the United States, but they are now manufacturing and selling the same kind of powder to other governments, and therefore it is not to be assumed in this computation that you must figure all of their profits upon the sales that they make to the Federal Government. Having in mind these conditions, I think what the committee has recommended is fair. And its recommendation is not an allowance of 5½ per cent on investment, but of 20 per cent on cost of making the powder. I have not worked out and have not the data to determine what per cent on investment is made by the Du Ponts, because I do not know just what their output will be or what they will sell at to others than the Government.

Mr. HEALD. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. HEALD. In the manufacture of smokeless powder it has, as the gentleman well knows, heretofore been the practice for the powder company to maintain partially in idleness all the time one of the three plants which they use in its manufacture; the policy of the department being, according to their well-expressed views, to retain in active service the three plants, while, as a matter of fact, only one plant out of the three is actually used at a time, thus requiring on the part of the powder company an investment much larger than would ordinarily be the case. Has the committee taken that into consideration?

Mr. SHERLEY. We did; and it may be that the policy of having idle plants will be discontinued by the Du Pont people. The gentleman will appreciate that it is impossible to undertake to determine with mathematical nicety all the questions such as the gentleman puts. We had no opportunity to examine the figures of the Du Pont people. They declined—and I am not criticizing them for the declination—they declined to submit cost figures. I believe I could demonstrate to this House by a number of reasons why the factory cost of the Government should not be the factory cost of the Du Pont people, and that their factory cost should be less; that there are certain economies that they ought to have over the Government. Yet that is a matter of inference, but we accepted the factory cost to the Government as their cost, and then as to all of the items we added as being properly creditable to the Du Pont people and not chargeable to the Government we take the figures of the Du Pont people as furnished by Col. Buckner a year ago. The best I can say is that the committee diligently inquired, and I think the hearings will show that the diligence was not without reward, to find actual facts, approaching the subject without prejudice, without a desire to do harm to anybody, and the committee united in the view that the prices suggested are reasonable prices.

As justification of the action taken by the committee, the following tables, touching the cost of manufacturing powder at the Picatinny Arsenal and at the Du Pont Works submitted by Gen. Crozier, and the tables submitted by Admiral Twining of the cost of the manufacture of powder at Indianhead and at the Du Pont Works, found on pages 282 and 301, respectively, of the hearings, are submitted:

Mr. HEALD. Mr. Chairman, in addition to the questions which I have asked the gentleman from Kentucky and the answers, which have covered the points very thoroughly, I want to say that, in my opinion, the relations between the Government and the powder company in the past have been such that imposed upon them an excessive investment, and that condition exists to-day. The powder company, by the requirements of the departments, is maintaining three plants to obtain the output of only one. Getting away from the necessities of that condition would, of course, create a different condition as to the price of the finished material.

The investigation that Congress and the committee has made into the cost of powder has been very thorough and very complete in the last four sessions of Congress, and I could only wish that the expenditures of the Army and the Navy, aggregating $250,000,000, only 1 per cent of which is expended in ammunition, might meet with the same thorough investigation and examination of prices that has been given to the manufacture of powder. To-day the manufacturers of smokeless powder are meeting that competition which comes from continued probing and examination at the hands of Congress and the exact knowledge which is in the hands of the officers of the War and Navy Departments. And this, I believe, is more effective than competing manufacturers.

This examination, probing, and criticism, however, has been almost entirely confined to the 1 per cent spent for powder, while the 99 per cent spent for guns, battleships, colliers, and other equipment is accepted as a matter of fact, none of which is valuable without the best powder and plenty of it.

Our apparent object might be criticized as being more of a desire to secure a cheap powder than the best powder and enough powder.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, through the courtesy of the gentleman from Kentucky the Committee on Military Affairs had, after it had completed this bill, an opportunity to see the hearings had on this question as to the price of powder, and we think that the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky is fair and just, and I hope it will be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, in order to avoid a repetition of this same amendment as to each item covering moneys for ammunition, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment just adopted be modified so as to read:

Provided, That no part of any sum in this act appropriated shall be expended in the purchase of ordnance powder at a price in excess of 53 cents or for small-arms powder in excess of 65 cents per pound.

The reason is simply to prevent a constant repetition of the amendment.

Mr. MANN. What is the proposition?

Mr. SHERLEY. By unanimous consent to amend the amendment just agreed to by providing that no part of any moneys appropriated shall be expended for powder, and so forth, instead of having it relate simply to the particular fund in that paragraph.

Mr. MANN. It only comes in two paragraphs, does it not?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; there are several others, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. GOOD. There are four paragraphs.

Mr. MANN. There are only four paragraphs in the present law that have a limitation.

Mr. HAY. Yes; but there is a paragraph, on page 44, for storing reserve ammunition for field artillery.

Mr. SHERLEY. It occurred to me that instead of having four provisos we would have one to cover the entire matter.

Mr. MANN. How much do we now pay for ordnance ammunition?

Mr. SHERLEY. We pay for ordnance ammunition now 60 cents. I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment just adopted modified as I have indicated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the amendment just adopted be modified in the manner indicated by him, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 41, at the end of line 21, insert the following:
"Provided, That no part of any sum in this act appropriated shall be expended in the purchase of ordnance powder at a price in excess of 53 cents, or for small-arms powder at a price in excess of 65 cents per pound."

Mr. MANN. Ought not that to read 53 cents a pound?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think it might be clear to add, after the words "53 cents," the words "per pound," and I will ask unanimous consent that those words be added.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky that the matter now in the bill be modified by the addition of the language just read at the desk?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask what is the need of purchasing powder at 53 cents a pound when the Government can manufacture it at about 30 cents a pound? I would like to have some gentleman state to me any reason why we should buy powder at all when the Government is now prepared to manufacture its own powder, but is operating its equipments only about one-quarter of the time, which naturally makes the powder cost more than if the factories were operated all the time.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will answer the gentleman, first, that you can not make powder for 30 cents, and secondly, that if you run the full capacity of Indianhead and Picatinny you would not be able to make all of the powder that the Government would otherwise buy.

Mr. BUTLER. Or need?

Mr. SHERLEY. Or need.

Mr. BUCHANAN. My information is different from that. We are now equipped to make all of the powder that we use at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read, to follow the amendment just adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 41, to follow the amendment just adopted, add the words: "The appropriations herein made for ammunition, when expended for manufacture of powder at the powder factory at the Picatinny Arsenal at Dover, N. J., shall be so expended only on the basis of and toward the operation of said powder factory to not less than one-half of the full capacity thereof during the calendar year."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the point of order was reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. It was made by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, this is clearly a limitation. However, if, in the opinion of the Chair, it should appear that that is not clearly a limitation, I have an amendment under which it would be a little more difficult to operate, but which in exact terms is a limitation. This amendment provides that the money that is expended here for powder, in the manufacture of powder at the Government arsenal, shall be expended only upon the basis of keeping the powder plant in operation at one-half of its maximum capacity. Part of this appropriation that is expended for powder will be expended for the purchase of powder. A part of it will be expended for the manufacture of powder. In the testimony before the Committee on Appropriations having to do with fortifications it appears that last year we purchased about 1,000,000 pounds of powder and that we manufactured in the neighborhood of 450 pounds of powder. This provides that, as far as the manufacture is concerned, any money that is appropriated or expended in the manufacture of powder at the Government arsenal shall be expended on the basis of maintaining that plant in operation at one-half of its maximum capacity.

It is clearly a limitation in my opinion and is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. This may not be on the subject of the point of order. Are these factories capable of being run 24 hours a day?

Mr. GOOD. The factory at Indian Head is now run at its maximum capacity of three shifts, 24 hours per day, 8 hours per shift. The factory at Picatinny Arsenal, Dover, is now run at one-sixth of its capacity.

Mr. MANN. That is not what I asked. Is it capable of being run 24 hours a day? I take it it must be if the other is.

Mr. GOOD. It is; and it was the intention, I understand, of Gen. Crozier to increase the output.

Mr. MANN. Now, how are you going to arrange where you have three shifts and require it to be run at 50 per cent of its capacity? Will that be one shift and a half?

Mr. GOOD. The amendment was drawn so that the matter of detail could be left to the Chief of Ordnance, and at times the Chief of Ordnance could run three shifts a day if he so desired, if he found it was in the line of economy to do so, or he could run one shift at a time or two shifts at a time.

Mr. MANN. How can he under this amendment?

Mr. GOOD. This provides that for the calendar year the plant shall be run at one-half of its maximum capacity, not at one-half of its capacity, for every day in the year, when it comes to determining the amount of production for the year. The difference between the cost of manufacturing powder at the Army plant and Navy plant last year was a difference of several cents per pound. The appropriation cost or first cost at the naval plant was only 30½ cents per pound; at the Army plant it was 33 cents a pound; and Gen. Crozier said the difference in cost largely lay in the fact he did not operate the Army plant at anything like the full capacity, but at only one-sixth its full capacity.

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not see how you are going to run the factory for a half a day or go on the theory that you will keep two shifts and operate them part of the time. That is not fair to the men.

Mr. GOOD. The amendment which I have offered does not provide that they shall run two shifts or one shift or three shifts, but it is left so that the production for the whole year shall equal one-half of the maximum capacity of that plant.

Mr. MANN. It provides that the production for the whole year shall equal one and a half shifts a day.

Mr. GOOD. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. MANN. Three shifts is the maximum capacity of the factory for a year?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's amendment provides for 50 per cent of that maximum capacity; that is equivalent to one and a half shifts per day for a year.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; but it does not——

Mr. MANN. If you are going to run two shifts, run two; if you are going to run one shift, run one; but do not make a proposition which seems to me to provide for a shift and a half. It is neither fair to the Government nor to the men.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman; I have the floor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. At present the factory at Picatinny Arsenal runs one shift a day, and yet it is only turning out one-sixth of its capacity. Now, one shift is one-third, yet it is only running at one-sixth of its capacity, so that the mathematics of this thing is very peculiar.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. I ask for two minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOOD. I only want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that this matter was thoroughly considered by the Subcommittee on Appropriations, and we felt we would be hampering the Ordnance Department by providing the number of shifts that were to be run. Matters of detail of that kind were not considered, but looking at the matter in a broader way we took cognizance of the maximum capacity of the plant only, leaving it to the judgment of the Chief of Ordnance as to how many shifts he would work.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to ask the gentleman if there is any stage in the manufacture of powder where it is of great advantage to operate three shifts a day or continuously?

Mr. GOOD. I think that is true.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Has the gentleman any information as to whether that is the fact or not?

Mr. GOOD. Gen. Crozier gave it as his opinion that the reason that it has cost more to manufacture smokeless powder in the Army arsenal than in the Navy was the fact largely that they were running practically at their full capacity in the Navy factory while the Army factory only ran at one-sixth of its capacity.

Mr. BUCHANAN. My information is that powder could be manufactured cheaper where they are running at full capacity of the mill.

Mr. GOOD. I will say, Mr. Chairman, this amendment that I have offered is in the exact language of a provision in the fortification bill, and while I have an amendment that I like a little better than this, yet this was the amendment that was agreed upon, and it reaches the proposition. I have offered it here, and believe it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. HAY. It is clearly subject to a point of order, because it is directing something to be done affirmatively, and according to the gentleman's own statement it would cost more under this amendment than it costs now. He says the arsenal is now run only at one-sixth of its capacity. This provides it should be run at one-half of the full capacity. I do not think it is in order on this bill anyway, for the reason that the Appropriations Committee deals directly with this arsenal, and the Committee on Military Affairs makes no appropriation for it. It is clearly subject to a point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. I will.

Mr. GOOD. The item to which this is offered is for the manufacture as well as the purchase of ammunition. The same thing might be true of the amendment that was offered limiting the price. Nothing was said with regard to powder when it came——

Mr. HAY. I said nothing about the powder, but the running of the arsenal, which the gentleman's amendment proposes to do.

Mr. GOOD. The manufacture of powder is at the arsenal.

The CHAIRMAN. The clear effect of this amendment is to provide that this particular arsenal shall be run on a basis of not less than one-half time as a minimum requirement. There is more affirmative authority than limitation in this amendment. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment the following:

"Provided, That in expenditures of this appropriation, or any part thereof, for powder, no powder shall at any time be purchased unless the powder factory at the Picatinny Arsenal, at Dover, N. J., shall be operated on a basis of not less than one-half of its full capacity during each calendar year."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HAY. I think it is subject to the same point of order as the previous amendment.

Mr. GOOD. If any limitation can be placed on this appropriation at all in regard to powder, it is included in the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk. That is clearly a limitation that not a penny of this appropriation can be expended unless there is the happening of that contingency.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this may be fairly held as a mere limitation.

Mr. HAY. I call for a vote on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the Chair was in doubt.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 31.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of no quorum. I do not intend that this Powder Trust shall get in its work of this nature, if I can avoid it.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently there is no quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask if the vote is on the question of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote is now simply on the ascertainment of the number of Members present, and not on the amendment.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Adair	Fornes	Legare	Rodenberg
Akin, N. Y.	Francis	Lindsay	Rucker, Mo.

The committee rose; and Mr. SISSON having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SAUNDERS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having found itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, whereupon 250 Members, a quorum, had answered to their names, and he reported the list of absentees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reports that that committee, having found itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, whereupon 250 Members, a quorum, answered to their names, and he reports the names of the absentees. The Clerk will note the names of the absentees in the RECORD. The committee will resume its sitting.

The committee resumed its sitting, with Mr. SAUNDERS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] asks unanimous consent to address the committee for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which has just been reported applies as properly, or perhaps more properly, to the fortification bill, wherein appropriations are made for the Picatinny Arsenal. I did not know at the time I offered the amendment that there was not a complete understanding by Members on the other side of the House to the effect that this amendment would be accepted by the committee. I was under the impression that there was such an understanding and that it would be accepted, and my impression was that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] had overlooked offering the amendment.

I am more concerned with regard to the adoption of the proposition of the Government manufacturing the larger part of its powder than I am that this particular amendment to this particular bill shall prevail. The provision contained in the fortification bill is the same as I have offered in this amendment with regard to the amount of powder that the Government shall manufacture, and inasmuch as that bill has been unanimously reported to the House and this item has not been thoroughly discussed, I desire to ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Automatic rifles: For the purchase, manufacture, and test of automatic rifles, including their sights and equipments, to be available until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, $150,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out that paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ammunition for field artillery for Organized Militia: For procuring reserve ammunition for field artillery for the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, $500,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to take the place of the last item just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send the amendment to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 44, strike out all of lines 3, 4, 5, and 6, which read as follows: "Ammunition for field artillery for Organized Militia: For procuring reserve ammunition for field artillery for the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, $500,000," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Ammunition for field artillery for Organized Militia: For procuring reserve ammunition for field artillery for the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, $500,000; the funds to be immediately available and to remain available until the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915."

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. HAY. I will state to the gentleman that the Acting Chief of Ordnance sent that amendment to me, with the explanation that in order to assemble the various materials for the manufacture of this ammunition it was necessary to have this appropriation available as soon as possible, in order to begin the manufacture at the beginning of the fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. What is the object in having it available until the end of the fiscal year 1915?

Mr. HAY. For the same reason.

Mr. MANN. That is not made in another powder factory, is it?

Mr. HAY. As I understand it, the cases in which this ammunition is included can be manufactured more cheaply outside, but they can not be assembled within the fiscal year. The ammunition is not the same as that for small arms. It is an ammunition that takes time to manufacture, and in order to assemble the parts of it it is important that contracts should run from one year to another.

Mr. MANN. Is that done as to ammunition in any other case?

Mr. HAY. Not in this bill. I do not know how it is in the fortification bill. This is the only ammunition in this bill for Field Artillery or for any other kind of Artillery. As I understand it, the Ordnance Department finds it necessary to continue the manufacture from year to year and to run from one year to another, and it will be much cheaper and better to do it in that way.

Mr. MANN. What I want to get at, if possible, is whether it is proposed to differentiate this from other appropriations for ammunition.

Mr. HAY. Only this kind of ammunition. As I say, there is no other ammunition appropriated for in this bill for Artillery except this. All the other ammunition carried in this bill is for small arms.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia will send the amendment to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new paragraph at the end of the bill the following:

"The sum of $13,913.25, a part of the sum of $200,000 appropriated by the act of March 3, 1909, for automatic rifles and set aside by the Ordnance Department for payment of royalties, is hereby made available for the payment of such royalties on automatic rifles completed during the fiscal year 1912: Provided, That hereafter appropriations made by the Ordnance Department shall be available for the payment of royalties on royalty contracts made during the availability of such appropriaton."

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved.

Mr. HAY. I will state to the gentleman that this is an estimate sent down by the Secretary of War to the Secretary of the Treasury to meet a decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury that all royalties must be paid from appropriations available at the time of completion of the article on which the royalty is due. I propose to amend that amendment by striking out the proviso that provides that "hereafter all royalties," and so forth, so that it will only apply to that one particular case.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that modification will be made.

There was no objection.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that where in the bill in the various amounts there are two ciphers after the period they may be stricken out, as I understand it causes confusion and some trouble about having the bill enrolled.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman means that where there are two ciphers in the place of cents that they go out of the bill?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I think that is a wise thing to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the minor correction to which he refers shall be made. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following, which I send to the Clerk's desk, as an independent section to follow the end of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new section at the end of the bill the following:

"The Secretary of War, in his discretion, may loan or grant the temporary use of tents and other camp equipage belonging to the United States to any organization of the Grand Army of the Republic and to the Confederate Veterans: Provided, That no cost or expense shall accrue to the United States on account of said loan or temporary use of said tents, equipage," etc.

Mr. MANN. Reserving a point of order, may I ask the gentleman, Does this have in contemplation the meeting at Gettysburg?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. It has in contemplation the meeting of the Confederate Veterans and the Grand Army of the Republic and the Army of the Cumberland at Chickamauga primarily, but it is drawn so as to give the use of the tents and equipage at Gettysburg or anywhere else.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will confine it to Chickamauga, I have no objection; but my recollection is that we appropriated money last year for the meeting at Gettysburg providing for this same thing. Under the gentleman's amendment that money could not be expended.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. This does not call for the expenditure of any money.

Mr. MANN. No; but we have appropriated money for the purpose of furnishing these things both to the Union and the Confederate soldiers at the meeting at Gettysburg. The gentleman's amendment provides for the use of these articles without any expense to the Government, and that would forbid the expenditure of money which we have appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I did not know about anything of that sort and have no disposition to do anything of that kind. In order to avoid that trouble I will ask to modify my amendment by making it apply only to Chattanooga and Chickamauga Park during the year 1913.

Mr. MANN. That is for the one occasion?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. KENDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. KENDALL. Would not the terms of this amendment require both the Grand Army and the Confederate Veterans to apply?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I think not; but if the gentleman thinks so the word "and" may be stricken out and the word "or" put in its place.

Mr. MANN. That would not do, for then only one could get it.

Mr. KENDALL. That is not the purpose of the gentleman from Tennessee. He wants to make them available to both the Grand Army and the Confederate Veterans. By using the word "and" it might be interpreted that only one could get it.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not think so, because it does not say jointly, and I do not think it would be so construed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment changed by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War, in his discretion, may loan or grant for temporary use at Chattanooga and at Chickamauga and Chattanooga Park for the year 1913, tents and other equipage belonging to the United States, etc.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 27941) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the amendment which was adopted at the end of line 17, page 24, after the figures "$7,634,553," which reads as follows:

Provided, That no part of this or any other appropriation shall be expended in payment for heat and light for quarters of officers who receive commutation of quarters.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the other amendments will be voted on in gross.

The question is on agreeing to the amendments, except that upon which a separate vote is demanded.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment which the Clerk has reported and on which the gentleman from New York demands a separate vote.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LEVY) there were—ayes 49, nays 63.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the amendment, on which the gentleman from New York demands the separate vote.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 84, nays 142, answered "present" 10, not voting 147, as follows:

YEAS—84.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, ordered printed, and referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the Thirteenth Annual Report of the Philippine Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1912, together with the reports of the governor general and the secretaries of the four executive departments of the Philippine Government for the same period.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 21, 1913.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 26680, for the purpose of disagreeing to the Senate amendments and asking for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the bill H. R. 26680. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 26680) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to disagree to all the Senate amendments and asks for a conference.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have a separate vote on amendments Nos. 31 and 68.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks for a separate vote on amendment No. 31 and amendment No. 68. The Clerk will report amendment No. 31.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 31. Page 15, line 4, strike out "$2,500" and insert "$3,000."

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] rise?

Mr. FOSTER. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he did not want to include the three items—31, 32, and 33?

Mr. MANN. Well, I think if the House would express its opinion on one, that would be a guide to the conferees.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment again, there was so much uproar in the House.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, is this a proposition for unanimous consent? Is this a proceeding by unanimous consent, or how is it?

The SPEAKER. Ordinarily this would have to go to the committee, but the gentleman from South Carolina asked unanimous consent to consider it in the House.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it to disagree to all the amendments?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asked to disagree to all the amendments, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asked for a separate vote on two.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is done by unanimous consent, too?

The SPEAKER. The whole thing is done by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Was the request of the gentleman from South Carolina for unanimous consent put to the House?

The SPEAKER. It never was.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object for the purpose of making an inquiry. Is the amendment just reported the amendment where, in conference, an increase of salary has been allowed to certain employees on the House side that was not considered in the House?

Mr. MANN. The amendment on which I asked for a separate vote was one of the amendments inserted by the Senate for employees. I asked for a separate vote on one of these amendments, for an additional employee to the Committee on the Judiciary, as a guide to the conferees, thinking that one vote would be sufficient.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to considering this motion in the House as in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, if I can proceed somewhat further I can announce whether I object or do not object. I would like to inquire as to the items in order that the Members may understand what is involved in expressing themselves for or against the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who makes it. I would like to know if that is on an amendment on this bill put in by the Senate, increasing the salary of a certain clerk to one of the committees of the House, namely, the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. MANN. That is correct.

Mr. RODDENBERY. And the gentleman is now desiring to get an expression of the House before it goes to conference on that amendment?

Mr. MANN. That is correct.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The House never having expressed itself upon that point?

Mr. MANN. That is right.

Mr. GARNER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. If unanimous consent is given as requested by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], will it be subject to discussion on this separate vote suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]?

Mr. MANN. It will, unless the House orders the previous question.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, that is the difficulty. I have no disposition to interfere with an expression of the House, but to call up an amendment coming from the Senate and have the House express itself on it when it has never been considered or discussed in the House, it seems to me a rather dangerous procedure.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] will permit. We are about having a separate vote on that now. If it goes to conference without it the House may never have an opportunity to express its opinion on it. That is the reason I ask a separate vote.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I will ask the gentleman if no objection is filed and if the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] or another gentleman moves the previous question, where we will stand?

Mr. MANN. If the House orders the previous question, of course it would be decided without debate, but I take it that that course will not be pursued.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOWLER. If there should be an objection to the consideration of the motion by the gentleman from South Carolina, would this bill not be subject to a point of order, and be required to be sent to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It would go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman misunderstands. This amendment would not be subject to a point of order in the present condition if in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The only thing that can be done is to vote on the amendments that they be considered in the House or in the committee. This is the more expeditious way of ascertaining the sentiment of the House in regard to these matters.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] that if the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] prevails, this will be open for debate and discussion, the same as any other proposition, unless some gentleman moves the previous question.

Mr. FOWLER. If unanimous consent should not be granted then, under Rule XX, would not this bill be referred to the committee and reported back with these amendments to be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. If objection is made to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina for unanimous consent to consider this in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, then it goes, in the first instance, to the Committee on Appropriations, and then, when it gets back to the House, inasmuch as it involves the appropriation of money, it would have to be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union unless somebody gets permission to consider it in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to object, but I give notice that when the Senate adopts something like 200 or 300 amendments hereafter I shall object, unless there is an opportunity given for a consideration of those amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not know just exactly how this matter got in, or why the Senate should assume authority over House employees. This matter ought to have been considered in the Committee on Appropriations originally. Now, I would like to know from the chairman of the committee who has this bill in charge how much it would delay the passage of this bill to let it go back to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I can not answer that question, Mr. Speaker. I think this House is fairly full now, and it can vote on this proposition now as well as it can after bringing the bill back from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SISSON. And the gentleman's proposition is to disagree to all the Senate amendments except this one?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I asked to disagree to all the Senate amendments. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] wants a separate vote on this particular amendment as an instruction to the House conferees not to agree to it, whatever else they may do.

Mr. SISSON. I have no objection to that course.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection? It may be that the gentleman believes that after the bill is reported from the Committee on Appropriations and these items are taken up in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union these increases are subject to a point of order.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] has settled this controversy by objecting.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Having found out the attitude of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] on this particular question, Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman misunderstands what I am saying.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I do not fully understand what the gentleman has been saying, except that I understand that the gentleman wants the motion submitted, and because this had been put on in the Senate without reference to the House I object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will withhold his objection until I make a statement, I shall be glad.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Yes; I withhold the objection.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. EDWARDS] objects, and the bill is referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. SPARKMAN rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] is recognized.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 28180) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; and, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to an hour and a half, one half to be controlled by myself and the other half by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LAWRENCE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 28180, the river and harbor bill; and, pending that, he asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to an hour and a half. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Florida.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 28180, the river and harbor bill, with Mr. MOON of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the river and harbor bill, of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 28180) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. SPARKMAN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SPARKMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask if I have any time left; and if so, how much?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has eight minutes left.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield those eight minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP].

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman who is at the head of the minority how much of his time I may have? If I should have only eight minutes or a shorter time now, I would rather defer my remarks until later on.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I will state to the gentleman that I do not propose to occupy any time myself in general debate, but I am going to yield just a moment to the gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], and then I had planned to yield all the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP], which would give the gentleman from Ohio practically three-quarters of an hour out of my time.

Mr. SHARP. If the gentleman from California wishes to follow at this time, I will yield to him.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will now yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise simply to ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD articles by two British authorities, dealing with the controverted sections of the Panama Canal bill; articles taken from the Law Magazine and Review, a quarterly review on jurisprudence, published in London.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] asks unanimous consent to place in the RECORD certain articles named by him. Is there objection to his request?

There was no objection.

[The articles referred to are printed in the Appendix.]

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LAWRENCE].

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] is recognized for one minute.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask permission to print in the RECORD an article written by Hon. BENJAMIN G. HUMPHREYS, my colleague from Mississippi, entitled "A glance at the richest valley in the world," published in the National Waterways Magazine.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the article named by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the article referred to:

A GLANCE AT THE RICHEST VALLEY IN THE WORLD.

[By BENJAMIN G. HUMPHREYS, M. C.]

[Overflowing abundance and overwhelming disaster, prosperity and poverty, life and death, tragedy and humor are strangely mingled in this brief article. The problem is both local and national, and it is one for which a solution must be found, if it be not already known. Congressman HUMPHREYS presents a limited panorama of the Mississippi Valley. He is an entertaining writer and a speaker of great force. What he says is well worth attention. He has represented the third Mississippi district since 1903.—Editor.]

Rollins, the great historian, says that it is glory enough for Philip of Macedon that he be known in history as the "father of Alexander the Great." In like spirit, may not the Mississippi River claim recognition among the rivers of the earth when it can point to the Ohio and Missouri as its tributaries?

Consider one of these—the Ohio, for instance. There are only a few rivers on this earth which actually float a tonnage as large as the Ohio River, and fewer still which serve the commercial needs of so rich and prosperous a valley.

The commission appointed a few years ago to investigate the reservoirs on the tributaries above Pittsburgh, known as the Pittsburgh Flood Commission, stated rather casually in their report that the flood of 1907 destroyed property in the Ohio River Valley alone which they estimated at $100,000,000. Think of a single valley, a valley on one of our tributary streams, where one flood destroys $100,000,000 in property values, with really no serious or permanent interference with the industrial development or the commercial activities of the people.

When the Iron Chancellor demanded as the price of peace at the end of the Franco-Prussian War that France should pay a war indemnity of a billion dollars all the world stood aghast at what was believed to be the deathblow to that great nation. To-day a spring flood on the Ohio River lays one-tenth that sum as tribute upon the people of this single valley, and not a wheel stops turning nor a furnace fire dies. There were only a limited number of our people outside that valley who knew at the time what this flood was up to, and they forgot about it as soon as the headline artist turned his attention to another theme.

We are spending, or about to spend, some $60,000,000 to secure a 9-foot depth all the way from Pittsburgh to Cairo in order that the millions of tons of raw material and manufactures originating in this valley may find reasonable transportation facilities to the markets. The tonnage which originates on the Ohio River is so great that an exact statement of its total is sure to challenge belief. The tonnage created in the Pittsburgh district alone exceeds the sum originating at any other three places in the world combined.

It will require $60,000,000 to complete the improvement of the Ohio River from Pittsburgh to Cairo, a distance of a thousand miles. The Manchester Ship Canal in England, which cost $75,000,000, is only 35 miles long, and its annual commerce is less than 3,000,000 tons. The Clyde was only 15 inches deep, but at the cost of $70,000,000 it was deepened so as to admit ships from the sea, and Glasgow became the second port of Europe.

Pittsburgh alone originates more tonnage than Manchester and Glasgow combined, and the improvement of the Ohio River will help not only Pittsburgh, but will give a thousand miles of navigation through one of the world's busiest valleys. Last year the tonnage of the Ohio River was about 11,000,000, about five times greater than the tonnage of the Manchester Canal.

A few years ago I saw one boat come out of the Ohio, when the rains had given sufficient depth for temporary navigation, towing 58,000 tons of coal. It would have required 50 locomotives, pulling 1,900 cars, to have hauled that load.

No wonder the people of that valley are impatient for the great work of improving this river to be pushed with all possible speed to completion.

MR. HILL AND HIS CLOCK.

Mr. J. J. Hill, the great railroad magnate, and withal a most interesting and farseeing statesman, declared some years ago that the "clock had struck" for the upper Mississippi, by which term we designate that reach of the river above the mouth of the Missouri. Congress refused to accept this diagnosis—or maybe I should say prognosis. At any rate we had not heard the clock strike, and as so many interests were to be affected thereby we demanded strict proof.

To take issue with Mr. Hill on the efficiency of any transportation facility requires some assurance, and so Congress set about to investigate the question critically before adopting the more ambitious project then pending for the improvement of the river. Fortunately the proof seemed to be ample and convincing, and the upper Mississippi is now under improvement for a 6-foot channel.

How was Congress led to this conclusion? Was it proof of politics? Was it to build up commerce or build up fences? Permit me to say this by way of preamble, or prelude, or prologue, as you prefer:

I have served on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for 10 years, under Republican and Democratic rule, and I have never seen that committee include any river or harbor project in their bill as a matter of political favoritism or expediency or as the result of legislative logrolling. Every project must be approved and recommended by the Board of Engineers of the United States Army before the committee will pass it. The committee must be satisfied that the project is worth the outlay. There is but one way to persuade their will in such matters, and that is to convince their judgment. And now, having tossed this bouquet to my colleagues of this really great committee, let me proceed.

Some years ago I heard the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota, ex-Gov. Lind, on the floor of the House, ask his colleague, Mr. DAVIS, "Where will your farmer neighbors and mine land when 'Pillsbury's Best' has ceased to stand for what it now stands for?" And it was agreed that whatever might seriously impair the world market for "Pillsbury's Best" would work disaster to the wheat farmers of Minnesota. All of which is preliminary to the suggestion that this Pillsbury must evidently be a man of some consequence, as we all, in fact, know him to have been. In testifying before the special committee which was considering the Mississippi River Mr. Pillsbury said this—and a good many others said the same thing and many other things in addition, but for a "short story" this must suffice:

"We consider the presence of the Mississippi River and the fact that it is kept in a navigable condition the great regulator of railroad rates; that the benefits should not be measured by the tonnage as much as by the possibilities of sending the freight by water.

"The amount of flour shipped out of Minneapolis is something enormous—13,000,000 barrels. A great deal of this would go by the Mississippi River unless the railroads maintained the cheapest rate known in the country almost.

"Mr. NELSON. And the Mississippi being there keeps the rates down?

"Mr. PILLSBURY. The fact of the Mississippi being there prevents them from making any combination to maintain excessive rates. The necessity is not so much the amount carried by the steamers as the amount that can be carried."

Railroad rates from the Atlantic seaboard to the Dakotas and the extreme Northwest are made on combinations through St. Paul; that is, the rate to St. Paul plus the rate thence west. The rate to and from St. Paul, however, is materially lowered by reason of the competition by water routes from Duluth through the Lakes. And so it is that the Lakes from Duluth east to the ocean and the river from St. Paul south to the Gulf regulate railroad rates to cities and shippers many hundred miles from either.

HOW THE DEVIL SHOWED MISSOURI.

No river in the world has such a tributary as the Missouri. Winding for 2,400 miles through the greatest granary in the world, draining some dozen States where corn and wheat, hog and hominy enough are produced to fatten the rest of us, it is in many respects the most useful and neglected river of the continent. Sargent Prentiss, the great Whig orator, once declared in a burst of partisanship that when the Almighty created the Mississippi River and the Democratic Party He devoted them both to the service of the devil, and he admitted, facetiously, "that both had kept the faith."

However some of us may resent this thrust at the Democratic Party, the truth is that the Missouri River, which is in fact the Mississippi, has been permitted to so disport itself as to justify no complaint from the Prince of Darkness. It has literally wandered about over the face of the earth like the scriptural lion, seeking whom it might devour.

If you look at the map you will see how the Mississippi has brought down acres and acres of soil, which by successive deposits has gradually encroached upon the sea until many miles of now beautiful farms are stretched along its lower reaches. Engineers tell us that the amount of sediment borne by the Mississippi at its mouth is exactly equal to the amount carried by the Missouri at its mouth, and this is just another way of saying that all the rich plantations along the river below New Orleans and all those vast swamps of cypress and jungle were caved into the Missouri River in the years gone by and transported to the sea.

What this toll has cost the farmers of Iowa and Nebraska and their neighbors can not be measured, but it has been tremendous. Mr. S. Waters Fox, a civil engineer, who for 25 years was employed by the Government on the Missouri River work, places it at 10,490 acres annually in the 807 miles from its mouth to Sioux City.

Still it is argued that this isn't any of Uncle Sam's business at last. But it is. Listen to this: There is but one way to improve the Missouri for navigation—only one way. All of the engineers are agreed on that. Revet the banks, and so prevent further caving. What will this cost? Twenty millions from the mouth to Kansas City. Is the game worth the candle?

HOW MUCH IS $15,000,000,000?

This is a great valley, this Mississippi Valley. There is nothing like it upon the earth. It equals in area the combined areas of Austria, Germany, Holland, France, Italy, Portugal, Spain, Norway, and Great Britain. The annual value of its manufactures had in 1910 reached the enormous total of seven and a half billion dollars.

Too much to comprehend. We can not take in just what that means. Let us speak in different terms. What is seven and a half billion dollars? It would equal the total appropriations for the War and Navy Departments from 1861 to 1865 plus the appropriations for these departments in 1898 and 1899, the period of the Spanish War, plus the appropriations which have been made for all the rivers and all the harbors from the beginning of the Government to date, plus the cost of the Panama Canal, and even then we would have a balance remaining large enough to pay off the national debt. This is what seven and a half billion dollars amounts to.

But in addition to this, this valley produces 85 per cent of the corn raised in the United States, 75 per cent of the wheat, 70 per cent of the live stock, 70 per cent of the cotton, 70 per cent of the iron ore, 70 per cent of the petroleum, 50 per cent of the copper, 50 per cent of the lumber, 50 per cent of the coal, and has 70 per cent of the farm areas and farm values of this country. The total value of all the products of this valley is $15,000,000,000 annually.

Every pound of this $15,000,000,000 worth of products is affected by the transportation facilities at hand. There are 150,000 miles of railroads in this valley which are trying to transport these products and bring into the valley whatever is needed from the rest of the world in exchange. Can they do it? No; they can not; but suppose they could, suppose they do.

Mr. H. G. Wilson, for many years an official in the freight traffic department of the Kansas City, Fort Scott & Memphis Railroad, is recognized as one of our most efficient authorities on the subject of transportation rates. In an address before the Rivers and Harbors Committee of Congress two years ago he stated that railroad rates from the territory known as "seaboard territory" (lying east of Pittsburgh and Buffalo) to points as far west as Galena, Kans., and Denver, Colo., were all affected by the water transportation of the Mississippi River, and that 5,000,000 tons of traffic across Missouri points into the Southwest were materially lowered by the potential competition furnished by the physical presence of the Missouri River.

After a good deal of cross-questioning on all related subjects, the late Senator Frye, then chairman of the Commerce Committee, brought Mr. Wilson directly to the point:

"The CHAIRMAN. Well, now, what about the Missouri River? How is that going to help you out? What do you want done about that?

"Mr. WILSON. As far as the commercial situation is concerned, a transportation line operated on the Missouri River, a waterway carrier being effective, having sufficient capacity to carry—and, in fact, carrying—a sufficient quantity of tonnage to make that tonnage noticeable to the rail carriers, will exert an influence on the rail lines, forcing them to meet the competition so established, which will result in a lowering of the freight rates, not only to and from Kansas City and the other southwestern Missouri River points but to and from all of the trade territories in the Southwest—Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Denver (Colo.), New Mexico, Arizona, and Nebraska. All of this territory, all of these States, will be benefited by a reduction in the freight rates."

I believe he answered the question.

THE FATHER OF WATERS AND THE PASSOVER.

From Cairo south the Mississippi traverses the most fertile valley in the world. I use the word "traverses" advisedly. Mr. Webster says traverse means "to cross, to pass over," and that is what this big river does. Last spring it "passed over" some 14,000 square miles of the most productive lands in the world. At one time during this passover the Secretary of War was furnishing food and shelter to 161,000 of our citizens who had been made homeless and helpless by the flood. How many millions of property values were lost and destroyed nobody knows, and nobody ever will know.

But the loss can not be measured that way. There were many lives lost, many homes destroyed, many hopes turned to despair. If it were not for its marvelously productive soil, which renders its recuperative powers therefore beyond compare, this valley would be abandoned to the wilderness and its denizens. But it is blessed with a gentle climate; the rains fall in season and the sunshine warms into fruitage its abundant crops of corn and cane and whitens its fields of cotton into waving beauty.

There are 26,000 square miles of these lowlands, which, expressed in different terms, means an area larger than Maryland, Delaware, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts combined. All of the lower Mississippi is not lowland, subject to overflow, not by any means. There are broad acres of upland and towns and cities, too, high above such danger. Memphis, Vicksburg, Natchez, Baton Rouge are far beyond the reach of the floods; but in this I speak only of the lowlands.

It would be a foolish thing to provide 9 feet in the Ohio and 6 feet in the upper Mississippi and 12 feet in the Missouri unless we are to secure and maintain a navigable depth in the Mississippi below their confluence. The present adopted project is for 9 feet over the bars, but there are many who are insisting upon "14 feet through the valley." There is but one way to get either. Secure the banks against erosion and confine the waters at all seasons to the channel.

When Gen. Suter, now retired, was a lieutenant colonel in the Engineer Corps of the Army he was set to work on this great problem, and after long and diligent study and experiment he reported as far back as 1890 that the river could not be improved without levees. I quote the record:

"Senator GIBSON. You stated a moment ago, in reply to a question by the chairman, that if you were improving the Mississippi River, even if it were running through a wilderness, if the country through which it ran were not peopled, you would still build levees on the banks?

"Lieut. Col. SUTER. Yes, sir.

"Senator GIBSON. Why do you hold that opinion?

"Lieut. Col. SUTER. Because I consider that the improvement of the stream for navigable purposes without it is impossible."

But it does not run through a wilderness. The riparian owners of the lower valley have been busy conjuring up different systems of taxation whereby money enough could be taken from their fields to build these levees high enough and strong enough to prevent further disaster from recurring overflows. In this way they have raised and put into these levees some sixty-odd million dollars since the close of the Civil War, which left the old levee system totally destroyed. But all through the upper valley there has been a most rapidly advancing civilization. The peoples of all the world have been attracted there, and the barren prairies and the trackless forests have both been subdued by the energies of man and brought under productive cultivation.

Under the stimulus of scientific study and intelligent experiment the drainage of vast areas has been undertaken. The bends have been cut off in the natural channels, main canals have been dug, the farms undertiled, and now when the rain falls instead of lagging superfluous in innumerable slashes and undrained swamps serving as natural reservoirs, it rushes into the tributaries and down the great river, bringing destruction to the farmers of the lower valley. The greatest of all floods, for instance, was the one just passed, 1912. Mr. Moore, Chief of the Weather Bureau at Washington, says that this flood was caused by "six rainstorms in the upper valley, which fell between March 10 and April 2, a period of three weeks."

These floods, thus precipitated upon the lower valley, wash away the banks, tumble the levees into the river, and verify all that Prentiss said about the river.

Col. Leach, of the Engineer Corps of the Army, said before the Senate committee:

"I may say generally with regard to the history of the levee system that over three-fourths, probably, of the entire sum of money expended by the States in the last 10 or 15 years in the construction of levees would have been saved if the United States had prevented the banks from caving."

Of course the planter in the lower valley does not wish to see the farmer in the upper valley injured by the surplus water which can be carried off by drainage, nor does the farmer in the upper valley at all relish the idea of destroying his brother farther down the river by turning this surplus water upon him too precipitately. What they both most earnestly desire is that out of the common Treasury of all the people the Congress shall appropriate money enough to so improve the river, which is the Nation's drainage ditch, that this surplus water may pass out to sea between permanent leveed banks.

To complete the levee system so as to bring it up to the grade and section believed to be strong enough to do this will require about $35,000,000. There are just about 35,000,000 people in the whole valley, and they would be very willing to contribute their per capita, 35 cents annually for the next three years, and that would settle it.

There are 15,000 miles of tributaries of this great stream, but I have touched only on those which are most prominent now in the public mind, leaving 10,000 miles of the Arkansas, the Red, the Yazoo, the White, and others of less tonnage and national concern.

I fear I have already overstepped the reasonable limitations of a short story. For this I must plead as excuse a lack of time to bring this article to a shorter measure.

Senator Morgan, of Alabama, was once asked how long he could speak on a certain subject. "If I had time to thoroughly digest the subject and prepare my address, I think I could talk for three days," he replied.

"But if you had no such time for preparation how long could you speak?

"Oh, indefinitely."

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE].

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address delivered by Miss Mildred Lewis Rutherford, historian general of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, entitled "History relating to the War between the States."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the article mentioned by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[The address referred to is printed in the Appendix.]

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I wish first to express my appreciation of the courtesy which has been so generously extended to me by both the gentlemen representing the majority and minority of this committee in yielding so much of the time to me. Although taking up one-half of the whole time allotted for general debate may seem as though it was an unwarranted consumption of the time of the House considering the need of expedition; yet if the grant of time that has been given to me is unfortunate in a personal sense, still the subject on which I wish to speak is worthy, not only of the most considerate attention of Members, but of many hours of the time of this House. Indeed this is one of the most important of all the appropriation bills, as the chairman of the committee has taken occasion to say, involving each year one of the largest items of our public expense.

I listened with much interest to the manly apology—I will put it in that way, although perhaps it does not deserve that name and was not so intended—of the worthy gentleman who is the chairman of this committee [Mr. SPARKMAN]. I can assure him that in so far as the precedent for the action of his committee, or the motives governing that action in reporting out the bill, comprehensive and large as it is, are concerned, no apology is needed. But if I may be permitted to read between the lines of his comments upon the features of this bill, I would say, rather, that the reason which prompted that apology, if I may again use that expression, comes from the fact that there is a generally recognized impression among the people at large that for some reason or other these appropriations are altogether too large for the benefits received, and that the few are getting special favors who ought to reimburse the Government therefor. And it is upon that phase of this subject that I wish to address my remarks this afternoon.

Of all subjects concerning which Congress has to deal in a legislative way, it seems to me that there is none more important than that of taxation and all that it involves. The very word itself means a contribution from the people, and as such a burden on them. Too often it also means, in a correlative sense, the development of an extravagance and a wastefulness of their money. Perhaps no better example could be given of a bill which, especially as it is regarded among the large class of our people who are not directly benefited thereby, comes in for more criticism at its annual appearance upon this floor than the rivers and harbors bill, which, together with its companion, the public-buildings bill, are supposed to be typical of "pork-barrel" legislation.

While what I shall say will have to do necessarily with several phases of the rivers and harbors legislation, yet I shall direct my remarks in the main to its consideration as it involves not only the element of taxation, but the maintenance of a special privilege more in the negative sense from exemption of a just imposition of a tollage system than from any positive action, which, it seems to me, has come to be indefensible. If there has been one complaint emphasized above another, which has been continuously voiced by public sentiment during the past few years, it has been that which has been directed against the so-called special-privilege legislation. It is obvious that such advantages may come from exempting from a just proportionate share of the burden of taxation quite as well as from the positive act granting such privileges to the few as against the many.

At different times, finding the urgent necessity of raising revenue to meet the constantly increasing burden of taxation upon our people, this method and that method have been resorted to in order to raise the revenues to equal these gigantic sums necessary to pay the bills of our billion-dollar Congresses. We have had excise bills, we have had personal income-tax bills amending the Constitution therefor, we have had corporation-tax bills, and we have had for many years that which like the poor we have always with us, the high tariff rates rendered absolutely necessary because of the exigencies presented in running the Government if we would keep our credit good.

We are all familiar with some of the definitions of taxation. I am not going into an abstruse consideration of these definitions as they concern political economy, but if I may take the time, I do want to quote briefly from the words of Mr. Justice Miller in the case of Loan Association v. Topeka, reported in Twentieth Wallace, page 655. Speaking of this power of taxation, he says:

> Of all the powers conferred upon the Government that of taxation is most liable to abuse. Given a purpose or object for which taxation may be lawfully used and the extent of its exercise is in its very nature unlimited. * * * The power to tax is therefore the strongest, the most pervading of all the powers of government, reaching directly or indirectly to all classes of the people. It was said by Chief Justice Marshall, in the case of McCullough v. the State of Maryland, that the power to tax is the power to destroy. * * * This power can as readily be employed against one class of individuals and in favor of another, so as to ruin the one class and give unlimited wealth and prosperity to the other, if there is any implied limitation of the uses for which the power may be exercised.
> To lay with one hand the power of the Government on the property of the citizen and with the other to bestow it upon favored individuals to aid private enterprises and build up private fortunes is none the less a robbery because it is done under the forms of law and is called taxation. This is not legislation; it is a decree under legislative forms.

That is the definition of the power of taxation by a former learned judge of the Supreme Court of the United States.

We are familiar with the four maxims laid down by Adam Smith, the noted political economist of England, and it is a coincidence that in the year of the declaration of our national independence, away back in 1776, he gave expression in his Wealth of Nations to these rules governing this power of taxation. The first is the one that is most fundamentally important, and of all the others is most commonly violated:

> The subjects of every state ought to contribute to the support of the government as nearly as possible in proportion to their respective abilities; that is, in proportion to the revenue which they respectively enjoy under the protection of the state. In the observation or neglect of this maxim consists what is called the equality or inequality of taxation.

Thus wrote Adam Smith nearly a century and a half ago.

That shall be the text of the remarks which I wish to make this afternoon, and it concerns a method of taxation, if I may call it such, which, while a radical innovation in this country as applied to our river and harbor legislation, is quite common in other commercial countries, especially in Europe.

I refer in so many words to the advisability now, if not even the necessity, if we are to keep on with the widespread Government improvements of our rivers and harbors, of taxing the special beneficiaries of these indulgences from the Government according to the measure in which they receive them. There is no more patent reform needed and no more legitimate source of revenue than the levying of what may be called tonnage tolls upon what have been objects of our governmental paternalism since the very creation of the Government. I refer to the shipping interests which have been favored by our Government to an extent unparalleled by any other nation. Let me in other words epitomize my remarks in this single sentence—I would require those who are using our great national waterways for transportation purposes to pay into the Public Treasury a fair amount for the valuable privileges the Government is extending to them every year by the expenditure of many millions of dollars in the improvement of navigation.

Mr. MURRAY. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. SHARP. My time is very brief.

Mr. MURRAY. I do not care to interrupt the gentleman unless he wishes, but I had a question that occurred to me on occasions when similar suggestions have been made, that under such an arrangement would not the burden of this right be borne ultimately by the shippers and then by the consumers of the country, and that more than likely the consumers would be required to pay a greater proportion of the cost than they are now compelled to pay through Government taxation?

Mr. SHARP. I wish to say in answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts that I intend to come to that before I finish my remarks, and if I do not I ask the gentleman to interrupt me that I may answer him specifically.

Mr. MURRAY. I asked the gentleman that as a question and not as stating my opinion.

Mr. SHARP. The distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], who was justly given the credit by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, Mr. UNDERWOOD, at the last session, for being the author of the excise bill, called attention in his able discourse to the system by which personal property so largely escaped taxation in this country. He took occasion at that time to quote from the special tax commission appointed under the laws of the State of New York within the last six years. If there is anything that is enlightening upon this subject, it is certainly the conclusion of the statement made by the chairman of that commission, who was a former United States Senator, if I am not mistaken. He said that they had discovered that although there was only something like $800,000,000 of personal property upon the tax duplicate in the great State of New York, yet they had found, as a matter of fact, that there was actually an excess of 30 times that amount of personal property in that State; in other words, less than 3½ per cent of the personal property was taxed at all, and I presume that no considerable amount of that $25,000,000,000 had anything to do with franchises and intangible rights and privileges that many times, as we all know, approximate the real value of the taxable property itself. It is indeed, Mr. Chairman, one of these privileges, analogous in character, that our Government is extending every year to those who are the special beneficiaries under present-day river and harbor legislation.

To the merest tyro in the knowledge as to the manner in which taxes are levied a man's home and his visible personal property, tangible and real in their nature, are the first objects to be taxed. But it is the intangible, the unseen, mere rights or privileges, which go untaxed, that are often of really the most value and from which the greatest revenues are derived. Such property, if I may use that expression, of this intangible character very commonly comes from grants, either to individuals or to corporations, at almost no cost whatever. In many cases, in their exercise and use, preempted as they are by first possession of those holding such grants, they become exclusive monopolies, and it remains only in theory and not at all in possible practice that such rights and privileges are common and equally open to others.

Justice Bradley, in the case of the Transportation Co. against Parkersburg, in the One hundred and seventh United States, referring to a case brought up from West Virginia, used this language, which I think is exceedingly appropriate as outlining the authority which the United States Government possesses not only upon our navigable waters but to what extent it has been exercised:
